PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 29, 1920.

Rev. John Paul Tyler, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Father who art in heaven, as we enter upon the activities and labors of another day we look to Thee for guidance. Illuminate Thou, we pray, our minds with Thy wisdom and touch our hearts with Thy love, that with unselfish devotion to the cause of Thy righteousness in our world we may give ourselves to the tasks before us this day.

We beseech Thee for Thy grace upon our native land, upon our people. We pray for the nations of the world, that the day may soon come when the Governments of the peoples of the world shall be upon the shoulders of Him who is Immanuel. We pray for Thy blessing upon every Member of this body, upon the homes represented here, upon the loved ones. We pray for the President of our United States, and pray Thee that if it be Thy holy will he may soon be restored to perfect strength and health.

Guide us through this day, O Lord God of our fathers; keep us true to Thee and faithful unto the end; and when the labors of life shall cease grant us a joyous entrance into our Father's house of many mansions and crown our lives with Thine approval. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a certified copy of joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Oregon, ratifying the Susan B. Anthony amendment to the Constitution, extending the right of suffrage to women, which will be filed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill S. 3418, an act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the lading or unlading of vessels at night, the preliminary entry of vessels, and for other purposes," with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 7629. An act to amend the penal laws of the United States; and

H. R. 11309. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to fix compensation of certain laborers in the Customs Service.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a memorial, which will be inserted in the RECORD.

The memorial is as follows:

"The Presbyterian men of Greater Cincinnati emphasize, with all the faith that inspires them, their profound belief that what this world of ours needs to swing it back to sanity and service is greater study of the rules of the game as laid down in God's Official Guide. We commend to our servants, the honorable United States Senate and the House of Representatives, those Bible precepts which will help solve problems that have overwhelmed them for over a year, in the only way that they can be solved to the perpetual uplift and help of mankind and the glory of God, in whom the Nation has eternally pledged its trust."

Mr. McLEAN. I present resolutions adopted by the Connecticut Editorial Association in favor of the punishment and repression of those who incite treason and anarchy. I ask that the resolutions may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CONNECTICUT EDITORIAL ASSOCIATION,
Bristol, Conn., January 27, 1920.

Resolutions adopted at the meeting of the Connecticut Editorial Association held in New Haven on January 24, 1920.

Observing a nation torn by individual madness and organized anarchy, in which forces which neither regard the name nor know the spirit of democracy are seeking by all means in their power to make America's offering in the war a fruitless sacrifice and to undermine those foundations on which were built the principles we prize and the institutions we love, we members of the Connecticut Editorial Association and representatives of the press of Connecticut—

Resolve, That in our belief this Nation should take effectual action to repress and punish incitement to treason and anarchy. We hold free speech and a free press as dear and defend them as sedulously as ever since the day when the great founders of our Republic declared for them, but we protest that America never was and never should be a shelter for those who defy all government and recognize none. With charity for all who honestly misunderstand or are innocently misled, with malice toward none, we declare that there is no place nor mission in free America for those who deliberately despise its freedom and use its opportunity only as license to destroy democracy, and we urge that our Government resolutely continue the process of casting them forth.

We further advocate that against those who use the shelter of citizenship for the promotion of doctrines and the instigation of acts against American institutions existing laws be invoked. If these are not sufficient let new laws, reasonable and consistent with freedom of speech and the press, sufficiently defining and properly punishing sedition, be passed. To the enforcement of such laws we pledge our earnest support.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States, the governor of Connecticut, and to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and a copy be placed on file in the State library.

Correct—attest: ARTHUR S. BARNES,
Secretary.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a petition signed by a number of citizens of Peoria, Ill., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PEORIA, ILL., January 26, 1920.

Hon. L. Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Inasmuch as the Senate and Congress are being besieged with requests that the United States Grain Corporation extend credit of $150,000,000 more to Europe so that more of our wheat and food supplies may be purchased abroad, we, the undersigned citizens of Peoria, Ill., believe that the time has come that immediate action be taken by the United States Senate and Congress to give some relief and protection to our own citizens of this country.

While we are all sympathetic with the poor and starving people of Europe, we also believe that it is about time that the people of all Europe go back to work, that they may be able to support themselves and desist from this constant warfare that has been going on ever since the armistice was signed.

We therefore firmly believe that no more extension of credit should be given to Europe and that all exports of foodstuffs should be curtailed until such time as our own prices are back to normal and the American dollar has a purchasing power of at least 50 per cent of its prewar value.

Our people patiently suffered in silence and made all necessary sacrifices that our country might be victorious, while our big financial and commercial institutions were making millions. Therefore we are of the opinion that the time has come that our own citizens be protected and kept from privation, suffering, and want, and to this end we seek your cooperation.

W. J. Murray, secretary department of parks, 1618 Madison Avenue; L. D. Jeffries, city engineer, 1609 North Perry Avenue; J. J. Crowder, city comptroller, 510 Fifth Avenue; Anthony Kiefer, assistant comptroller, 310 Third Avenue; M. E. Moran, city clerk, 1042 Greenlawn; O. J. Dolan, treasurer Illinois Valley Trust Co., 1216 North Madison Avenue; W. W. Rhoades, chief of police, 1308 North Jefferson Avenue; D. B. Pearce, city treasurer, city hall; Victor Michel, police magistrate, city hall; Harry Cleary, city attorney, city hall; J. A. Schneider, commissioner of building; John A. Keeley, assistant chief, fire department; E. H. Donahoe, plumbing inspector, city hall; S. A. Oakley, editor Peoria Star, Peoria, Ill.; E. N. Woodruff, mayor, Peoria, Ill.

Mr. CURTIS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Seneca, Kans., remonstrating against compulsory military training, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of System Federation, No. 97, Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway, of Topeka, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to extend Government control of railroads for two years, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Kansas Engineering Society, of Topeka, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation for the establishment of a department of public works, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented petitions of Dick Yates Post, No. 50, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Eureka; of Kit Carson Post, No. 20, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Lyons; of John Brown Post, No. 44, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Belleville; of T. E. G. Ransom Post, No. 198, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Oberlin; of James Shields Post, No. 57, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Wellington; of Garfield Post, No. 25, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Wichita; of Mound Valley Post, No. 139, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Mound Valley; of E. P. Sheldon Post, No. 35, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Burlingame; of Joe Hooker Post, No. 17, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Hutchinson; and of sundry Civil War veterans of Burlington, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the so-called Fuller pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NELSON presented petitions of Joshua B. Culver Post, No. 128, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Minnesota, of Duluth; of J. L. Buzzell Post, No. 24, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Minnesota, of Annandale; and of Frank Daggett Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Minnesota, of Litchfield, all in the State of Minnesota, praying for the passage of the so-called Fuller pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce, of Bath, Me., praying for the ratification of the peace treaty with reservations, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce, of Bath, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation to relieve certain conditions in Armenia, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAPPER presented petitions of sundry veterans of the Civil War, of Harvey County; of E. P. Sheldon Post, No. 35, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Burlingame; of Mound Valley Post, No. 139, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Mound Valley; of George Graham Post, No. 92, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Seneca; of General Russell Post, No. 65, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Pittsburg; of Frank P. Blair Post, No. 54, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Galena; of Garfield Post, No. 25, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Wichita; of Preston B. Plumb Post, No. 55, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Emporia; of Kit Carson Post, No. 20, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Lyons; and of T. E. G. Ransom Post, No. 188, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Oberlin, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the so-called Fuller pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of Local Lodge, No. 1258, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Whittier, Calif., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the suppression of bolshevism and the deportation of undesirable aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. SUTHERLAND presented a memorial of the Business Men's Association of Fairmont, W. Va., remonstrating against Government ownership of railroads and other industries, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

UNITED STATES HOUSING CORPORATION.

Mr. FERNALD, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 3738) abolishing the United States Housing Corporation and other agencies and authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell or otherwise dispose of property acquired or constructed pursuant to the power and authority granted by the act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the President to provide housing for war needs," approved May 16, 1918, and other acts and parts of acts amendatory thereof, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 402) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 3813) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain between the towns of Orwell, Vt., and Ticonderoga, N. Y.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 3814) granting a pension to Mary Sawyer-Fleak (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3815) granting an increase of pension to Jesse Holt (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 3816) for the relief of Gill Irwin Wilson; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 150) making February 12, Lincoln's birthday, a national holiday; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENTS TO DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment proposing to reject the second proviso of the paragraph in the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill relating to appropriations for the International Joint Commission, which provides that no part of the appropriation shall be expended for salaries of commissioners in excess of $3,500 each per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $4,500 to pay to Mrs. Winifred T. Magelssen, widow of William C. Magelssen, late consul to Melbourne, Australia, being the amount of one year's salary of her deceased husband, and so forth, intended to be proposed by him to the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to give notice of a motion to reconsider the vote by which House bill 11368, the Indian appropriation bill, was passed yesterday. I shall not call up the motion until my colleague [Mr. OWEN], who is a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, returns.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD an analysis of the recent vote in the colleges upon the treaty which was published in the RECORD at the request of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THUMBS DOWN.

"Seeing that Senator HITCHCOCK was so uncommonly solicitous to have the result of the recent college and university referendum inscribed, enshrined, or embalmed in the luminous pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and pari passu his own quaintly ridiculous camouflage upon it, we may be pardoned for taking a few lines to make clear the real significance of the thing.

"The vote was taken in 413 colleges and universities, or less than three-quarters of the whole number, and was participated in by 158,078 persons, including both students and instructors, or probably about one-half of the total enrollment. Considering the strenuous efforts which were made, particularly by supporters of the administration, to get out a full vote, so small a balloting must be regarded as betraying a deplorable lack of active interest in the matter.

"The division of the vote was as follows:

Total number of ballots	158,078
For unqualified ratification	48,232
For Senator LODGE'S reservations	27,970
For compromise reservations	61,494
For Senator KNOX'S reservations	6,449
For rejection of the treaty	13,933

"The five classes obviously fall into three groups. One consists of only the first class, the votes for ratification of the treaty as it stands, without reservations. That secured 48,232 votes, or about 30.5 per cent of the whole. The second comprises the second, third, and fourth classes, all of which voted for ratification with some sort of effective reservations. Those secured 95,903 votes, or about 60.7 per cent of the whole. The third consists of the last class, the votes for outright rejection of the treaty. Such votes were 13,933, or 8.8 per cent of the whole.

"Now, it is also quite obvious that only the votes in the first class mentioned, for unqualified ratification, were in support of the President, and that all the others were opposed to him.

"In this academic referendum he received 48,232 votes, or 30.5 per cent, while there were cast against him 109,846 votes, or 69.5 per cent. In other words, he was beaten by much more than a two-thirds majority.

"If we omit consideration of the fifth class, opposed to any ratification, we have remaining 144,145 votes in favor of ratification in some form. Of these there were in favor of the President, for unqualified ratification, 48,232, or 33.4 per cent; while there were against the President, for some sort of effective reservations, 95,913, or 66.6 per cent. Therefore in the voting for ratification of the treaty in some form the President was beaten by practically a two-thirds majority.

"As for Senator HITCHCOCK'S attempt to group the votes for unqualified ratification and those for compromise reservations together, as an overwhelming majority against Senator LODGE'S reservations, it escapes being impertinent only by being palpably and utterly silly; and casts back upon him the imputation which he vainly tried to cast upon Senator EDGE, of 'trying to mix oil and water in an impossible combination.' A combination of votes against any reservations and votes for reservations is, of course, absurdly impossible. Oil and water is not a marker to it. But a combination of votes for various forms of reservations is entirely logical, for no matter how widely the reservations differ, they all necessarily imply compromise.

"It is well, then, to have the returns of this famous academic referendum placed in the annals of Congress. No matter from what point of view they are regarded, their purport is unmistakable. In his appeal to the faculties and students of the colleges and universities, the very elements of our population with which he has been for most of his life most intimately associated, and to which he was most confident in his appeal, he was overwhelmingly defeated and rejected. The 'intellectuals' are at one with the rest of the people in opposing the denationalization of the United States."

Mr. McCORMICK. I also ask to have printed a letter from Prof. Charles Cheney Hyde bearing upon article 10, which has been the matter of so much discussion.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

2113 BANCROFT PLACE,
Washington, D. C., January 7, 1920.

Hon. MEDILL MCCORMICK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Permit me to send you herewith a brief memorandum concerning a proposal to amend article 10 of the treaty of peace. At this time any suggestion with a view to effecting a compromise, and which is based on the theory of amendment, requires a word of explanation.

The question as to the most practical method of procedure is still at stake. It seems to be yet a mooted question whether any reservations that are essentially amendatory in character (as distinct from those which are merely interpretive) require the affirmative approval of other parties to the compact. Opinions may differ as to how acquiescence could be properly obtained. All must agree that somehow there has got to be acceptance by other powers of any contractual arrangement which the United States purports to conclude with them.

Apart from this question, the attempt to secure compromise by means of reservations, strong or mild, has thus far proved abortive partly because it is an effort to make provisions which are fundamentally unsatisfactory to certain individuals less obnoxious by explanations or limitations of the operation of clauses which are themselves disliked. This process has so far won few friends for the treaty from the ranks of its enemies.

In the light of the votes that have been taken in the Senate, is it not reasonable to assert that perhaps the simplest mode of putting the treaty in a form such that it can count on the support of a requisite number of Senators is through a straightforward attempt to incorporate amendments designed to respect in principle the most serious objections heretofore offered against it, and at the same time to retain the general plan and purposes of the treaty? It is not believed that these two purposes are necessarily inconsistent. My point is that if they are in fact not irreconcilable, the surest constructive mode of carrying them out at this stage is by a fresh drafting of at least a few articles.

Such a procedure may appear to some to raise diplomatic objections and create a burdensome task in securing the assent of other parties to the treaty. Such a task ought not to be underestimated. Nevertheless, is it to be seriously doubted that the necessary consent would be forthcoming, in view of the present state of Europe, if the United States should formally accept the treaty in amended form?

The problem of the moment is one concerned with the will of the Senate. It would be inappropriate to discuss the attitude of the President respecting a treaty of peace to which the requisite number of Senators gave approval.

The inclosed memorandum is merely a single constructive suggestion for the treatment of article 10 according to the amendatory process above suggested. I have to-day given a copy of the memorandum to Senator HITCHCOCK, upon whom I was asked to call.

Should it, in your judgment, point to the right method of procedure, and one that is not impracticable at this time, I would, of course, be glad to have you pass the inclosure on to Senator LODGE. I remain, Yours, very truly, CHAS. CHENEY HYDE.

"IN RE ARTICLE 10.

"If the first sentence of article 10 were free from the words 'and preserve as against external aggression,' that sentence would read as follows:

"The members of the league undertake to respect the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league.

"Such an undertaking would resemble that which the United States, under the Monroe doctrine, to-day demands of Europe and Asia with respect to the American continents.

"To break such a covenant would cause the State so doing to be regarded as a covenant breaker, and treated accordingly.

"But it is neither necessary nor useful to incorporate in the treaty a declaration implying a guaranty with its inherent and yet uncertain burden devolving upon the guarantor States of the league.

"By cutting out any legal or moral obligation otherwise imposed upon any member to follow a particular course of action such as may be intimated or implied by the obligation to preserve a State as against external aggression, the treaty would be rid of its sharpest thorn, without in the slightest degree lessening the duty imposed upon all to respect the territorial integriy and political independence of every member. With such an obstacle removed there disappear grounds for fear lest the United States would be called upon (under article 10) to participate in a military expedition in a remote land or to become a belligerent against its will in order to make good its guaranty.

"It is probable that the last sentence of article 10 would have to be considerably altered in order to conform with the spirit of the omission suggested. Possibly that sentence ought to be cut out entirely. Its omission would not impair the essential value of the article if amended according to the above proposal.

"The purpose of the change proposed by the omission suggested is, as must be clear, not to diminish in any way the emphasis which should be laid upon the impropriety of interference with the territorial integrity or political independence of a State, still less to remove a legal obligation not to take such action. It is simply to eliminate a remedy or course of action in case of a breach, which seems highly objectionable to numerous Sentors and to a large element of the American people. No explanations of the nature of that remedy, or of what it might or might not necessitate, have served in fact thus far to dispel real anxiety as to its meaning and scope. Nor has the second sentence of article 10 proved reassuring in this regard. It is not believed that general sentiment on this point is likely to undergo a change for an indefinite period of time.

"On the other hand, it is believed that with the eliminations suggested, article 10 would not only be stripped of its most serious defect but would also assume a form in which it could and would win the approval of some who now vigorously oppose it."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk a copy of the London Saturday Review of December 6, 1919, and ask to have printed in the RECORD the editorial on the first page. It is very short.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the London Saturday Review, Dec. 6, 1919.]

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

"The extent of the mischief wrought by President Wilson at the Paris conference is only gradually being realized by the nations, of which the last to grasp it is the British public. Mr. Wilson is a political gambler. He knew perfectly well that he was acting ultra vires and defying the American Constitution in his conduct of the peace negotiations. He knew that he was bound by the Constitution to secure not only 'the consent' but 'the advice' of the Senate before he signed a treaty, and he had neither. He also knew that not only was the majority in the Senate hostile, but that the November elections of Congressmen had gone against him. He therefore determined to tie up the peace treaty and the League of Nations in the same parcel, just as a clever company promoter merges a bad in a good company. It was a bold stroke, but it failed.

"Not that we accuse President Wilson of insincerity. He really believed in his League of Nations and his 14 points. But he is a man of autocratic temper, and he knew that he was exceeding his powers. The misfortune was that neither M. Clemenceau nor Mr. Lloyd-George knew anything about the American States. If they had they would doubtless have pointed out to Mr. Wilson that he was exposing the European world to risks which he ought not to ask the Entente powers to run. Mr. Lloyd-George has less excuse than M. Clemenceau. No one expects a Frenchman to know anything about anything outside of France. But Mr. Lloyd-George had been warned by certain organs of the press, and by several members of Parliament, by Mr. Macmaster, and others, of the danger of tying up the treaty of peace with the League of Nations. Of course, he refused to listen, as nowadays he will not hear anything from anybody which he does not wish to hear. He, like Mr. Wilson, like all demagogues, is an autocrat; and, like Mr. Wilson, he will have a fall."

Mr. SHERMAN. I also send to the desk an article from the same paper signed by Thomas Hope Floyd, dated November 30, 1919, referring to the evident need of a union between this country and Great Britain and stating that in their hearts the American people, he believes, regret the Revolution that we fought against George III, and that now we must be ready in our country to accept George V as our sovereign, referring further to the fact that that will not destroy our present form of government, that we shall retain our presidential system, but that our President will be a subject of King George. I ask unanimous consent that the whole article be printed at length in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the London Saturday Review, Dec. 6, 1919.]

JOHN BULL AND UNCLE SAM.

To the EDITOR OF THE SATURDAY REVIEW.

SIR: While listening to the great oration delivered by the Earl of Reading at the Oxford Union last night I was struck by the idea of a federal union between Great Britain and the United States of America. The Lord Chief Justice did not allude to the possibility of a federal union, but the Master of Balliol mentioned the ideal toward which Sir Cecil Spring-Rice always strove—the union of the two English-speaking peoples—and the Earl of Reading emphasized the numerous features of resemblances between the two peoples. When we take into consideration the facts of a common origin, a common language, common ideals, a common outlook, and a thousand other matters of common sympathy, it must surely strike any clear-headed Britisher or American as absurd that we should be as independent of each other as France and Japan. The great reception that has been accorded to the Prince of Wales in the United States is surely, in Mr. Churchill's words, "the true gauge of the recent tide of Anglo-American sentiments and sympathy," and sufficient evidence that the New World has not, despite its democratic enthusiasm, cast out from its national heart all sentiment and respect toward the venerable institution of the old. The late Robert Hugh Benson prophesied in The Dawn of All that even America would own the sway of a constitutional monarchy before the present century has passed away. Perhaps his romantic dream may yet be realized in a more glorious manner than even he anticipated. We have seen all around us in recent years, particularly in Russia, the anarchic path which democracy may tread when unrestrained by any sentimental reverence toward lawfully constituted authority. Perhaps the Americans realize this; and perhaps in their inmost hearts they crave for a king who shall tower above the transitoriness of presidents and premiers in his appeal to the imagination of a people. If this is so, what better king could they choose than the heir of the king whose authority they rejected in the days of their national infancy? We have both made mistakes; it is by mistakes that rulers and peoples learn. Surely the lapse of a century and a half, with all the friendly advances which have recently been made between the two branches of our race, can suffice to bury the quarrel of the past in a grave of mutual forgiveness.

I feel that now is the time to move toward reunion. America and England have decided that they will never again fight against each other. The alliance between the two powers has drawn so close that, in Lord Reading's words, we can scarcely think of each other as different nations. Why then need we be different nations at all? The British Empire as an experiment in federation has shown the world of what marvels the federal system is capable. Why not carry the experiment a step further and include America? America could lose nothing; she would only stand to gain. She would not be required to abdicate one jot or tittle of her independence. She could still retain her presidential system of government; the only difference would be that her President would be a subject of King George, like the prime minister of Great Britain and the viceroy of India. The Crown is the only bond which holds the heterogeneous elements of the British Empire together. Why should not the United States and Great Britain now reunite in a common allegiance to a common king? If this could be achieved, we would have taken a tremendous step toward the ultimate goal after which all true federalism should strive—the federation of the world.

Yours, faithfully, THOMAS HOPE FLOYD.

OXFORD, November 30, 1919.

[Mr. BECKHAM], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] are detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. KING. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] are absent on public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. Call the roll of absentees.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. TOWNSEND and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts answered to their names when called.

Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. WATSON, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. POMERENE, and Mr. CUMMINS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

LADING OF VESSELS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3418) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the lading or unlading of vessels at night, the preliminary entry of vessels, and for other purposes," approved February 13, 1911, which were, on page 2, line 7, after "thereof," to insert "of at least one hour"; on page 3, line 7, after "vessel," to insert ": Provided further, That in those ports where customary working hours are other than those hereinabove mentioned, the collector of customs is vested with authority to regulate the hours of customs employees so as to agree with prevailing working hours in said ports, but nothing contained in this proviso shall be construed in any manner to affect or alter the length of a working day for customs employees or the overtime pay herein affixed."

Mr. CALDER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 7629. An act to amend the penal laws of the United States, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 11309. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to fix compensation of certain laborers in the customs service, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

DEPARTMENT OF AIR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. When the Senate went into executive session yesterday Senate bill 3348 was under discussion. Is it in order to take up that bill at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is in order by unanimous consent or by motion to take it up.

Mr. NEW. Then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3348.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before the request is acted upon I desire to inquire does the taking up of the bill at this time limit debate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it does not.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3348) to create a department of air, defining the powers and duties of the director thereof, providing for the organization, disposition, and administration of a United States air force, creating the United States air reserve force, and providing for the development of civil and commercial aviation.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before the reading of the bill is begun I desire to ask a question or two. As I understand, the bill proposes to create a new department of the Government?

Mr. NEW. It does.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator if his remarks, which are found in the RECORD of this morning, disclose the amount of expenditure which this bill will involve?

Mr. NEW. No. The amount of the expenditure which may be involved is not definitely known. It would be whatever Congress in its wisdom should see fit to provide, I presume, as appropriations are asked for hereafter. The bill asks for no appropriation.

Mr. BORAH. I presume there have been some estimates made, have there not?

Mr. NEW. There have been.

Mr. BORAH. What are those estimates?

Mr. NEW. Those estimates were set forth in the discussion as it occurred on yesterday; but for the convenience of the Senator from Idaho I will again state that the estimates submitted are simply such as have been prepared by those who are in favor of the establishment of the new department as contrasted with the estimates which have been submitted by the Army, the Navy, and the Post Office Department for the air service now existing, and for which the new department would be substituted. As I remember the figures, they are definitely stated in the RECORD.

Mr. BORAH. I now find they are stated on page 2158 of the RECORD.

Mr. NEW. The estimates made by the other departments call for an expenditure of nearly $160,000,000, while the estimates for furnishing a similar service under the proposed consolidated united air service amount to something like $97,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. We may conclude, I think, that it will cost, to begin with, about $160,000,000 or $200,000,000.

Mr. NEW. I do not think that any such conclusion is justified.

Mr. BORAH. Perhaps not; that is what I am trying to get at. It has been very difficult for me in looking over the statement of the Senator to conclude as to how much will likely be involved in this expenditure, and I had estimated it at, perhaps, from $160,000,000 to $200,000,000. I would be glad, however, to be corrected if I am in error.

Mr. NEW. Do I understand that the Senator means that according to his estimate the expenditures for the united air service will approximate $200,000,000?

Mr. BORAH. That is what I conclude from the Senator's remarks.

Mr. NEW. I do not see how the Senator arrives at that conclusion.

Mr. BORAH. What does the Senator think it would be?

Mr. NEW. As I have said, it is impossible to state the amount definitely. For instance, in the estimate for the establishment of the united air service there is an item of $54,000,000 for new equipment. No appropriation of $54,000,000 is asked; that is simply an estimate of the amount that will be required to furnish all the service that might be desired at the hands of the united air service. I myself do not think that that expenditure will be necessary. I think they can get along with materially less equipment than that; but that will be a matter for determination when a definite proposition is submitted to Congress in the form of an appropriation bill.

Mr. BORAH. If this proposed department is created, is that all that the Senator from Indiana sees in the future, within the next year, in the way of an appropriation?

Mr. NEW. I do not see that it makes any material difference by whom the money is spent, if the service is to be rendered. What I mean is, if the Senator will allow me, in order that I may make myself clear, that there is undoubtedly to be an air service, supplied under present arrangements for the Army by the War Department, for the Navy by the Navy Department, for the Post Office by the Post Office Department, and so on, including the forest patrol and the Coast Guard service, which are supplied by other departments of the Government. The estimates made by those several departments amount in the aggregate to about $160,000,000. The estimate by the advocates of a united air service for supplying all that is estimated for by those departments and considerably more is about $98,000,000, but those are estimates and carry with them no present request for any appropriations. If the matter is left as it is now, there will, of course, be a request for an appropriation from the War Department for the Army service; there will be one from the Navy for the Navy service; one from the Post Office for the Post Office service; and in the aggregate they will exceed the amount that would be asked for by a united air service for supplying the same service.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that while the estimates are $160,000,000 for the air service of the Army and the Navy and the Post Office Department, I have not the least idea that the Congress of the United States is going to appropriate that much money. In fact, if my information is correct, it will not be half that amount.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I do not think Congress will make those appropriations either. These are mere matters of a comparison of estimates. That is all that they are intended for. There is no request for the appropriation of a dollar in this bill. What the bill really does is to transfer to the united air service the unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the benefit of the services already mentioned as maintained by the respective departments, if the united air service shall be created by this bill, and those unexpended balances amount to about $22,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the trouble with this whole proposition is that there is estimated here for the purchase of new equipment $54,000,000 in round numbers, and the estimate for all other purposes therefore would be $44,000,000 in round numbers, making $98,000,000 in round numbers.

Mr. NEW. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, Mr. President, if we are going to get anything out of this service it will be because of the fact that we have equipment to do it, but when we stop to think that there is an estimate made here for an appropriation of $98,000,000, and nearly one-half of it is to pay for the rent of buildings or the maintenance of buildings and for Government employees and services that ought to be taken care of by the Navy Department and the War Department to-day, with the personnel that they already have, it seems to me this is entering upon a new field which is so vast that nobody can tell where it is going to end. The Senator remembers well that at the beginning of the war we first appropriated about $28,000,000 for this purpose in two appropriations. It was only a few months after that time that an appropriation of $640,000,000 was made for the building of airplanes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, did the Senator ever know any department or subdepartment to be set up in this country that did not require about five times as large an appropriation as was estimated for it?

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator mean in the estimate made in order to get the department started?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator is altogether too low in his estimate. I can call the attention of the Senate now to nearly all of the bureaus and divisions that have been created here in the last 12 years; and I say right now that there is no one of them as to which the estimates for maintaining it at the time it was created and the promises made to Congress at the time it was created have not been exceeded five times, and in many cases ten times.

Now, let me proceed. After the $640,000,000 was appropriated, an appropriation was made carrying the total appropriations away above a billion and a half dollars—a billion and a half dollars! And what have we to show for it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, that is just the question. What have we to show for it? This bill is an effort to see that in future we shall have something to show for it.

Mr. BORAH. What guaranty is there that this bill will do it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no guaranty, of course.

Mr. BORAH. It is just another department, and we have been dealing with the other departments in regard to this matter. It is simply creating another animal of the same nature.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hardly think that is accurate, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. I take it for granted that the statement made by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] represents the exact position taken by those who favor this legislation. It must be that position; but we should not deceive ourselves by supposing that we are going to have an appropriation for this united air service one year from now that will amount to less than $98,000,000. The Senator knows, and everyone else knows, that $54,000,000 is not going to be sufficient to carry on this service to any great extent throughout the United States, as the proponents of the measure hope it will, because that is where the real service comes from—the purchase of new equipment. Instead of the appropriation for that purpose being $54,000,000, I feel positive that it will be twice that sum within a year; and if it is not twice that sum within a year, with the amount that is asked here for maintenance of it and the personnel provided for here, it would be a perfect outrage to pay the amount of money that is involved.

I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana if he has any idea that the amount of $54,000,000 mentioned here for the purchase of new equipment is going to be sufficient for next year? Perhaps at the present time $54,000,000 would be all that we could use in the purchase of equipment that could be made within the given time; but when another year comes along it may be four or five times $54,000,000.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, if that is true, and if four or five times that amount is asked for by the Air Service, it would be quite as many times that amount if the service were left under three or four separate departments. I want to say further, in answer to the question asked by the Senator from Utah, that I think $54,000,000 is more than is required and more than will be asked for. As I tried to say a little while ago, this is furnished here simply as an estimate of what will be required to furnish everything to start this department off with full and complete equipment. I do not believe that amount will be provided; and I want to say, further, that when it comes to that point, I do not expect to be one of those who will stand here and ask for that expenditure, either.

Mr. SMOOT. In that connection, I want to call the attention of the Senator to the amount that England has already expended upon her air service, and I take it for granted that the United States is not going to be satisfied until it expends the amount of money that England has already expended.

Mr. BORAH. Certainly not.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that that is over $300,000,000 to-day; and it does seem to me rather strange, too, that the United States is called upon to advance money to all these foreign countries, and at the same time they are using that very money which we loan them, not to reestablish the industries of those countries but for the building up of air services and for the building up of powerful armies and navies. I think it ought to be stopped.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator some questions about this bill.

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is the head of this air department to be a member of the President's Cabinet?

Mr. NEW. No, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I notice on page 4 that the director of the air service is to submit estimates for the establishment of an aeronautical academy or academies.

Mr. NEW. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why is it that the boys at West Point and at Annapolis can not be taught aeronautics, and that a separate branch can not be introduced there for that purpose? I ask the Senator that question because it seems to me that the aeronautic military and naval service ought to be taught together with the other things necessary for the military and for the naval defense.

Mr. NEW. Aeronautics is a distinct and separate science absolutely.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that. So is electricity, and so is the ordnance. Both are taught at each academy, however.

Mr. NEW. Yes; but, as the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] so very aptly suggests, they do not deal with new elements. They are not moving in new elements. The science of aeronautics involves navigation in a third dimension—that of the air.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That may be; but I do not know and I want information as to why the existing academies could not teach these sciences and keep up with the new developments as well as a newly founded academy which would have nothing else to do. Then the Senator will pardon me for asking another question.

Mr. NEW. Yes. I should like first, however, if the Senator will permit me, to make a little further answer to the question just asked.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. NEW. Of course, it is contemplated that if and when a new academy is founded it shall deal with the subject of design, aircraft-motor design, wing construction, and all of the various highly technical branches of science that must be very carefully and thoroughly studied. In short, it will specialize on all matters pertaining to aeronautics.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course. That goes without saying as a thing desirable, at any rate; but there are very highly technical and scientific courses now in each academy, and have been for quite a long while, and a great many of them grow out of things newly invented and newly discovered.

Mr. NEW. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the two academies keep abreast of those things, or at least are supposed to do so, and, I think, as a rule do, especially the Annapolis Academy.

I notice on page 6 what seems to be a divorcement of military airplanes and hydroairplanes and seaplanes, the first from the War Department and the second from the Navy Department. I want to ask the Senator whether or not that is true. Would not this air department carry on the business of designating aircraft or airplanes used in the military service and hydroairplanes and seaplanes used in the naval service independently of the War Department and of the Navy Department?

If it did that, I would want to ask the Senator whether it would not be a duplication, and a scattering of the activities of the two great departments of public defense, to wit, the War Department and the Navy Department, and whether, instead of having unification of control for purposes of offense and defense in war, it might not lead to a scattering of control?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, it is the purpose of the bill to prevent that very thing, and to concentrate in one head and one department the various activities, adjuncts, accessories, and appurtenances of an air service. It takes the service and all that goes with it from the Navy and from the Army and combines them in a separate air service under a separate head.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is just the point. Take, for example, the hydroairplanes, the seaplanes. They are destined to be one of the most important instrumentalities of offensive and defensive naval warfare. If, instead of being under the Navy Department, they are placed under a separate department, then, instead of unification, you must have at the best nothing more than cooperation of two separate departments, and instead of somebody giving the orders all down the line for naval warfare, you have an air department giving the orders for the air part of it and the present Navy Department giving orders for the ship part of it. I am asking these questions mainly for information. It is a matter concerning which I do not pretend to know very much.

I would like to hear the Senator upon that point. It seems to me that when we are carrying on war it would be infinitely better to have just as few sources of orders for offensive and defensive maneuvers and operations in all arms of the common defense service than to have it scattered among several. In fact, I have thought frequently that the Army and Navy ought to be represented by one department chief, so that there should be perfect cooperation between the two in times of war.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the questions of the Senator from Mississippi can only be answered in a general way, I suppose. An air service involves fighting in the air. Whether it is on sea or on land, the principle is exactly the same.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One word further, if the Senator will pardon me, because it will help him to answer the question more exhaustively. While what the Senator has just said is absolutely true, yet the naval planes, the seaplanes, must find their place of transportation upon ships and as a part of the Navy; they are carried upon the ships, and land upon the ships when they return from their observation tours. The military planes leave the armed forces and return to the armed forces, and cooperate with them, and must cooperate with them under a common source of some description.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, an aviator should be trained in the use of all types of planes. He should be able to land on airdromes at sea, on turrets on ships, on land airdromes, and whenever and wherever the circumstances of his environment demand. The training should be general and cover the whole field of operation for air machines of any and all descriptions.

There should be one central authority for combining in time of emergency the force that is under the Navy and the force that is under the Army, combining them quickly and under one authority, and that authority the head of the department of air. He should have the authority to draw on the Navy for that portion of the air force which is temporarily under the Navy, to draw on the Army air service, and to combine them and solidify them at once into one compact force, so that if, for instance, a coast town is threatened with bombardment by an enemy air fleet he could concentrate the force from the Navy and the force from the Army at once under his command to meet an air force that comes against him, commanded in a similar way by a head having authority over all of them.

Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It answers it, of course, from the Senator's standpoint; but it seems to me that while he was combining these squadrons which belong to the military and which belong to the Navy there would come up some very troublesome questions as between the three departments, and if he were left entire discretion the Navy Department could not defend itself with airplanes and the War Department could not direct an airplane force to where the War Department thought it ought to be. It is true it is a separate service, just as the Ordnance is, but after having——

Mr. NEW. If the Senator will permit an interruption right there, that is the very object of this centralized authority. Responsibility for aerial defense is placed in this department of air and under the military head of it. He is to be the supreme authority in combining the forces of the Army and Navy in cases of emergency.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that; but the head of the Army, then, could not have any control over what is destined to be one of the most important arms of the military service and the head of the Navy could have no control over what is destined to be one of the most important arms of the naval service.

Of course it is separate in a way, just as the Ordnance Service or the service covering electrical engineers in the Army; but they have to be coordinated, after all, in the common defense, and there ought to be somewhere a central authority.

Of course under the Constitution its rests with the President, who is the Commander in Chief. But that is merely academic in a certain sense. There ought to be somewhere a common authority that can control all of them and can concentrate and force cooperation of Navy, and Air, and Infantry, and Cavalry, and Ordnance, and everything else for what is, after all, one purpose, which is the common defense. It seems to me, without much knowledge upon the subject, that the more you scatter that out the less apt you are to get concentration of effort and full cooperation and absolute unification of maneuvers in offense and defense.

Mr. NEW. Of course the bill does not give the commander of the air force command of the Navy as such and the Army as well, and therefore it does not give him the authority to combine Army, Navy, and air forces and all that appertains to each of the three into one common force. It does give him authority and makes it his responsibility to combine whatever air forces there may be with either.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that.

Mr. NEW. It is complete as far as it goes. It gives to one man absolute control of the air force.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But it does give him power to withdraw from the Army certain planes that are operating with it, and to withdraw from the Navy planes that are operating with it, in his discretion, and without the agreement of the Secretary of War or the commander in chief of the armies in the field or the senior admiral at sea.

Mr. NEW. What the Senator has in mind could only be accomplished, I presume, by the creation of a field marshal or some new military commander unknown to our present military system, who should stand in relation to the active forces as the President does now. Of course, all authority is vested in the President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Those who chose George Washington as the first President were misled in one respect. They seemed to think that they could create a real Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, who would have concentrated in himself all the forces for defense and offense. That, of course, as the Senator and I both know, has broken down, because as a rule the man in the White House neither has time for it nor has he the ability and training for it. Of course, academically there is a Commander in Chief of all of these forces, who could concentrate them if he knew how or had time. That is a hiatus in our institutions.

Mr. NEW. Yes. If we had a Washington or a Grant or a Zachary Taylor in the White House, it would be one thing; with a Taft or a Wilson it would be entirely different, because in the former cases they were military men; in the others they were civilians. I do not see any other way to provide for the suggestion that the Senator from Mississippi makes except to create a new general officer.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was not seeking that. I was merely seeking to prevent, if I could, a further extension of the evil already existing, and the further extension of that evil would come about by still further scattering the forces of our national defense.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, one word further on that subject. As it is now, certainly the bill concentrates a very important arm of the service. As it stands now, a part of that arm is under command of the Navy and another part of it is under command of the Army, and the object is to at least provide for a consolidation of the forces of that one arm under one authority in case of emergency, and I think it goes a long way toward meeting the objection which the Senator from Mississippi raises as to the diffusion of authority over the combatant forces of the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Indiana, in answer to a question of the Senator from Mississippi, to say that under the bill there would be no Cabinet officer.

Mr. NEW. I meant that the bill does not create a Cabinet officer.

Mr. SMOOT. Then we will have to change the wording of the bill. The bill provides that there shall be at the seat of government an executive department. To-day there are 10 executive departments in the Government of the United States. All others are independent establishments, as the Interstate Commerce Commission and organizations of a similar nature.

Mr. BORAH. Also the salaries are the same.

Mr. SMOOT. If I remember rightly, the Constitution makes the heads of the executive departments members of the Cabinet. The salary provided in this bill is the same as that of a Cabinet officer. I have not any doubt that if the bill should pass in its present form the head of this proposed executive department would be a member of the President's Cabinet.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think the Senator is in error in stating that the Constitution makes the heads of executive departments members of the Cabinet.

Mr. NEW. I was going to ask the Senator from Utah where he found that in the Constitution?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not have before me the Constitution at this moment and I may be mistaken. I know that we have 10 executive departments to-day and the head of each one is a member of the President's Cabinet.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the Senator will pardon me, I think the Cabinet is what might be called an extrastatutory body. It has no statutory standing of any kind. It has no authority conferred upon it. It is a voluntary collection of the heads of departments who are merely Secretaries to the President and his advisers. I entirely concur with the Senator in his criticism of this section; I think he is correct. This official is put on the same footing exactly as the heads of departments. The bill is to amend section 158 of the Revised Statutes, and that section reads:

The provisions of this title shall apply to the following executive departments—

Then follows the Department of State, the Department of War, the Department of the Treasury, the Department of Justice, the Post Office Department, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Interior. The pending bill proposes to add a department of air. Undoubtedly it will be found that the department of air will rank exactly with the Department of State, the Department of War, and so forth, and hence this official would become a Cabinet officer. No matter whether you call him a Cabinet officer or not, he undoubtedly would be a Cabinet officer.

Mr. SMOOT. It was my recollection that the heads of all executive departments were designated under the Constitution as members of the Cabinet, but I find I am mistaken. I had in mind section 2 of Article II of the Constitution. However, I do know that there are 10 executive departments of our Government, and I do know that the head of each one of those departments is a member of the President's Cabinet. I also know that if the bill passes in its present form it will provide for the same salary as that paid to every other member of the President's Cabinet. The same salary is provided for the head of every executive department, and I have no doubt that the head of this new department would be a member of the President's Cabinet if the bill passes as it now reads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. At this point the Chair is going to insert in the RECORD a very interesting letter. The Chair does not pretend to say that it has anything to do with the pending bill, but it has to do with the jurisprudence of aeronautics and aerography.

It will be remembered that an accident occurred in the city of Chicago whereby a number of people were killed by the falling of an airship. That brought before the American Bar Association the question of jurisprudence. It was an entirely new subject, and raised the question, Where was the proper forum and what was the liability? So the president of the American Bar Association appointed a special committee to consider the subject. The chairman of that committee is an Indianapolis lawyer of very great learning and great public spirit by the name of William V. Rooker. He has thoroughly considered the jurisprudence of the subject and has written a letter to his associates upon the question as to where jurisdiction lies and what congressional or other action may be necessary when the aircraft industry at least becomes a commercial industry.

To my mind it is one of the most interesting letters I have ever read, and I am going to insert it in the RECORD. I do not say that it has anything to do with the pending question, but it is interesting reading.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I am very glad that the Chair has introduced that letter. I have a copy of it, and made reference to it yesterday. I had intended to ask that it be printed in the RECORD before the conclusion of the debate on the pending bill. I think it has a good deal to do with the subject, perhaps not as to the feature under discussion at the moment, but it furnishes a great reason for the creation of a department which shall have general jurisdiction and control over the subject of aeronautics. I am glad the Chair has introduced the letter at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I had reference to section 2, Article II of the Constitution, when I referred to the head of an executive department being a member of the Cabinet, but I notice now that that clause of the Constitution refers only to the executive departments themselves. It does not mention the fact that the heads of those departments shall be members of the Cabinet.

The letter just presented to the Senate by the Vice President evidently bears upon the very question that we are discussing. I think the Senators ought to hear the letter and that we ought to have it read so that at least the Senators present may know the opinion as expressed in the letter. If there is no objection I should like to have the Secretary read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I have no objection, but before proceeding with the reading of the letter, if the Senator from Utah will permit me, I desire to make reply to one objection that he offered a moment ago. I should like to say that it is not my purpose nor the intention of the bill to create a new Cabinet officer. There are a number of reasons for that. If the bill has that effect, as suggested by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], it would be a very easy matter no doubt to so amend it as to preclude any such possibility, and I shall have no objection to such an amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course we could make an amendment that would rectify that by simply striking out the words "executive department" and inserting the words "independent establishment," but that would require a great many amendments to the bill to be consistent with this amendment. I simply make that suggestion to the Senator so that he can take it under consideration.

Mr. NEW. I shall take the suggestion under consideration, but my first impression is that that will meet the point.

Mr. SMOOT. For instance, the Interstate Commerce Commission is an independent establishment. It is not an executive department. The Interstate Commerce Commission is always referred to in all legislation amending the printing laws of our country as an independent establishment. The other provisions of the bill would apply to an independent establishment just the same as they would apply to an executive department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the Secretary will read the letter.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Smoot
Brandegee	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Spencer
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Sterling
Capper	King	Page	Sutherland
Curtis	Lodge	Phelan	Wadsworth
Dial	McCormick	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	McKellar	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] is detained at home by illness, being confined to his bed.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. Call the roll of absentees.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. RANSDELL answered to their names when called.

Mr. CUMMINS entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. STANLEY, Mr. WATSON, Mr. HENDERSON, and Mr. REED entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has asked that the letter now at the desk be read. It is quite a long letter, and something seems to have overtaken the Senate to such an extent that very few Senators seem to care to remain in the Chamber. What is the object, therefore, of having the letter read?

Mr. SMOOT. I, of course, thought we could keep Senators in the Chamber and that they would like to hear the letter read, but as there are not so many Senators in the Chamber now as there were when I asked that the letter be read, I withdraw my request for its reading, if the Senate will consent, and will allow the letter to be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

JANUARY 5, 1920.

Mr. SIMEON E. BALDWIN,

Mr. JOHN P. BRISCOE,
Prince Frederick, Md.
Mr. STILES W. BURR,

Members of the committee on the jurisprudence of aeronautics and aerography of the conference of State and Local Bar Associations of America.

GENTLEMEN: The conference of State and Local Bar Associations of America, meeting at Boston, Mass., in August, 1919, in anticipation of the meeting of the American Bar Association, passed a resolution declaring it to be the sense of the conference that jurisdiction of aeronautics and aerography would properly lie in admiralty, with limited reservations in favor of the common law. A committee of one from each State was authorized to be appointed to pursue further inquiry into the subject and to report to the American Bar Association, presumably at its next meeting, to the end that suitable action in the premises might be taken ultimately by the United States and other Governments. But it became apparent that the size of the committee of the States, since it must function through the mails and without personal assemblage, made it an inconvenient agency for service, and a correction of the plan became necessary. In making this correction, it was determined by the proper authorities that the committee of the States should be created as contemplated by the resolution, but that the committee should function in accord with and in accommodation to a committee of five members of the American Bar Association, who should be responsible to that body for the proper carrying out of the work in hand.

As you are perhaps aware, Mr. Elihu Root, of New York, on the adoption of the resolution, honored me with the chairmanship of the committee of the States. While the composition of that committee was in hand, Mr. Root was called away and his unfinished task came to be performed by Mr. Moorefield Storey, of Boston, the incumbent presiding officer of the conference. Mr. Storey, confirming the action of Mr. Root, has honored me with the chairmanship of the committee of the States and with the chairmanship of the primary committee. He has conferred upon me the more signal honor of naming as my associates on the primary committee you gentlemen to whom this communication is addressed.

Each of you gentlemen is included in the committee of the States, as I am informed. Acceptances are expected from the other gentlemen composing the committee of the States. In the event timely acceptances be not received from all, the presidents of State or other bar associations in the affected districts will be asked to make nominations from which Mr. Storey may select. The committee of the States will be announced promptly on its completion.

I have imposed the secretaryship of both committees on Mr. Julius Henry Cohen, 111 Broadway, New York City, whose qualifications for the office will, I am sure, commend his appointment to your favor.

The task upon which we enter is one in which we are largely without the guidance of empirical knowledge, and in this situation we are confronted with the necessity of dealing with subjects in a manner more speculative than ordinarily engages the service of lawyers. Indeed, this catholicity of interest makes it incumbent upon us to invite the cordial assistance of gentlemen learned in the sciences and arts of other professions. In view of this speculative nature of our work I venture to suggest as a form of procedure to the most effective end that we agree upon an address, largely in the form a questionnaire, to be directed to the members of our committee of the States, who will employ the questionnaire in assembling for the service of the association such intelligence as may be supplied from the universities and from men who are learned in respect of the matters affected by our engagement.

Preliminary to entering upon the statement of this questionnaire, it may be proper to indicate at this point the reasons which influenced the conference of delegates to adopt the resolution under which our committees were created. The basis of these reasons is wholly scientific and is founded upon the distinctions which exist between those branches of mathematics which we denominate geometry and astronomy.

Bearing these distinctions in mind and making their application, we learn that neither the ocean nor the atmosphere is exposed to geometrical measurement. One can not plant a cornerstone nor establish a boundary line in either the ocean or the atmosphere. It follows from this premise that neither the ocean nor the atmosphere is exposed to allocation. No person's portion of either the ocean or the atmosphere can be set off to him in severalty. It follows from this that both the ocean and the atmosphere are common funds for the use and benefit of all forms of life, with no element of segregation except such as nature has employed to distinguish marine life from life on land. It follows further, in the presence of those qualities which withdraw the ocean and the atmosphere from the power of allocation, that there can not be established in either the ocean or the atmosphere a State nor any municipal subdivision of government nor any unit of dominion, not even so small a unit as a home. It further follows from these situations that there can be no such municipal organism in the ocean or the atmosphere as functions under the common law, and as the common law can not be present except as a function, it follows that the presence of the common law must be wholly denied on the ocean and in the atmosphere because of the lack of any agency appropriate to the common law's administration.

We have, historically, a richness of intelligence most happily useful to us in respect of the jurisprudence of the sea. It is not worth while at this point to enter into any extended survey of this rich intelligence. Mr. Justice Story, in the De Lovio case (De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall., 398; Fed. cases No. 3776), made an examination of the literature of the jurisprudence of the sea and traced it to its origin. He demonstrated happily the adequacy of the admiralty law to perform those duties which have resulted in bringing the continents of earth in communion.

While neither the ocean nor the atmosphere is exposed to geometrical measurement, both are exposed to astronomical measurement and both function under influences which are purely astronomical. Thus astronomical influences create and direct the tides and the ocean currents and the zones of temperature and the seasons of the year. It will not be necessary, I take it, to dwell at length nor indeed to proceed further than mention those astronomical forces which enter into and so largely comprise the mathematics of physics, but it is worth while, particularly in the geographical aspect of the situation with which we deal, that we should bear in mind that both the ocean and the atmosphere are attended with ambulatory qualities which distinguish them from the static nature of the land. This distinction is but evidence of the larger fact that the science of geometry applies to areas which, in their quality, are inert, whereas the science of astronomy applies to those substances which possess the qualities of motion, whether or not those substances contain also that element which we call life.

Lest we repel with the force of that which resembles an occult science those upon whom we must rely largely for assistance in this matter, let us bring home to the intelligence of men the fact that astronomy is not alien to their welfare nor to the situations which embrace all the duties of life. Let us impress them with the fact that those inert substances, such as the soil, which fall so largely within the range of geometry, are not potential except as they have the countervailing forces of motion which directly arise from and depend in their continuance upon influences which are astronomical. May we not begin the performance of this duty with the demonstration that while man may carry in one pocket the coined metal which we call the dollar and which he employs as the unit of measure to determine the value of his geometrical acquisitions, yet in another pocket he carries an instrument which we call a watch, which graduates his engagements with the movements of the heavenly bodies, and these movements, in their duration, we call time, engaged, as it is, at one point with eternity and at the other point with the unexplored and unknown future.

I have omitted purposely from the units of measure those instrumentalities which pertain to the wealth of industry, and this is done because commerce, which is the product of industry, is itself possessed with the element of motion, and its value, therefore, is determinable by what we term credit, and credit is a form of motion which relatively occupies a zone between that which is inert and that which possesses motion. I should not go at length into this element of the law merchant, nor state historically any of those facts known so well to our profession, which distinguish the value of static property, constituting what we sometimes are pleased to call investment, from the value of commercial property, which is essentially transitory in its nature, and which is determinable largely by what we call credit, but may we not properly remind the profession of the notable contest waged between the exponents of the common law and the exponents of chancery, having at stake the perpetuation of the law merchant, typified on the one hand by Lord Coke, and on the other hand by Lord Mansfield? The literature of jurisprudence is, of course, rich with empirical knowledge upon which was founded Coke's devotion to the common law, and Lord Mansfield's devotion to the lex mercatoria, but no more happy summary, although it is briefly stated, of that great contest is anywhere to be found than in Cohen's "Commercial Arbitration and the Law."

These observations are not immaterial nor impertinent, because hereafter we shall be called on to deal with the matter of determining the manner in which the industries of aeronautics and aerography may be financed and supplied with capital adequate to assure the proper functioning of these new arts.

It occurs to me that I should at this point make clear to you gentlemen who are my conferees, not merely the distinctions which exist between the applied sciences of goemetry and astronomy in relation to jurisprudence, but that I should indicate, also, what I understand the word jurisprudence to mean. I hope you will not indulge the impression that it is a vain recital on my part if I state to you that my professional duties have engaged me for more than 30 years, and that in their performance there have come within my survey in the literature of the law not only those texts which we call commonplace but also those which, in their nature, are philosophical, and to some extent are withdrawn from common employment by gentlemen of our profession. Among this latter class may be included the lectures of John Austin, which exemplify the virtues of ethics; the works of Jeremy Bentham, which demonstrate the utility of logic; the writings of Sir Henry Maine, and the learning of Aristotle, which demonstrate the virtues of the philosophy of history as a guide in the conduct of human affairs. To all these classifications of intelligence I engage myself with humility, but am persuaded that each of them is resultant or sequential rather than the exposition of a cause. It will not suffice to say that jurisprudence is a system of laws, and that law is a rule of action, and this is true because any such statement as that has neither a beginning nor involves an end. If we say that law is a rule of action, then may we not inquire, To whom, and for what purpose, and by what authority? I had at one time suggested to myself the definition that law was the latest and presumably the best expression of society on a stated subject, and was susceptible to change on the advancement of learning. A review of Bacon's essay on the "Advancement of Learning," read in the light of the history of my own State, persuaded me that my definition was wrong, because it reposed wholly on the human element. The human element is itself resultant and sequential. It is not the source of either inertia or motion, but is itself a result. My mind has reached a state of tranquillity, and is composed to this definition, viz: Government is the science of mathematics as applied to the catholicity of human nature in its reactions upon man, and the demonstration of these reactions we evidence with prescriptions which we call law. Therefore, law is not itself organized society, but only the evidence thereof. Therefore, as laws are only evidence of the stated society, they should be dealt with as evidence, and not as the substantive fact which they represent. Herbert Spencer tells us that governments are of two classes, (1) those which belong to the régime of status, and (2) those which belong to the régime of contract. I think he omits an essential classification, namely, that, subjectively considered, governments, as he prescribes them, are either (1) spiritual or (2) material, and for as much as any universal law such as affects the jurisprudence of the air must contemplate the existence of those nations wherein the spiritual and the material governments are unified, therefore it is well that we take knowledge of the principles which control ecclesiastical institutions. It follows from Mr. Spencer's definition that the constitutionality of laws depends upon (1) their relationship to the status of the royal prerogative, or (2) their relationship to the compact of government which we in America call the written constitution.

Now, it will be a purpose of our labors to supplant institutionalism, or the régime of status, with constitutionalism, or the régime of contract, because the dominion of the air must be conventional as between governments. Those delimitations which nature provided for the security of man in his national aspect, such as ranges of mountains and streams of water and the shores of the seas, no longer exist when activities are measured with man's engagement to the atmosphere. In other words, in our situation physical geography, which is one demonstration of nature, is stepping aside and throwing its responsibilities, which have existed until this time for the protection of society, upon man. Henceforth no Cæsar can write:

Eorum una pars, quam Gallos obtinere dictum est, initum capit a flumine Rhodano; continetur Garumna flumine, Oceano, finibus Belgarum; attingit etiam ab Sequanis et Helvetiis flumen Rhenum; vergit ad septemtriones. Belgae ab extremis Galliae finibus oriuntur; pertinent ad inferiorem partem fluminis Rheni; spectant in septemtriones et orietem solem. Aquitania a Garumna flumine ad Pyrenaeos montes et eam partem Oceani, quae est ad Hispaniam, pertinet; spectat inter occasum solis et septemtriones.

All this is because the common fund of the atmosphere encompasses the earth and brings nations into a state of fellowship where rights and wrongs must be defined by convention and each form of government must pay obeisance to others, notwithstanding in their domestic aspect these forms of government may be hostile to one another.

I have the honor to submit for your consideration the following inquiries:

First. Should we submit a questionnaire to the committee of the States, to be employed by its members in assembling information from the persons and to the effect following, viz:

(A) To the universities and seats of learning, that their astronomers and other mathematicians may supply us with the demonstration of our premise, that the affected jurisprudence properly would be astronomical and lie in admiralty, excepting those geometrical situations which would invoke the common law.

(B) To the gentlemen of the bar, that they may prescribe the subject as it may occur proper for them to do.

(C) To the economists and those engaged in the art of financing industry, that they may prescribe the form and manner in which the industries of aeronautics and aerography should be financed, having in mind the principles, to wit, (1) that in America the industries are necessarily Federal, (2) that universally the industries are an instrument of war, (3) that internationally the industries affect commerce and also engage in competition those industries which operate on land, and (4) that the industries in periods of peace entail risks which are not incident to the use of the sea for navigation or to the land for transportation purposes.

(D) To craftsmen and those interested in the arts of aeronautics and aerography and in the production of those instrumentalities which make effective the navigation of the air and its employment for the transmission of intelligence, that they may prescribe those limitations which they deem essential.

(E) To men engaged in transportation and commerce with surface agencies, that they may prescribe those prudential limitations to which competitive industries are justly entitled.

(F) To commercial organizations and those engaged in the arts and industries out of which commerce arises, that they may prescribe the limitations which appeal to them.

(G) To the governors of States and other municipal officers, that they may prescribe the limitations to which the nonparticipating surface interests of the State are entitled.

(H) To the insurance men and those interested in the risks of casualty, (1) to the craft, (2) to the passenger and shipper, and (3) to the general surface public who may be injured or aggrieved by the engagement of the atmosphere to the service of aeronautics and aerography, that these insurance men may prescribe the limitations to which their several and respective interests are entitled. And it is essential to bear in mind that the element of insurance largely may supplant the function of capitalization, and this is true because assurance against risks should be supplied either by static wealth within the agency which employs the air or by contractual indemnity adequate to meet the risks as they arise.

Second. Should we submit a questionnaire to the Department of State, to be employed by it, through diplomatic agencies, in acquiring from other countries information relatively like that which we seek to assemble in our own country?

In respect of the capitalization of these industries, it occurs to me that these principles are affected: First, the industries are essentially Federal and must be under Federal regulation and control. Second, should the Federal Government expose itself to the burden of operating any industry in competition with those industries which are created and function privately? Third, regardless of the form of capitalization, is it not essential that limitations be imposed against the sale and disposal, by stock exchanges, of certificates representing the capitalization of these industries? In the United States it has become a conventional usage to pass Federal laws enfranchising markets and the carriers between them. This enfranchisement has been of value, and this value has been capitalized, and although many of these laws were passed ostensibly to protect our own people and our own capital, yet we have opened the doors of our stock exchanges to those nations against which protection was espoused, and have permitted therein the sale of those securities which represented the value of our protected industries.

We hear much about the socialism of Germany and its baneful effects on the institutions of other countries, and we protest loudly against these socialistic influences in Germany. Nevertheless, we admit them into our stock exchanges and permit them to acquire and control our markets and the carriers between them.

These suggestions are not made to incite combat, but rather to give that just and prudent warning that time approaches when we are called upon to select between the ownership of our industries by the socialism of Germany and the ownership of our industries by the socialism of America.

May I ask you gentlemen to give such expressions of your views in answer to this speculative dissertation as may aid us in formulating a method by which we can endow ourselves with that degree of knowledge essential to a helpful performance of the duties which lie before us? If these expressions of mine appeal to you, may I ask that you indicate the particular features which appeal to you, and if they do not appeal to you that you indicate the particulars in which I may be in error? Doubtless many things will occur to you which I have overlooked or omitted, and if this be true will you kindly indicate fully the subjects with which we should deal, having in mind the purpose to settle upon some basis to facilitate our work.

I have the honor to remain,

Your obedient servant,

WILLIAM VELPEAU ROOKER,
Chairman.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] to the act creating the Department of Labor. There is no question that the head of the Department of Labor is a member of the President's Cabinet. If the Senator from Indiana will examine the bill which is now before the Senate he will see that it follows very closely the law creating the Department of Labor, and I think the Senator will then admit that upon the passage of the pending bill in its present form the head of the Air Service would be a member of the President's Cabinet. The act creating the Department of Labor reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created an executive department in the Government to be called the Department of Labor, with a Secretary of Labor, who shall be the head thereof, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and who shall receive a salary of $12,000 per annum.

I think that is almost word for word the language of the bill which is now under consideration.

Mr. NEW. If the Senator from Utah will permit me, I desire first to call his attention to the fact that the head of the Department of Labor is specifically named as the Secretary of the department——

Mr. SMOOT. As the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. NEW. While in the pending bill the head of the new department is denominated the director of air; he is not designated as a secretary. I will ask the Senator from Utah to tell me the date of the passage of the act creating the Department of labor?

Mr. SMOOT. The date of the act is March 4, 1913.

Mr. NEW. I refer to the date of the original act creating that department. I ask the Senator from Utah if it is not a fact that the Department of Labor existed for some years as an independent department, the head of which was not a member of the Cabinet?

Mr. SMOOT. Not as an executive department. There was a Bureau of Labor in the Department of Commerce until March 3, 1913. On that date the act was signed by the President creating an executive Department of Labor, the same as an executive Department of Commerce or any other of the executive departments of the Government.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that, as suggested by the Senator from Indiana, the Department of Labor existed for years under Carroll D. Wright at the head of it, and was called the Department of Labor, although it was only a bureau.

Mr. SMOOT. It was not an executive department at all; it was simply a Department of Labor.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will look back and see, the Department of Commerce did not then exist. It was called the Department of Labor. It was officially so designated, and Carroll D. Wright, for many years a very distinguished statistician from the State of Massachusetts, was at the head of the Department of Labor. It was not a part of the Department of Commerce, because at that time—20 or 25 years ago—the Department of Commerce did not exist.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will remember, it was called the Department of Commerce and Labor, and in that department there was a Bureau of Labor. The executive Department of Commerce was created, as well as the executive Department of Labor; and I presume the Senator remembers very well that that is the fact. It so states in this very act, I think. It says:

And the Department of Commerce and Labor shall hereafter be called the Department of Commerce, and the Secretary thereof shall be called the Secretary of Commerce, and the act creating the Department of Commerce and Labor is hereby amended accordingly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But, Mr. President, if the Senator will go back still farther he will find that the original Department of Labor was created as a bureau called the Department of Labor.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not remember what it was called.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It was farther back than the creation of the Department of Commerce and Labor, before that department of the Government was created.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, however that may be, as has been already stated, it is not the purpose of this bill to create a new Cabinet officer, and I shall have no objection to such an amendment being made as will make that clear, if in the opinion of any Senator present such an amendment is necessary.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice, Mr. President, that on page 1 of the bill it is provided that the head of this executive department shall receive a salary of $12,000 per annum, and that his term and tenure of office shall be like that of the heads of the other executive departments—and section 158 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to include such department, and the provisions of title 4 of the Revised Statutes, including all amendments thereto, be, and are hereby, made applicable to said department.

Mr. NEW. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, if the Senator will turn to section 158 of the Revised Statutes, he will see that it provides as follows:

The provisions of this title shall apply to the following executive departments:
First. The Department of State.
Second. The Department of War.
Third. The Department of the Treasury.
Fourth. The Department of Justice.
Fifth. The Post Office Department.
Sixth. The Department of the Navy.
Seventh. The Department of the Interior.

Then it says that not only shall the provisions of this section of the Revised Statutes apply to this department, but all of title 4, and title 4 is the provision applicable to all of the executive departments of the Government. Then it proceeds to specify the powers of the new department. So, Mr. President, while I do not want to discuss the question any further, I am positive that if the bill passes in its present form the head of the Air Service would be a member of the President's Cabinet.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be read for committee amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that that has already been agreed to. The formal reading of the bill has been dispensed with.

Mr. NEW. I think that is correct. I had forgotten it, but I think that is the order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has already been agreed to. The bill will be read.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 2, line 11, after the word "President," to insert "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," so as to read:

SEC. 2. That there shall be in said department an assistant director of air, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive a salary of $6,000 per annum. He shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by the director of air or may be required by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Assistant Secretary read to line 15, on page 6, the last words read being as follows:

The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Postmaster General, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall, and are hereby directed by order in writing, transfer and deliver to such agents of the department of air, as the director thereof may designate—

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, there is evidently a word omitted there, purely by a clerical error. It is very evident that there is some error. The words "by order in writing" have found their way in there, and I think have not been called to our attention before, and the word "to" omitted. I suggest that that be amended by inserting the word "to" and striking out the other words.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 6, line 13, after the word "directed," it is proposed to strike out the words "by order in writing" and to insert the word "to" before the word "transfer," so that if amended it will read "are hereby directed to transfer and deliver."

Mr. NEW. That will correct it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 20 on page 8.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I move that the word "however" and the comma on page 8, line 16, be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 18, after the word "four," to strike out the words "or more"; in line 20, after the words "division of," to strike out the words "the air force" and to insert the words "military aeronautics"; and in line 21, after the words "by the," to strike out the words "director of air" and to insert the words "President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among the commissioned personnel of the department of the air, to serve for four years unless sooner relieved," so as to read:

SEC. 10. That the organization of the department of air shall consist of the director of air and the assistant director of air, who shall control and be responsible for all aeronautical activities assigned to the department of air, and that there shall be four divisions to be known as—

Division of military aeronautics, the head of which shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among the commissioned personnel of the department of the air, to serve for four years, unless sooner relieved, and who shall be the military head of the air force and who shall be known as the commander of the air force, and who shall be the military adviser to the director of air, and who shall have the rank of major general during his tenure of office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, to strike out lines 5 to 20, inclusive, in the following words:

Division of civil and commercial aeronautics, the head of which shall be appointed by the director of air, and who shall be known as the director of civil and commercial aeronautics, and who shall be either civil or military, and, if military, shall have the rank of brigadier general during his tenure of office.

Division of supplies, the head of which shall be appointed by the director of air, and who shall be known as the director of air supplies, and who shall be either civil or military, and shall have the rank of brigadier general during his tenure of office.

Division of research, the head of which shall be appointed by the director of air, and who shall be known as the director of air research, and who shall be either civil or military, and who shall have the rank of brigadier general during his tenure of office.

And to insert:

Division of civil and commercial aeronautics, the head of which shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall be known as the chief of civil and commercial aeronautics.

Division of supplies, the head of which shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall be known as the chief of the division of supplies.

Division of research, the head of which shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall be known as the chief of the division of research.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that at the bottom of page 11, line 24, the period after the word "aeronautics" be stricken out and a semicolon substituted, and that on page 12, line 4, after the word "supplies," the period be stricken out and a semicolon substituted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NUGENT in the chair). Without objection, that modification will be made.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 7, after the word "only," to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That any transfers or assignments from any other department shall not be considered as creating permanent vacancies in the departments from which said transfers or assignments are made, and the number of officers in that department shall be reduced in that proportion.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 1, after the word "the," to strike out the words "tactical or strategical necessity" and to insert the word "President," so as to read:

SEC. 14. That the air force shall be so trained as to comprise a combatant force of the United States with a view to operating either with the armed land or sea forces of the United States, or with both combined, or independently of either, as the President may determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 21, after the words "four thousand," to strike out the words "and shall be in the following grades: Major general, brigadier general, colonel, lieutenant colonel, major, captain, first lieutenant, and second lieutenant," and to insert after the period the words "Appointments and promotions in such commissioned personnel shall be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," so as to read:

That the commissioned personnel of the air force shall not exceed 4,000. Appointments and promotions in such commissioned personnel shall be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I may not be strictly in order at this time, but I move that, in section 11, page 12, line 10, after the word "the," the word "technical" be stricken out and that there be inserted in lieu thereof the word "tactical," so as to read:

That the air forces of the United States, under the tactical control of the department of air, shall be known as the United States air force—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEW. In section 12, page 13, line 18, after the word "selected," I move that the word "technical" be stricken out and that there be inserted in lieu thereof the word "tactical," so as to read:

(b) Personnel of certain selected tactical qualifications, to be employed at the discretion of the director of air under regulations to be prescribed by the department of air without reference to the civil-service laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEW. On page 13, line 3, there should be a correction, so that the line will read "By transfer from the Army, the Navy, and the Coast Guard." In other words, insert a comma after the word "Army" and substitute the word "the" for the word "or"; insert a comma after the word "Navy," in the same line, and add at the end of the line the words "and the Coast Guard," so that the line will read, "By transfer from the Army, the Navy, and the Coast Guard."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3383) to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Public Health Service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, so that the Senate may continue consideration of Senate bill 3348.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, before proceeding further with the other bill, may I ask the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] a question? The Senator entered a motion this morning to reconsider the vote by which the Indian appropriation bill was passed. I simply wish to ask the Senator when he desires to call up the motion?

Mr. GORE. It is my purpose to call up the motion when my colleague [Mr. OWEN] returns to the city.

Mr. CURTIS. When does the Senator expect his colleague to return?

Mr. GORE. Not until after the 5th of February. He will return soon after the 5th. He is a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CURTIS. There is no hurry about the matter. I know what amendment the Senator is interested in, and it would not make any material difference what action should be taken on the amendment. I am perfectly willing that the matter may rest for the present, but I wish to have it understood that it shall not be called up in my absence.

Mr. GORE. I will see that it is not called up in the Senator's absence.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, would it interfere with the purpose and pleasure of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] if I should propound a question at this time with respect to section 15, or does the Senator prefer that the committee amendments shall be disposed of before any general questions are asked and general discussion ensues? I am perfectly willing to accommodate my wishes to the pleasure of the Senator.

Mr. NEW. I am perfectly willing to answer a question at any time. Putting it the other way, if it suits the pleasure of the Senator from Utah better to ask his question at this time than to let it go for the present and take it up later, I will answer it now if I can.

Mr. KING. Perhaps it would be just as well for me to get the information now. It might prevent criticism of some features of the bill at a later period.

Section 15 provides that the commissioned personnel of the air force shall not exceed 4,000, and further on in the bill, I do not recall the section, the provision is made for 40,000 enlisted personnel, as I understand, of the aircraft arm of the military service.

Mr. NEW. Of the department of air.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator explain how the number 4,000, the personnel of the officers, was reached and by what process of reasoning 40,000 was fixed as the limit of the enlisted personnel?

Mr. NEW. Yes. In the first place, as to the number of officers, the proportion of officers to enlisted personnel will, of course, strike anyone at first as unduly large, but the fact is that substantially all fliers are officers. Whereas in the previously established arms of the service, the Infantry, Cavalry, Artillery, and so on, the ratio of officers is as 1 to 60 or 70, the ratio of officers in the flying corps is as 1 to 10, and necessarily so because the flyer is in nearly every case an officer. The number of enlisted men was fixed at 40,000 as providing a number sufficient to supply the combined forces of the Army, Navy, Post Office, and the other branches of the public service that are using aircraft in any form. It about equals the number of men now employed in the same service in the different arms.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator advise us how many flyers will be developed or maintained with 40,000 of the lower grades and 4,000 officers?

Mr. NEW. All the officers are flyers. The 4,000 officers would be flyers; that is, substantially all of them. It is therefore proper and correct to say that it would develop 4,000 flyers.

Mr. KING. I am speaking more from my knowledge of the Army than from my knowledge of the Navy, but, as the Senator knows, in the past only a percentage of the officers engaged in the aircraft arm of the military service of the Government were fliers. The overwhelming majority of officers could not fly and did not pretend to fly, but were doing clerical work and work that clerks could perform. Hundreds and thousands of them were drawing large compensation for doing mere clerical work.

Mr. NEW. I think the Senator may be a little extreme perhaps in his latter expression, but I quite agree with him that in general his complaint is well founded. That is one of the things the pending bill seeks to correct, to provide flying officers instead of so many of the character the Senator has just described.

Mr. KING. The feeling seems to be entertained by a good many, and I am sure I possess it, that during the recent war many men were selected because they could not fly, and they were put into the aeronautic branch of the service. There were thousands of men known as nonflyers. It was always a mystery to me why they needed so many nonflyers, why so many men in the Air Service of the Government who could not fly were needed to sustain the very limited number of men who could fly. It looked to me as though the flying service as it was developed meant the employment of thousands and tens of thousands of men in order to produce a very few hundred men who actually did fly.

We know that over on the other side of the Atlantic not more than five or six hundred American fliers actually got to the front and crossed the line, flying over the German lines. There were thousands brought up to the front probably, but very few American fliers were permitted to cross or actually did cross the line to do bombing and pursuit work upon the fields occupied by the enemy.

The feeling has been that the Air Service up to date has been a wretched, miserable failure, through the mismanagement of somebody in the War Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield?

Mr. NEW. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I wish to make just one observation as applying to the remarks of the Senator from Utah. The Senator complains that we had a great many officers in the flying service who could not fly. The underlying reason for all that was that we did not have any flying service when we entered the war and no one in this country, with the exception of very, very few, knew how to fly. In starting the service we had to take somebody in, and they took men who could not fly, and after the fighting began we began to teach men to fly. Gradually the fliers overtook in percentage the nonfliers, but in the first few months of our participation in the war, of necessity, the majority of officers in the flying service could not fly because they never had had a chance to learn. It is hoped that this will be a genuine flying service from top to bottom.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact that there were more than 200,000 in the military flying branch of the Government at one period during the war in Europe?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not recollect the entire number, but let me remind the Senator from Utah that it takes something like 20 men on the ground to keep 1 flyer in the air. That is the experience of every army. The mechanics, the repair men, the men who run the shops and keep the motors in repair and the planes in repair vastly outnumber, and always will vastly outnumber, the flyers themselves.

The Senator said that only about 500 of our men flew over the lines. We had a great many more than 500 flyers in France, but not many more than 500 flew over the lines, because they did not have machines in which to fly. We hope to overcome that by the passage of this legislation and systematizing and concentrating the production problem in this aviation scheme.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana whether or not this 40,000 is a rigid, inflexible number?

Mr. NEW. No; I do not think it is. I am frank enough to say that.

I should like to add to what the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has just stated in reply to the query of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that the condition of our personnel in this country compared very closely with our condition as to equipment. We had neither machines nor flyers. We had to purchase facilities even for making flyers out of the excellent raw material that we had.

I should like to answer a little further the Senator from Utah by saying that it takes 1,000 men to maintain 2 squadrons of airplanes and the replacement and supply service that goes with them. That would mean about 50 airplanes. I mean 2 active squadrons of 18 machines each, with the replacement machines which go with them, or 50 in all.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator whether he believes that with a standing army of 280,000 or thereabouts we should have 40,000, plus the officers, in the Air Service?

Mr. NEW. Of course, this bill does not contemplate that all these men shall be used for Army purposes strictly, but they are to be used for Army, for Navy, and for Post Office purposes, for forest patrols, and the various uses to which a flyer may be assigned in the future.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator contemplate that there will be somewhat of a fixed ratio between the number engaged in the aircraft arm of the service of the Army and those who are in the Army proper?

Mr. NEW. Yes.

Mr. KING. What is the ratio that the Senator feels would be scientific or proper?

Mr. NEW. It is impossible to make a definite answer to that question, because the development of the science is going to determine that.

Mr. KING. That was my view, and I was wondering if the Senator had prepared this bill upon the theory of any fixed ratio between those engaged in the military air service and those engaged in the military service proper?

Mr. NEW. No. I think I misunderstood the question which the Senator from Utah first addressed to me. My last remark stands as an answer to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, do I understand that the bill has been read in full?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We are now considering committee amendments as they are being read.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 16, line 2, after the words "air force," to insert "there shall be four brigadier generals, one of whom shall be designated as chief of the air force, and shall have the rank of major general while serving in that capacity, colonel, lieutenant colonel, major, captain, first lieutenant, second lieutenant, and," so as to read:

> In the initial organization of the air force there shall be four brigadier generals, one of whom shall be designated as chief of the air force, and shall have the rank of major general while serving in that capacity, colonel, lieutenant colonel, major, captain, first lieutenant, second lieutenant, and the number in the various grades below the rank of general officer shall not exceed the following percentage of the total authorized commissioned strength of the air force.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment which will correct the committee amendment just stated, which is quite obscure in its meaning as it stands at present. In line 5, page 16, after the word "capacity," I move to strike out the words "colonel, lieutenant colonel, major, captain, first lieutenant, second lieutenant," and to substitute therefor the words "and commissioned officers in the grades from second lieutenant to colonel, inclusive," so that it will read.

And shall have the rank of major general while serving in that capacity, and commissioned officers in the grades from second lieutenant to colonel, inclusive, and the number in the various grades below the rank of general officer shall not exceed the following percentage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana why in the initial organization of the air force there should be four brigadier generals, when, perhaps, for the first year or longer we can not tell, not having determined the size of this proposed department, the number of the personnel. Assume that we should start out modestly with only a few thousand, say, ten or fifteen thousand personnel in the military arm of the aircraft service, would there be any necessity for four brigadier generals?

Mr. NEW. I think that the four brigadier generals would be assigned to the head of the different sections of this force, if military personnel is to be employed. In addition to that that is about the right proportion of general officers required for the command of such a force as is contemplated by this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I can readily perceive that if we are to have 4,000 officers and shall build up an army, such as is contemplated by this bill, of thirty or forty thousand or thereabouts, perhaps the number of brigadier generals would not be disproportionate; but assume that we start out with a modest personnel, with a small division—and I do not use the word "division" in the military sense—with a small number, as I have said, a few thousand, five or ten thousand, it seems to me that to have four brigadier generals with the initial organization would be entirely too many, and that if the other subordinate officers, such as colonels, majors, and so on, bear the same relationship to the organization as do the brigadier generals, with that small organization or division we should have entirely too many colonels and too many majors and too many captains.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the proportion of those officers is fixed by a percentage table that appears in another part of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from Indiana if the objection could not be obviated by amending the amendment so as to read:

In the initial organization of the air force there shall not be to exceed four brigadier generals—

Mr. KING. That would, in part, meet the criticism which I make, and I think would be an improvement over the language of the amendment as it now stands.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will say to the Senator from Indiana that there need not be four brigadier generals appointed immediately, although there could be that number appointed under the language of the amendment.

Mr. NEW. I will accept the amendment to the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I offer the amendment to the amendment so that it will read:

There shall not be to exceed four brigadier generals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated:

The READING CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 16, line 2, after the word "shall," it is proposed to insert the word "not," and after the word "be" to insert the words "to exceed," so that it will read:

There shall not be to exceed four brigadier generals, one of whom shall be designated as chief of the air force and shall have the rank of major general while serving in that capacity, and commissioned officers in the grades from second lieutenant to colonel, inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Reading Clerk read as follows:

The number in the various grades below the rank of general officer shall not exceed the following percentage of the total authorized commissioned strength of the air force, namely: Colonels, 3 per cent; lieutenant colonels, 3 per cent; majors, 9 per cent; captains, 15 per cent; first lieutenants, 30 per cent; second lieutenants, 40 per cent: Provided, That no officer shall exercise command over aeronautical flying units except a flying officer, namely, a regularly qualified pilot or observer, and that the commanding officer or military head of the air force shall be a flying officer: Provided further, That, except as hereinafter provided and subject to approval of the director of air, all officers holding permanent commissions in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard now serving or who have served in the Army Air Service, the Naval Flying Corps, the Marine Corps Flying Corps, the Coast Guard Flying Corps, or combatant divisions relating to aeronautics between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, and such temporary officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard as held active commissions in the aviation branches thereof at the time of the passage of this act shall be eligible for appointment and commission in the regular air force without examination.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana a question respecting the provision just read. The Senator knows that in the air service there were a large number of officers who could not fly and who did not pretend to fly. Many of them, doubtless, hold commissions now in the air service, although I am not advised as to that. It seems to me that this provision would authorize the appointment of those officers to permanent positions in the air service without examination; indeed, under the language of the bill they are "eligible for appointment and commission in the regular air force without examination," notwithstanding they can not fly and never have learned to fly. While it is true, as I understand the Senator, that this bill contemplates that all of these 4,000 officers shall be fliers, not in theory but actual, practical fliers, under this bill there might be transferred from various departments of the Government to the air service a large number of individuals who can not fly and never have learned to fly. It seems to me that in part the purpose of the bill will be nullified if that provision is retained in the bill. If the theory of the Senator is correct that we want officers who are fliers, the Senator ought to move to amend that provision so that they shall be examined, and if they can not fly the commissions which they formerly have held shall not avail them to obtain positions in the flying arm of the military branch of the Government.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, another section provides that they shall be eligible for appointment with examination.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not quite catch his meaning. The point that I am trying to make is that this section which has just been read, commencing at the top of page 17, provides that those—the antecedent being officers now in the Coast Guard, in the Marine flying corps, and in other branches of the air service—that those officers "shall be eligible for appointment and commission in the regular air force without examination." The Senator knows that there are hundreds of officers who have served in the air service of the Government who can not fly. They will be eligible now for commissions in this branch, which it is understood will furnish men who do know how to fly.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, with a force limited in number, as this force must be, under the widest stretch of the possibilities, I do not think there is the slightest danger of the selection of any man who is not a flying officer.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if there is any authority granted to refuse to any one of these officers an appointment and commission in the regular air force without examination?

Mr. NEW. Yes; it is to be done with the approval of the director of air.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but it says:

That, except as hereinafter provided and subject to approval of the director of air, all officers holding permanent commissions in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard now serving or who have served in the Army Air Service, the Naval Flying Corps, the Marine Corps Flying Corps, the Coast Guard Flying Corps, or combatant divisions relating to aeronautics between April 6, 1917—

That is the date of the declaration of war—

and November 11, 1918—

That is the date of the signing of the armistice—

and such temporary officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard as held active commissions in the aviation branches thereof at the time of the passage of this act shall be eligible for appointment and commission in the regular air force without examination.

Mr. NEW. Yes; "eligible for appointment."

Mr. SMOOT. Now, with the simple words "approval of the director of air," does the Senator think there would be no men selected that were not actual fliers?

Mr. NEW. I do think so.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the theory and if that is what we want to reach, why not specifically state there that they shall not be commissioned as officers of the regular air force unless they are actual fliers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I reply to the Senator from Utah in that connection?

Mr. NEW. The Senator may.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The question arises from the Senator's observations as to whether or not a nonflying officer should ever be part of the flying service. Now, it so happens that some of the most skillful designers of aircraft do not know how to fly.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. WADSWORTH. You do not want to keep them out. They will be of great value to the Army. May I say to the Senator that the Army reorganization bill, which was reported to the Senate yesterday, provides, in dealing with that portion of the Aviation Service that is to be left with the Army, that at least 90 per cent of the officers of the Army Aviation Service must be qualified pilots or observers, leaving 10 per cent leeway to take care of those technical engineers.

Mr. SMOOT. I had that in mind when I was calling the attention of the Senator from Indiana to the statement he made to the junior Senator from Utah. Personally I do not see how every officer given a commission could be an actual flier.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He could not be.

Mr. SMOOT. But I understood the Senator from Indiana to say that would be the case.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would be so near it that I assume the Senator from Indiana was replying in a general way. Perhaps not every last one of the 4,000 officers would be a flier. As a matter of fact, a man may cease being a flier after having been one for 20 years through physical changes.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I may have been a little bit unfortunate in the selection of words in my reply to the Senator from Utah. The Senator from New York has exactly stated the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 18, on page 18.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I move to amend by inserting, after the word "officers," in line 9, page 18, the words "and flying enlisted men."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 18, line 9, after the word "officers," it is proposed to insert the words "and flying enlisted men," so as to read:

And provided further, That all laws now in effect pertaining to the rating of flying officers and enlisted men of the Army shall remain in full force and effect and shall apply to all flying officers of the United States Air Force, except as herein especially provided, and the authority to rate flying officers and flying enlisted men now delegated by law to officers of the Naval or Military Establishment or any branch or service thereof is hereby transferred and vested in the director of air in a similar manner.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator what he understands to be the meaning of the first proviso on page 17, which reads as follows:

That all regular and emergency officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard who served honorably and at least 30 days on active duty between April 6, 1917, and the passage of this act with the Army Air Service, the Naval Flying Corps, the Marine Corps Flying Corps, or the Coast Guard Flying Corps shall be eligible for appointment and commission in the regular air force.

In the proviso before that they were to be appointed and commissioned in the regular air force without examination. Does the Senator understand that under the second proviso, in which the words "without examination" are not used, they shall pass an examination, or can any of them go into the Army in the regular air force?

Mr. NEW. I think they can go in without examination.

Mr. SMOOT. If they were regular or emergency officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and so forth, they can go into this air force?

Mr. NEW. Under the discretion of the director of air.

Mr. SMOOT. It seems to me that that is pretty loose, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 2, on page 23.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I move to amend, on page 23, line 2, by substituting for the word "technical" the word "tactical."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 23, line 2, it is proposed to strike out the word "technical" and insert the word "tactical," so that it will read as follows:

And operated as nearly as possible as tactical units.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 5, page 25.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I suggest that the word "will," on page 24, line 16, be stricken out and that there be inserted in lieu thereof the word "shall."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 24, line 16, after the word "reserve," strike out the word "will" and insert the word "shall," so as to read:

The officers' reserve shall be available, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of section 23, line 2, page 26.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Indiana a slight amendment in the last proviso, in order that the proviso will be in exact conformance with a bill passed by the Senate the other day applicable to the War Department. The Senator will remember that the Committee on Military Affairs reported and the Senate passed a bill authorizing the Secretary of War to sell gasoline and oil and other supplies to civilian aviators who are compelled to land in Army aviation fields. He is authorized to sell those supplies at cost, plus 10 per cent; and I think that the words "plus 10 per cent" should be inserted here.

Mr. NEW. I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 25, line 22, after the word "cost," insert the words "plus 10 per cent," so as to read:

And that, until June 30, 1926, the Government will furnish at cost, plus 10 per cent, to any owner or operator of private or commercial aircraft landing on an airdrome of the air force, airplane gasoline—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, in section 23, page 26, line 9, to strike out the word "employ" and insert the words "make use of"; in line 10, after the word "personnel," to strike out the words "as he may deem necessary"; and, in line 11, after the word "available," to insert the words "in the department," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 23. That the director of air is authorized and directed to cooperate with every civil department of the Government of the United States, including the Post Office, Treasury, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Geological Survey, Forestry Service, and Bureau of Fisheries in order to properly execute their aerial requirements, and, to this end, the said director of air is authorized to make use of, in addition to such civilian personnel, such units of the air force as may be available in the department and not immediately necessary to properly execute the aerial, military, or naval requirements of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 4, page 27.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 26, lines 23 and 24, I move that the words "by order in writing" be stricken out.

Mr. NEW. It is very obvious that those words should be stricken out after the word "transferred," in line 23.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. In section 24, page 26, lines 23 and 24, strike out the words "by order in writing," so that it will read:

Are hereby transferred to the department of air—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I realize how important and, indeed, invaluable the Air Service is, and I am highly in favor of doing anything that will encourage it. But I do not believe that the method proposed in this bill is the proper one to attain the greatest results in this field.

I do not think the bill has been sufficiently considered by the Senate as a whole. I know that very extensive hearings were held before the Committee on Military Affairs, but I also know, as a Member of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, that no hearings were held before that committee, and that that committee was not consulted in the drafting of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GERRY. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I have been informed—I do not know how correctly—that the experts are very generally opposed to this bill. Does the Senator know whether that is true or not?

Mr. GERRY. That is my information. I know from the naval experts with whom I have talked that they are very strongly opposed to it, and believe that it will be detrimental to that branch of the service in the work that it must do for the Navy Department.

I believe it would have been better, Mr. President, if a joint committee, made up of members of both the Military Affairs Committee and of the Naval Affairs Committee, had had hearings on this bill. I believe then that Senators would be more thoroughly conversant with its merits and demerits. From talking with naval officers, men who are qualified to speak for that branch of the service, I am confident that this bill will create more red tape instead of cutting it. I believe that naval development in the Air Service will be hampered if this department is created.

The naval Air Service is a highly specialized service, and it must work in very close conjunction with the Navy Department, and, in my opinion, it must be run by a naval personnel and by naval officers, and these men must have a fairly free hand if the development is to be satisfactory. I happened to be in London at the time Lieut. Commander Read landed, after his wonderful trip across the Atlantic, and I went with his party, of which Admiral Plunkett was the head, from London to Paris, and heard them discuss some of the different lessons they had learned on their voyage.

I think one of the things that they were most interested in was the scientific navigation that was necessary in order to have that line of destroyers stretching across the Atlantic to the Azores, and then from the Azores to Portugal, and so on to Portsmouth. They were very proud of the close coordination that had existed in the service and the ability with which the maneuver was carried out and the effective lessons that they had learned. Many of the lessons were highly technical, not easy of comprehension by a layman, but it was very easy for a layman to perceive that a highly trained naval officer was required in command of the airship, and that he must have the special knowledge of the sailorman if he was to render service that would be highly effective for the Navy.

I believe that the Navy, as far as it is able, is doing everything that it can do to carry on and develop the Air Service. It is simply a question of how much they are able to do, dependent upon the amount appropriated by the Congress. I feel sure that if they are let alone they can carry on development faster in time of peace and certainly work more effectively in time of war. If during a war they continually have to defer to another department, there will undoubtedly be red tape and delay, and quick, effective action will be retarded. It is for these reasons that, although I am in favor of any proposition that will encourage aviation and its development, I feel that I can not support the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have an amendment that I desire to offer.

Mr. NEW. I should like to say a word in reply to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] before the amendment is offered.

The protest of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] is the same protest that we always hear from any department of the Government when a proposition is made to take away from it something of which it has possession. The Navy, of course, objects to the surrender of any part of the control of its Air Service.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. GERRY. The objection of the Senator from Rhode Island is not because the Navy objects to it, but because the Senator from Rhode Island believes that the Navy can do the work more efficiently if left to itself than if it has to have a superbureau over it.

Mr. NEW. That, of course, is a matter of belief, and the Senator from Rhode Island is as much entitled to his belief as I am to mine, which is diametrically opposite. I am not going to seek to control his belief. I should like to add that by no means all the officers of the Navy entertain the view which has just been expressed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The Senator has mentioned some of the officers who were identified with the cross-seas trip of the NC-4, the NC-3, and the NC-1. Capt. Bellinger, who commanded one of those boats and is as able an officer as there is in the Navy, is very heartily in favor of the establishment of this service and has so said in a public hearing before a committee of the House of Representatives. I have talked personally with Commander Childs, of the Navy, who is very strongly in favor of it and whose views are exactly in line with those that I entertain. I have talked with other naval officers, some of whom have requested that their names be not made known because of the position of some of their superior officers on the question and a fear on their part that an expression of their real views would perhaps not do them any good if they should reach the ears of those superiors.

Capt. Mustin, of the Navy, was, as I stated yesterday, a member of the Crowell Commission, which went to Europe to make an investigation of the whole question. He joins in their recommendation for the establishment of this department, making certain reservations to the recommendations made by the commission itself. The bill is drawn in exact conformity with the suggestions made by Capt. Mustin for these changes. It is ridiculous to say that there is no sentiment of the Navy in favor of the establishment of this department.

Mr. GERRY. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. GERRY. I have no doubt that the Senator will find naval officers who are in favor of the bill that is proposed, and all I have to say is that from conversations that I have had with many naval officers I am convinced that the best opinion of the service and the best arguments are against the plan. As the Senator has said, of course that is a matter of personal opinion. I feel sure, however, that if the Senator took the consensus of naval opinion, of those who are authorities on the subject, he would find that a great many more of them agreed with my contention than with his. As I said before, I believe the soundest arguments are against the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator yield to me to ask the Senator from Indiana a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understood the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] to say yesterday and to-day that the estimates showing the amount of money necessary to keep up the department of air total something like $98,000,000 in round figures.

Mr. NEW. I did not say just that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I misunderstood the Senator. What is the estimate of the cost to the Government of this department when established?

Mr. NEW. It depends upon the size of the department that is created. The estimate that I have given here and to which I referred yesterday and in which the figure of approximately $98,000,000 was mentioned is a comparative estimate as to what this service can be furnished for by the united air department as contrasted with the estimates that are made by the three or four separate departments now furnishing a like service on a divided plan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand. Those who would be normally responsible for advising an aircraft program estimate that the job can be done under this plan for about $98,000,000. Of course, Congress may not appropriate that much; Congress may not agree with the gentlemen who make the estimates. Congress may say that it does not require so much of this and so much of that or so many fields, and so on, and may pare the estimate down. But is it not true that experts are of the opinion that it would take about $98,000,000 to meet the cost of the program which they think is necessary?

Mr. NEW. The experts who have made the estimates for the War Department and for the Navy Department and for the Post Office Department estimate $160,000,000.

Mr. WOLCOTT. So we are probably safe in taking $98,000,000 as a minimum. I wish to ask the Senator——

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is not quite what is at issue here. The several departments of the Government have asked in the aggregate an appropriation of $160,000,000. Now, the proposal is that by taking those functions of the different branches of the Government and putting them under this department we can do the same work for $98,000,000 and save $50,000,000 or $60,000,000.

Mr. NEW. That is correct.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Let me ask the Senator this further question: Under section 5 of the bill there is a transference of unexpended balances to the aircraft department. What is the sum of those unexpended balances to-day?

Mr. NEW. From the War Department about $8,600,000; from the Navy Department, $13,778,696; from the Post Office Department, $325,000; a total of $22,703,000. Those figures are approximate, but they do not depart very far from the actual amounts.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Can the Senator state whether or not those twenty-two-odd million dollars that are appropriated to the air department immediately upon the approval of this bill are available only until the end of this fiscal year, or does that sum lap over into next year?

Mr. NEW. I think it would be available only to the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Does the Senator know?

Mr. NEW. I think that appropriations all expire with the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It may not necessarily be so. The Senator does not know about it, I take it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Sometimes the expression is used in an appropriation act that "this amount shall be available until it is exhausted," or something to that effect.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It may go over, then?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is hard to say what goes over and what stops at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There is no information as to this $22,000,000. It may run over into the next year.

Mr. NEW. No; I think not; but I am not able to answer that question definitely. The Senator from Wyoming, as chairman of the Appropriations Committee, or the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] may be able to answer this definitely. I have assumed and now believe that the appropriations will lapse if not used before the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. SMOOT. I can say that if the appropriation is not expended by June 30, 1920, it lapses and goes back to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is that so with respect to these aircraft expenditures?

Mr. SMOOT. That is so as to the sum of $22,000,000, of which the Senator speaks as already appropriated, but it would not apply to any appropriation that may be made hereafter to carry out the provisions of the bill.

Mr. NEW. We are speaking of the $22,000,000 that is made available by this transfer and that expires at the end of the fiscal year. That is what I thought.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then the $22,000,000 is not taken into account in calculating the $98,000,000 that is figured for the next year.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. NEW. No; the estimate of $98,000,000 belongs to the next fiscal year.

Mr. WOLCOTT. So the bill carries immediately about $22,000,000, and next year a bill appropriating an amount in line with the estimate will carry nearly $100,000,000 more.

Mr. NEW. Yes; if appropriations are made in line with the estimates.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. NEW. I yield to the Senator from Utah for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to offer certain amendments to section 1 of the bill that will make it sure that the director of air will not be a member of the Cabinet. I desire the Senator from Indiana to follow the amendments, because I think he will agree with me with reference to them.

On line 3, page 1, strike out the words "an executive" before the word "department" and insert the article "a"; after the word "department," in line 4, insert the words "of air"; strike out the last three words, in line 4, "to be known"; and strike out, in line 5, the first five words, "as the department of air," so that as amended it will read:

That there shall be at the seat of government a department of air, reporting direct to the President, and a director of air who shall be the head thereof, who shall be appointed by the President—

And so forth.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NEW. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Utah propose to leave the salary the same as it now stands in the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I have an amendment to offer to that part of the bill also.

Mr. NEW. I accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Has the Senator from Utah an amendment in mind to line 10, where the phrase "other executive departments" occurs?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I have another amendment. The amendment just stated is not the only one which I have. I desire that amendment agreed to, and then I shall propose an amendment to strike out all of the remainder of the clause, beginning with the word "and," on line 8, on page 1, down to and including the word "department," on line 4, page 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 3, it is proposed to strike out the words "an executive" before the word "department" and to insert the article "a"; after the word "department," in line 4, to insert the words "of air"; in lines 4 and 5 to strike out the words "to be known as the department of air"; and beginning in line 8 to strike out the words "and whose term and tenure of office shall be like that of the heads of the other executive departments, and section 158 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to include such department, and the provisions of title 4 of the Revised Statutes, including all amendments thereto, be, and are hereby, made applicable to said department."

Mr. SMOOT. That amendment virtually follows the wording of acts providing for the creation of departments in the Government but not executive departments.

Mr. NEW and Mr. WADSWORTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] has the floor. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New York to ask the Senator from Utah a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I thought the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] had the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. NEW. I merely desire to ask the Senator from Utah if he has in mind an officer with any definite tenure of office?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; the bill does not now fix a tenure, and there is no change whatever proposed in my amendment. The amendment which I now offer is for the purpose of creating a department of air—a separate and distinct department. If it were a division or a bureau it would be placed under some existing department.

I will repeat to the Senator that the amendment which I have proposed virtually follows the wording of the original act creating the Bureau of Labor, which was afterwards made an executive department, first, under the name of the Department of Commerce and Labor; and, secondly, under the name of the Department of Labor, as it now exists. The Air Service would not be an executive department, but would be a department in itself, reporting directly to the President; and the appointment of the head of the department would be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. NEW. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Is it proposed to create a department here which has no connection with any other branch of the Government? Is it to be a part of either the War or the Navy Departments, or is it to be a separate and distinct entity?

Mr. SMOOT. It is to be a separate and distinct entity, if the bill passes.

Mr. BORAH. Then it needs some more sustenance.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that I desire to try to amend the bill in the particulars which I have just stated, and then I shall have no objection to any further amendment which the Senator desires to offer, so far as I am concerned. However, the amendments which I have offered are merely to carry out the purposes of the bill as stated by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. I accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In so far as he can do so, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] accepts the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah. Is there objection to the amendment being adopted?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is no use to object, I presume, but I merely desire to make an observation. What is to be gained by these amendments? What is the objection, if the department is created at all, to making it an executive department? Unless it is going to be made a part of some other department of the Government I do not see anything to be gained. We leave the salary the same; we leave the powers the same.

Mr. SMOOT. We shall not leave the salary the same if I can help it, I will say to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. To change the salary, perhaps, will be a most difficult task.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, on page 1, line 8, before the words "per annum," I move to strike out "$12,000" and to insert "$8,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I can not accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah. I am opposed to large salaries; I do not think we pay them under this Government; but I believe that the man who shall become the head of the new department of air has ahead of him one of the most difficult and important tasks that has ever been undertaken by an individual. I believe that the place demands and is worthy of the time and services of the biggest man in the United States. I believe it is well worthy of the salary that this bill provides; and while it is ordinarily true that large salaries are not always necessary to command the highest ability, it is also true that at least we should not be niggardly. Cabinet officers receive $12,000 a year, and while the man who is to head the air service is not to be a member of the Cabinet, I think no member of the Cabinet has a greater task ahead of him than the man who is to head this new department. That is, of course, a matter of opinion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say in answer to what the Senator from Indiana has just said that a major general, the highest officer in the Army with the single exception of Gen. Pershing, draws $8,000 a year. Why we should pay the director of air 50 per cent more than a major general of the Army receives I can not understand.

Mr. President, while speaking about this particular salary, I wish to refer to another matter which will have to be met in case this bill becomes a law.

In the first place, I am wondering where we are going to house the personnel of this new department, if it shall be created. We have not the room here in the District of Columbia now for them. Several days ago the Fleet Corporation requested the joint commission to furnish space for 1,700 employees whom they desired to bring from Philadelphia to Washington, it being stated that the 1,700 employees of that organization now in Philadelphia ought to be in Washington under the direct charge of the head of the Fleet Corporation. There is no question that that ought to be done, and that the work those employees are doing in Philadelphia now could be done here very much better, and that better supervision could be maintained over them. The commission has been working for about three weeks trying to find room for those 1,700 employees. If we are going to create another department with a large personnel, I do not know just where they are going to be housed. It is true that some of the employees of the new department will be taken from the War Department, some of them from the Navy Department, and some of them perhaps from other existing branches of the Government service; but taking a few men from those departments is not going to allow the Public Buildings Commission to move any part of any other department into the space vacated. So we might just as well look at the situation as it exists to-day and realize that we will have to provide some building here for the personnel of the department of air, if it shall be created. Senators know what that means. The rentals paid by the Government per square foot in the District of Columbia to-day are almost beyond reason. Years ago we used to think if, by way of rent, we paid 30 cents a square foot per annum for the best buildings in the District of Columbia that that was more than the Government ought to pay, but now, in some cases, we are paying as high as $1.57.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. After all this force gets here and is placed in the new building, which must be erected, I wish to ask the Senator if the bill provides for or if the estimates cover the purchase of automobiles for them to ride around in?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not gone into the estimates, Mr. President, as to just what items they are intended to cover, and therefore I can not answer the Senator's question; but if a bill is to be passed for the creation of another department, I do not see what excuse we can offer if we attempt to fix the salary of the head of the department at $12,000 a year. I can not see the consistency of that; and it is for that reason that I have offered the amendment to strike out "$12,000" and insert "$8,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I call for a quorum; I want a yea-and-nay vote on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Henderson	Overman	Townsend
Capper	Johnson, S. Dak.	Phelan	Wadsworth
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Gerry	King	Pittman	Warren
Gronna	Kirby	Poindexter	Williams
Hale	McKellar	Sheppard	Wolcott
Harris	New	Simmons
Harrison	Nugent	Smoot

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] is detained at home by illness, being confined to his bed.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is absent on official business.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] are engaged on business of the Senate in a meeting of the Committee on Commerce.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] are engaged in a meeting of the conference committee on the railroad bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Only 34 Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. SUTHERLAND answered to his name when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Only 35 Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. What is the further pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. NEW. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. WALSH of Montana entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, it is very evident that we can not get a quorum this afternoon. I therefore move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 30, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 29, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in heaven, that Thou hast made us rational beings, and bestowed upon each man an individuality all his own; hence we see life and its issues from different angles, think our own thoughts and reach our own conclusions; act wisely or otherwise, according to our own volitions and follow the bent of our desires.

Though it is not so much what a man does as it is the motive he puts behind his acts: Hence the Master's admonition:

"Judge not that ye be not judged. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.

"And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

"Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye?

"Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye."

That we may live together in harmony and follow the highest conceptions of right, liberty, and truth—doing unto others as we would be done by, for this is the law and the prophets. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. RAINEY of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for indefinite leave of absence for Mr. MANN of South Carolina on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the leave of absence will be granted.

There was no objection.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE AMENDMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the governor of the State of Oregon, announcing the ratification by the legislature of that State of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The doors will be closed, and the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Garland	McCulloch	Sanders, La.
Blackmon	Garrett	McKenzie	Sanford
Booher	Goodall	McKinley, Ill.	Scott
Britten	Goodwin	McLaughlin, Mich.	Scully

Ferris	Lesher	Rubey
Fuller, Mass.	Linthicum	Rucker
Gard	Luhring	Sabath

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 316 Members have answered to their names—a quorum.

On motion of Mr. GOOD, a motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call was agreed to.

URGENT DEFICIENCIES.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12046.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the UNION for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12046, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, in ancient times the messenger who brought evil tidings to the king might expect that he would be instantly put to death. The facts I have to lay before you this morning may expose me to the same fate. They may bring political misfortunes to every man in this Chamber. They may some day be looked back upon as the beginning of that political contest which will have repeated the issue of 1878 and 1896, for, barring the possibility of revolutionary developments, it may be set down as certain that this question is to be the political issue of the years immediately to come. I ask your attention, not to myself—for I have not sought this opportunity—but to the facts that I have to lay before you, facts that have not received the attention of the House nor of the country, and yet are pregnant with the most fateful possibilities.

No more grave crisis has confronted the people since the days immediately before the Civil War. Class is arrayed against class; social, political, and industrial institutions are attacked; millions of our people are suffering under ills arising from conditions which they do not understand. The end of every month finds them poorer in purchasing power than when that month began, forcing them to hardships to which they have never before been accustomed. Daily the cost of living rises, daily unrest spreads, daily there is more suffering from the maladjustment of wages and incomes. So bear with me for just a few minutes while I expose to you, if I can, the causes, the remedy, and the lesson. The fundamental cause I laid before this House on a previous occasion—the enormous waste produced by the war. At that time I pointed out to you the remarkable coincidence between the fact that the total assessed valuation of this country in 1912 was put at $187,000,000,000, and that the expenditures by the principal nations engaged in the war, as set forth in our own official publication, amounted to $186,000,000,000. Since then the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace has computed the other costs, bringing us the amazing total of $338,000,000,000 of economic loss due to the war. You may get some comprehension of what this means when I tell you that it exceeds the money worth of every article, every object, every substance, every structure, every foot of land to which man has attached value between the Arctic Ocean and the Isthmus of Panama. Wealth greater than that of the whole North American Continent has been wasted by the war. The world faces ruin. Its tools are fewer; much of its machinery is destroyed; its fixed capital diminished; its working power lessened by the millions who have perished.

The world is already impoverished. But still coming are losses that may prove greater yet. The morale of the producers of the world has been lamentably weakened, and to-day we find ourselves in this astonishing situation when we ought to be producing more than ever before, when our mills and factories and farms and all our implements of production ought to be doing their utmost, we find ourselves actually producing less, doing less work than we did in the year 1918.

The figures may interest you. Starting with a normal of 100 in 1913, there was a jump in the year after the beginning of the war to 104, then to 109 in 1916, then to 112, and then to 113. That is, under the patriotic impulse we were able in the year 1918 to bring our productive capacity to a point 13 per cent above where it had stood five years before.

But last year, with the war over, with our men returned from the front, with perhaps 3,000,000 more toilers at our command, averaging it through the year, we actually produced less than in 1918. We did less work as measured by the figures representing the physical volume of trade than we did in the preceding 12 months.

It has been shown that in the case of one steel ship, launched not long ago, 400,000 hours of labor were required to get an output, a product, a ship, which was the sister ship of one produced before the war, like it in every particular, by 200,000 hours of labor. The efficiency, the productiveness in that one field, has been just cut in two. You may go through all the range of activities and find results of the same sort. For example, the Pennsylvania Railroad reports that, entirely apart from wages, it now takes 127 men to do the work done by 100 in prewar days. Production has lessened in this crucial year when it ought to have been increased.

At the same time with these factors relating to the supplies, the resources of the world, there has come a startling change in the demand. In the first place, that change has been brought about by the fallacious belief on the part of many toilers that they are richer than they ever were before—that with a $10 bill they now have twice as much money as they formerly had with a $5 bill. This has made them extravagant in the last degree. We had a strike in Boston of the telephone girls, who enlisted the sympathy of the people and had their support on account of the belief that the telephone girls were underpaid. Yesterday I was told of one of them who, having a fur coat she had worn for two or three years, has announced her intention to buy a new one at the price of $500. I could give you scores of other instances showing reckless extravagance on the part of wage earners in this crucial period.

Another feature of the situation to which I particularly want to call your attention, because it is not widely understood, is the effect produced by the increased volume of money. In 1896 I was a member of the party that denounced William J. Bryan for his application of the quantitative theory of money. Many denied the theory itself. Nearly every economist in the world now admits that theory to be correct. We acknowledge that Mr. Bryan was right, but we thank God that we did not adopt his remedy, for had the country accepted his views our plight would have been twice as bad as it is to-day. Mr. Bryan could not foresee that from 1896 to 1920 as much gold would be produced as had been produced since Columbus discovered America. The volume of gold, the foundation of the currency structure, has doubled since the free silver campaign of 1896, and if silver had been remonetized the calamities of the world would have been enormously aggravated.

In addition to the doubling of the volume of the gold, see what has happened to us. I desire to say no word in criticism of the Federal Reserve Board. I admire the system. I think it was a wise contribution to the public welfare, and if gentlemen at my right desire the credit for it, they are welcome to their share. I will not begrudge them that which they deserve. But, sir, the Federal Reserve Board has brought this country to a plight which never could have been foreseen. This may have been made necessary by the financing of the war. Perhaps it could not have been avoided. But at this very moment we face a financial crisis, with all its miseries and suffering, by reason of the Federal Reserve System.

What has it done? Some of you gentlemen, with hair growing thin, remember the greenback agitation of 1878. More of you will remember the Bryan campaign of 1896. What the greenbackers wanted, what Mr. Bryan wanted, what many another extremist desired, was more money. They asked us for fiat money. Sir, there is in circulation in this country $2,000,000,000 of fiat money.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. No, sir. I do not wish to be discourteous, but I have only half an hour. There is $2,000,000,000 of fiat money in circulation to-day. Two billion dollars of fiat money! How much does that amount to for every individual? That, roughly speaking, means $20 of fiat money for every individual in this country.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. No; I can not yield.

Mr. WINGO. But the gentleman does not want to make a misstatement—that it is fiat money, when there is not any.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, let the gentleman look at the sheet that he throws into the wastebasket every morning, the Daily Statement of the United States Treasury.

Mr. WINGO. No. I challenge you to show me where we have $2,000,000,000 of fiat money. And I do not throw the sheet in the wastebasket.

Mr. LUCE. I will read it from the sheet received this morning: Outstanding Federal notes, $3,143,137,948. In the footnote it says, "Against which there is in gold and lawful money $1,126,261,000." Subtract one from the other and you will find $2,000,000,000 based upon credit. Nothing but credit! [Applause on the Republican side.]

That always was fiat money. What you have done is to issue paper currency based upon the credit of the merchants. What we did in and after the Civil War was to issue greenbacks based on the credit of the Government. Where is the difference? Two billion dollars of fiat money. [Applause on the Republican side.]

How does it increase from time to time? Read some of these other things that you throw into the wastebasket. Take, for example, what you got from the Comptroller of the Currency only two or three days ago, where you read that the bank deposits on November 17 were $17,000,000,000, an increase in two months of $786,000,000.

Sir, your Federal reserve notes for the last six months, when there was less production, with less of legitimate need than at any like period since 1916, before we went into the war, have been increasing at the rate of $100,000,000 a month. You are grinding out and grinding out and grinding out the paper with which you are raising the prices and increasing the sufferings of the people. One hundred million dollars a month increase in your fiat money, and at the same time $400,000,000 a month increase in your bank deposits which do the work of money. Since the war began, according to some figures—estimates differ by reason of two scales of measurement—the per capita money in the United States has increased from $34 to $54. There is three times as much money per capita in this country to-day as there was 40 years ago. The amount of gold in this country per capita has increased tenfold in about the same period. Every moment you are swelling the balloon. Do you think that balloon can expand indefinitely? Do you not know from your reading of history what has always happened? Look the thing squarely in the face. You men who want more money spent here, you men who want to amend this bill by additional appropriations, you who want to increase other of our appropriations, for God's sake look the thing in the face. Learn from history.

It was only 102 years ago that, after the Napoleonic wars, in 1818, our fathers faced precisely this same situation. There had been inflation. After the destruction of the first United States bank in 1811 they began creating State banks, which did precisely what the Federal Reserve Board is doing, although, of course, under far different conditions. They ground out paper money, and by 1818 Gov. Clinton had to tell the Legislature of New York what the situation was. He pointed to the disaster threatening on every hand. It came with all the terrors of a financial crisis.

Go on 15 years. You find the second United States bank destroyed in 1833—destroyed by the President whose birthday you Democrats celebrated the other day with such disaster. [Laughter.] When Andrew Jackson had destroyed the second United States bank, immediately again State banks began inflating the currency. From 1833 to 1836 there went on just what is happening now—social unrest and agitation on every hand, envy of the rich by the poor, boundless extravagance, waste—everything as you find it around you to-day. And then there came another great crisis due to inflation.

Travel with me 20 years more. Turn the pages of the newspapers of 1856 and you will find proof after proof of precisely the same condition that prevails to-day, figures showing the extravagance of the workers, speculation on every hand—all due to an inflation of money brought about by the opening of the mines in Australia and in California. Once again inflation worked its inevitable calamity.

In 1873 the results of the inflation of the Civil War appeared, with crisis, disaster, and ruin.

Inflation did not have an important share directly in the crisis of 1893. That was in part due rather to the apprehension of what might come if such theories as those of Mr. Bryan and men believing like him should prevail. It was the forecast there that brought disaster. But the panic of 1907 was a crisis typical of those that are due to inflation.

Once more we find the situation as before all great crises—enormous increase of money, or that which does the work of money; wild speculation; indifference of wage earners; unwillingness to work; slackening of production; social unrest; strikes on every hand; protests against industrial, social, and political conditions—everything forecasting a result that hitherto has been invariable.

At this juncture what should be our course? What can we do about it? It would be idle for me to occupy your attention if I could not apply these facts to our own problems. Nothing can be done by legislation unless you think it necessary to incite your Federal Reserve Board to raise the discount rate still further. There are some of us who think that ought to have begun six months ago. I know very well that the necessary financing by the Treasury interposed an obstacle which made it seem wise for the Federal Reserve Board to postpone action. They knew what was coming. They realized the danger, but they postponed action, perhaps unavoidably. I will utter no word of criticism.

A month ago they began what some of us wish could have been done before. They began raising the discount rate. This month they have raised it still further. Speed their action. Encourage them at every opportunity to put on the brakes to prevent this constant increase in rediscounting commercial paper, which is threatening us with so much peril.

Why, sir, the agencies of the Treasury Department itself do not understand what is happening. Let me call the attention of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] to another publication which perchance he throws into the wastebasket. It is a bulletin from the Comptroller of the Currency. The copy in my hand came early in the week. In it he boasts, as he has boasted month after month all winter, of the inflation of the bank deposits, the increase in the things that do the work of money, that are adding to our danger.

The first thing I wish my Democratic friends to do is to wake up their own administration and have the Comptroller of the Currency send out this news with grief rather than with joy. We can do nothing by legislation. There is no opportunity to change the psychology of the people. The program of work and save has been urged, and it has utterly failed. The reports of the Federal Reserve Bulletin show that fact. You can not persuade the people in this matter by political, moral, ethical, spiritual, or any other kind of appeal. They will not listen to you. Your arguments, facts, and figures will fall on deaf ears. If these figures I have given were placed before any popular audience, you would find that the expenditures of no man present had the next day fallen one cent.

What is proposed? The popular remedy for the situation is that being put into effect by the Attorney General of the United States, who to that end is using our money, and I am ashamed of myself for taking a share in putting it at his command. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

He is using it to prosecute profiteers, as if a man attacked with appendicitis should devote his energies to catching fleas. [Laughter.] Last month he said he was thankful to report to the people of the United States that the cost of living in November was not any higher than it had been in August. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

On the very same day Dr. Royal Meeker, a gentleman of whom you on the Democratic side of the House may well be more proud, dared to come out and tell the public that if every profiteer in the land was convicted the next morning the cost of living would not be reduced one cent. I will put the statistician against the politician, and I will put my money on the statistician. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Profiteers and jail sentences. Sir, we can not remedy it in that way. We can not remedy it by any act of Government, but we can do something that will lessen the burden that the people are to bear when the days of adversity come.

Men will then realize that the purchasing power of money is in reality less than ever before in our lifetime, and that the lack of purchasing power brings starvation and death. Then will come the reckoning, then you will be asked what burden you have added to that upon the shoulders of the people.

Do you realize what confronts us? At this moment the taxes placed on the people by the different cities in the United States for their own affairs amount to nearly $150 a family. You may add the burden of the United States taxes by remembering that every billion dollars of tax amounts to $45 for every family.

Mr. MONDELL has called our attention to the fact that for the year 1921 we are confronted by obligations and estimates of $9,000,000,000—$5,000,000,000 for the estimates and $4,000,000,000 obligations. Nine billion dollars means an addition of more than $400 of contribution from every family. Add that to your $150 for city expenses, and throw in something for State and county expenses, and you will have confronting you a burden on the people averaging more than $550 for every family in the land.

I do not know how much the income of a family in this country is now. By reason of the change in prices it is impossible to compute, but before the war it was carefully figured out by Prof. W. I. King, and he found that the average income of each family was $1,500. On that basis five hundred and fifty dollars would mean taking more than one-third of the product of labor in this country for the uses of the Government—more than one-third of the product of every man, woman, and child in this country who works for a living. Do not carry away the idea that such a figure is exact. By reason of the change in values of money, the proportion will more probably be one-quarter or one-fifth. The estimate in England for a normal year in the post-war period is 20 per cent, one-fifth of the income of Great Britain. After the Napoleonic wars England was capable of standing one-quarter, but England is better off in her prospects now than she was after the Napoleonic wars. To take even one-fifth of the product of the people is a tremendous demand. It is fraught with danger of political turmoil, of financial crisis, even of disaster to our institutions and peril to the foundations of the Government.

So let me lay before you these facts for the sole purpose of making you understand, if I can, the menace that is ahead of us. I hope it may not come. The Federal Reserve System was devised with the desire and hope that it would lessen the evils brought about by such a state of affairs, that it would do the work of the mattress placed on the floor of the gymnasium, so that the athlete may fall without harm.

That system has never met the test. It has not yet faced the test. The system was devised in order that when we need money in the time of a pinch, in the hour of trouble, we may turn to it and get from it help. But at this very moment you find it so expanded with its $3,000,000,000 of reserve notes outstanding that I dread to think what would happen if the crisis came to-morrow. You have used up the greater part of your reserve power by reason of the necessities of the war. No criticism should attach. It was perhaps inevitable that this should have been done. I do not know that I would have changed in any way the financial procedure of the Secretary of the Treasury in the last five years. I do recognize the position to which it has brought us—that the system, designed to take up the slack, designed to meet the emergency, has to-day placed us in a very dangerous position if the demand should come unexpectedly and before the raising of the discount rate has greatly lessened inflation.

Let me also remind you of the opportunities that come before us from time to time to attempt in some way to repress speculation by the passage of what are known as blue-sky laws, to attempt to prevent the swindlers who to-day are promoting hundreds and hundreds of wild schemes, from endangering the situation still further.

Mr. Chairman, this has not been a cheerful speech. It is never a happy thing to predict disaster. I hope that we may save the situation yet, I hope that somehow we may muddle through without the crisis that always in previous epochs has followed similar conditions, but it is time for us to open our eyes, time for us to know that we are entering upon another great discussion of money, time for us to realize that we ought to understand whether we are going to pay our debt now or postpone its payment, whether we are going to deflate the currency and bring it back to where it was before the war, whether we are going to return the activities of Government to that stage which amply met the needs of the people but a few short years ago. Sir, if I have encouraged one man here to stand up against additional appropriations, to stand up against additional outlays, to stand up against new ventures on the uncharted sea of government, I shall be thankful for this opportunity, even though it discloses to you facts that may well give pause to every thoughtful citizen. [Prolonged applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. LUCE was granted leave to extend and revise his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has just taken his seat has announced a rather strange doctrine—a doctrine that I can not subscribe to. The gentleman in his complaint against the big deposits of money in the various banks of the country under a Democratic administration would have us believe that these large deposits do not indicate that the people are at all prosperous, but that these deposits are rather to be considered as proof of their impoverished condition. The announcement of such an absurd proposition does indicate that the Republican Party is lacking in ordinary judgment and is also in a desperate condition. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I will say this for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], he has rendered the people of the United States a great service in announcing thus early the purpose of his party to repeal the Federal reserve act. Gentlemen, that great act is the wisest and best banking and currency law ever written. It broke the power of Wall Street to control the money supply and the credit of the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It took the control of the money supply and the credit of the country out of the hands of 21 men in Wall Street. Under Republican rule these men held the business of the banks and the commercial and agricultural interests of the country in the hollow of their hands. They could call a meeting of the conspirators and produce a panic in 24 hours. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They could destroy market values of anything and everything overnight. By striking down values and impoverishing the mass of the people they could and did produce millionaires in a few hours. The people of the Nation cried out for deliverance from the oppression and robbery of that dreadful system, but the Republican Party would not and could not grant that relief, because the bosses of that party were controlled by, and got money from, this conscienceless Wall Street gang. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And now you are courting favor with the same old gang. They want to repeal the Federal reserve banking act. They want their old system restored.

And you want them to come with purse strings unloosed, with a big campaign fund for the Republican Party, and we are threatened with a return to the same old robber banking and currency system that cursed the country under Republican rule. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen, it is fortunate for the people of the country that the Republican Party has thus far in advance of the election in November announced its intention regarding the Federal reserve act. This banking and currency system, enacted and inaugurated by the Democratic administration, has unfettered the money supply of the country and permitted it to flow out into all sections. When the farmers needed it to move their crops, when industrial centers and manufacturing enterprises and commerce called for money to carry on their business, this great banking system has permitted the money of the people to go where it could serve the great needs of the great business of the country. Now this great system is marked for slaughter by the Republican Party. You Republicans have been in power in both branches of Congress since March last year. You forced an extra session of Congress in order that you might give the country the benefit of Republican statecraft, skill, and genius in solving the perplexing problems of the day. What have you got to show for these long months of tenure in office in the House and in the Senate? You have done nothing for our soldiers, but you took the tax off of soda water and put it on pearl buttons, and now you can at least, gentlemen, hang this ornament of Republican accomplishment upon the snout of the Grand Old Party elephant in the next campaign. [Laughter.] What have you done to bring down the high cost of living? One of your leaders [Mr. LUCE], who has just spoken for his party, has told us that the cost of living was higher in December than it was in August. You were in control of the House and Senate on both dates mentioned by him. Think of such an admission as that! So poverty stricken are you in able and versatile statesmanship that you are now offering a reward to schoolboys in their teens who know nothing of your party's record of duplicity and failure to write you a national Republican platform. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

You first went to men much older in years in quest of some one to write you a party platform, and one by one they made excuse. Each one of them recalled your miserable record of bossism, of graft, and governmental favoritism and subserviency to predatory interests, and he shook his head. One after another they walked away, and then you said let us have Mr. Hays, the chairman of the Republican national committee, to offer a big prize in money—$10,000—to any schoolboy, white or black, who will write us a Republican platform with which to fool the people in the coming campaign. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

That is the awful and pitiable condition to which the present-day Republican Party has fallen. You promised last fall that if intrusted with control of the House and Senate you would uphold the President, but instead of doing that you have held him up every chance you got. In the name of all that is patriotic, right, and just what have you done? Nothing of benefit to the American people. Why is it that you refuse to let us vote upon measures that would relieve the minds and gratify the hearts of American soldiers who fought for us and our country in the bloodiest war of the ages? You are afraid to take a stand; afraid to go on record.

You want to wait until after the presidential election. Why is it that you are hurrying to adjourn Congress by the 1st of June? Because you do not want to be embarrassed by the Democrats, who will be urging you to do something of value for the American people. You have agreed upon a program of postponement until after the election. That is what you have done. All meritorious measures must wait while you play politics. Gentlemen, it is fortunate for the Democratic Party, and therefore fortunate for the country, that the people have had a chance to see you in power in the House and Senate at this particular time, because they have had an opportunity to observe your conduct and find out your deep-laid plans should you elect a President and a Congress. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The Bible tells us that "By their fruits ye shall know them," and you have given the American people the opportunity to see and know something of the awful and bitter fruit that your administration would yield should you be intrusted with both executive and legislative power. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You have got little political smelling committees, many of them, giving Republican politicians jobs, paying some of the experts $50 a day, and what have you discovered? What are you doing? You are dallying, delaying, putting off, postponing, playing politics, when so many grave questions are crying out for intelligent and patriotic consideration. You are playing presidential politics—but you do not know whether you will nominate Gov. Lowden, Senator HARDING, or Gen. Wood. [Cries of "Do you know?"]

No; I will state frankly that I do not know who will be the nominee of the Democratic Party, but, whoever he is, he will be the choice of the rank and file of the Democratic Party and the Nation.

The conduct of the pie and power hungry bosses of your party indicate that you are going to nominate a man who is O. K'd by the friends of the old banking system of Wall Street, a man who will have the same backing of those who purchased the Newberry election. You are seeking a man that has money or who can get it by the millions. You are not going to appeal to the judgment and the conscience of the American voters. Your party management has already done enough to indicate to the country that you are going to seek to corrupt the voters and to poison the very source of the Republic's life in order to put your party in power. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But you are not going to succeed. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, we were met a few minutes ago with the statement here that we were flooding the country with fiat money, a statement made by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE]. As I have always understood the proposition, when you said "fiat money" you meant money issued without an adequate reserve for its redemption; and I think the gentleman from Massachusetts will agree with that proposition.

The gentleman refers to the reports of the Treasury of the United States which we receive from time to time, and he says that we are increasing the inflation from time to time. If he will look carefully at the reports of the Treasury he will find that for every Federal reserve note there is in circulation there is a gold reserve in the United States Treasury and in the Federal reserve banks running nearly to 50 cents upon the dollar, the highest reserve that any civilized nation has ever been known to maintain against its note issues.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; not just now. I have not the time. The gentleman says the inflation is what is destroying our industrial fabric. Now, the gentleman evidently wants to hark back to the days when money was controlled by private institutions known as national banks. When he refers to fiat money, with 40 per cent minimum gold reserve against every dollar, what does he ask us to return to but the old national-bank notes, with 5 per cent of gold as a reserve fund, with which this country was flooded for 50 years during the administration of the party which the gentleman represents and which he would have take charge again?

Not only that, but the Federal reserve notes are issued as the emergency arises and are retired as rapidly, while the 5 per cent secured bank notes were issued at the beck and call and will of the great national banks of this country, and when they decided to contract the currency and bring on a bankers' panic, as they did in 1907, all they had to do was to turn down their thumbs and withdraw from circulation a hundred or two millions of bank notes and the currency was contracted, with money scarce, and everything a man had to sell going down and the purchasing power of the dollar held by the national bank going up.

But I want to see about the gentleman's figures. He says that we are continuing to expand. Let us see if the gentleman read his reports, which he intimates the balance of us did not read. I will show you that instead of expanding, during the good month just now running, which he has cited, we have contracted the difference between $96,000,000 and $262,000,000.

In other words, during the month of January—and it is written on the face of the report that the gentleman flaunted here as if he were the only man that read it—that during this month of January they have issued $96,170,000 of Federal reserve notes and they have retired $242,112,000 and they have redeemed at the Treasury $20,000,000 more. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This is a reduction of $165,942,000, and leaves actually in circulation outside of the reserve banks $2,795,000,000 of reserve notes.

Does that continue? Let us look a little further. In 1917, when we went into this war, we had—and he talks about the flood of money we have in circulation—on the 1st day of April $45.35 for each citizen of the United States. What have we to-day? On December 1, the last statement that I have in my hand, we have $55.65, an increase of only $10 for each man, woman, and child, in circulation during the time of the most extraordinary financial transactions and the most remarkable spread and the most remarkable call for inflation that has ever been seen. We have increased it nearly $10 a head, or $1,000,000,000.

My friend says we are going on increasing. Let us look for one minute. If he will look at some more of the reports, he will learn some more. On November 1, 1918, the circulating medium for per capita was $55.84; to-day it is $55.34. Is that an increase? Not only that, but let us look at January, 1919, just 12 months ago. The circulating medium per capita was then $55.76 and to-day it is only $55.34—not an expansion of $1 per capita, but a contraction of about 50 cents per capita in the United States in the 12 months.

And the gentleman says expansion is the cause of our ills. Well, our troubles began when the war closed, and we have not expanded, but instead of that we have contracted; and yet the ills have arisen. There is no expansion shown when you appeal to the record which he commends to us to be read.

Now, let us see. He talked about the increase in the issue of Federal reserve notes, and that is true. Why was that embarked upon? Because we had when we began about $900,000,000 of gold certificates outstanding, and for every gold certificate outstanding there was a gold dollar down here to be delivered for it upon presentation. The gold reserves of the world had to be cared for and built up in order that we might have the money with which to finance the great World War in which we had entered, and the Government entered upon the very wise policy of withdrawing the gold certificates; and when you did, when you took a $1,000 gold certificate in, you released a thousand dollars and that thousand dollars of gold went to be a reserve against $2,500 of Federal reserve notes, and it therefore enabled us to finance the war and keep this country on a gold basis. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The fact is that the report the gentleman uses is the Treasury report, and charges up all Federal reserve notes in the hands of the Federal reserve agents and that is not in circulation till put out by the banks. The bank statement shows that there is in circulation $2,795,000,000 of Federal reserve notes, and under section 616, subdivisions a, b, c, d, and f, 40 per cent gold reserve must be maintained and 5 per cent must be in United States Treasury fund. Counting the settlement fund and general fund, the gold in the Treasury amounts to $1,452,795,302, or 49 per cent of all Federal reserve notes actually outstanding.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MACGREGOR). The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Is it not a fact also that we are the only great country in the world that has been able to maintain the gold standard?

Mr. STEVENSON. That is entirely true.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. May I have more time?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I regret very much that I have not any.

Mr. STEVENSON. Very well. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to revise and extend my remarks. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request, to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, attacks against the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD are made unremittingly by newspapers and some individuals uninformed as to its real value. I, too, once had this prejudice. No one can deny that much goes into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which should be left out. No one can deny that it costs much money. No one can deny that it is not generally read. But the fact remains that it is the only publication in the whole United States that publishes without censorship just exactly what each Representative in Congress wants to say to his own constituents and to the people of this country.

After all, the press of the country is controlled by the same influences that restrain individuals. Newspapers continually howl about the law restricting "the freedom of the press," yet never mention in how many thousand ways the press is hampered, restricted, dominated, and controlled by special class interests, against which no attacks or news of a criticizing nature is ever given to the reading public.

Regardless of its cost, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is the best investment our Government owns to-day, and the people of the country get from it more real value than from any other like sum of money spent by Congress. As conclusive proof, the only illustration necessary to offer is the fact that only through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is it possible for the people of the United States to know who and what has stopped Congress from passing a much needed and proper antisedition law. No newspaper in the whole United States has dared to publish the truth about it. Why? It would mean boycott and ruin by a small organized minority.

Now, let me incorporate in the RECORD a little chronological history. On October 28, 1919, I introduced in the House an antisedition bill, being H. R. 10235. On November 5, 1919, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] introduced an antisedition bill, H. R. 10379. On November 17, 1919, three different antisedition bills were introduced in the House; one by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS], H. R. 10614; another by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HADLEY], H. R. 10616; and a third by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY], H. R. 10650, which last-mentioned bill was specially prepared by Attorney General Palmer as being a law absolutely necessary to enable him to put down active anarchy in the United States, and which bill was introduced at his instance and request; and on December 11, 1919, an additional antisedition bill was introduced in the House by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL], H. R. 11089.

All of the said bills were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which, on December 11, 1919, began a hearing at which appeared and were heard seven Congressmen representing a constituency of at least 1,750,000 people of the United States, they being Representatives BYRNES of South Carolina, DAVEY, SUMMERS of Washington, SIEGEL, MACGREGOR, HADLEY, and myself, all urging the immediate passage of a proper antisedition measure. Likewise at this hearing Mr. James A. Horton, a Government employee, testified that since the armistice the radical element throughout the country had renewed their activities in the United States on a broader scale than ever attempted before, and that he knew of 60 different newspapers published in various languages all devoted to the cause of radicalism—25 of them in New York and the others scattered from there to Seattle. Let me quote the following from Mr. Horton's testimony, pages 19 and 20 of the hearings, to wit:

I want to impress upon the committee the fact that this is not a national movement; it is international in its scope. The Bolshevist or radical revolutionary movement, you might say, can be traced back to what is called the Third International Communist Congress, held in Moscow in March, 1919. It was assembled at the call of the congress of the communist party (Bolsheviki), held during the latter part of January, 1919, in which they sent out a call to all the radical elements throughout the world, and I want to read you some of the statements contained in that call for the revolutionary international congress that convened in March, 1919:

"[First section.]

"AIMS AND TACTICS.

"In our estimation, the acceptance of the following principles shall serve as a working program for the international:

"1. The actual period is the period of the dissolution and collapse of the whole capitalist system.

"2. The first task of the proletariat consists to-day of the immediate seizure of government power, substituting in its place the power of the proletariat.

"3. This new governmental apparatus must incorporate the dictatorship of the working class and in some places also that of the poorer peasantry, together with hired farm labor, this dictatorship constituting the instrument of the systematic overthrow of the exploiting classes.

"4. The dictatorship of the proletariat shall complete the immediate expropriation of capitalism and the suppression of private property in means of production, which includes, under socialism, the suppression of private property and its transfer to a proletarian state, under the socialist administration of the working class, the abolition of capitalist agricultural production, the nationalization of the great business firms and financial trusts.

"5. In order to insure the social revolution, the disarming of the bourgeoisie and its agents and the general arming of the proletariat is a prime necessity.

"[Second section.]

"ATTITUDE REGARDING SOCIALIST PARTIES.

"7. The fundamental condition of the struggle is the mass action of the proletariat, developing into open armed attack on the governmental powers of capitalism."

Now, in that call, after enumerating various radical groups in the European countries, it includes the following in America:

"33. The S. L. P. (U. S. A.); 34. The elements of the left wing of the American Socialist Party (tendency represented by E. V. Debs and the Socialist Propaganda League); 35. I. W. W. (Industrial Workers of the World), America; 36. The Workers' International Industrial Union (U. S. A.)."

Mr. HUSTED. Under existing law, can't publications of that kind be stopped?

Mr. HORTON. I don't see how. The only law to-day that is holding them in check is the espionage act.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Hasn't the Postmaster General plenary power to stop stuff like that from going through the mails?

Mr. HORTON. I don't see where his power is.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Hasn't he exercised power along that line during the war?

Mr. HORTON. Under the espionage act; yes.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. The espionage act is still in force, isn't it?

Mr. HORTON. Yes.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Why isn't he enforcing it?

Mr. HORTON. It is being enforced. The espionage act, however, was a war measure and it is a mighty hard proposition to secure a conviction in peace times under a war-time statute.

Mr. NEELY. And the war will probably end soon.

Mr. HORTON. Yes.

Mr. YATES. Doesn't the espionage act specifically provide for things like this?

Mr. HORTON. I don't believe there is any provision in the espionage act covering matter of this character.

If the committee will let me continue this, I will outline briefly what happened at the meeting of the Third International, in order that I may connect up various organizations now in existence in America.

The Third International met in Moscow in March, 1919, and I have before me the manifesto of what is known as the Communist International, signed by Lenin, Zinoview, Trotski, Platten, and Rakovsky. I believe those men at that time, if not now, were all in the ministry of the soviet republic.

Mr. MORGAN. And what is this you have in your hand?

Mr. HORTON. This is the manifesto of the Communist International.

Mr. MORGAN. Where did you get it?

Mr. HORTON. It was printed in The Truth, published in Duluth, Minn.

Mr. MORGAN. What date?

Mr. HORTON. The issue of July 18.

Mr. MORGAN. How do you know that is authentic?

Mr. HORTON. This is the same manifesto that has been printed in a great many of these publications. I don't know what more proof would be required than that they accept it as the program under which they are working.

It is stated that the text of this manifesto was received direct from Moscow and is addressed "To the proletariat of all countries." In order that the committee may have before it the outstanding features of this manifesto, I will read the most important parts. In the second paragraph of this manifesto is the following statement:

"We communists, representatives of the revolutionary proletariat of the different countries of Europe, America, and Asia, assembled in soviet Moscow, feel and consider ourselves followers and fulfillers of the program proclaimed 72 years ago. It is our task now to sum up the practical revolutionary experience of the working class, to cleanse the movement of its admixtures of opportunism and social patriotism, and to gather together the forces of all the true revolutionary proletarian parties in order to further and hasten the complete victory of the communist revolution."

Further on I find the following statement:

"Wherever the masses are awakened to consciousness, workers', soldiers', and peasants' councils will be formed. To fortify these councils, to increase their authority, to oppose them to the State apparatus to the bourgeoisie, is now the chief task of the class-conscious and honest workers of all countries. By means of these councils the working class can counteract that disorganization which has been brought into it by the infernal anguish of the war, by hunger, by the violent deeds of the possessing classes, and by the betrayal of their former leaders. By means of these councils the working class will gain power in all countries most readily and most certainly when these councils gain the support of the majority of the laboring population. By means of these councils the working class, once attaining power, will control all the field of economic and cultural life, as in soviet Russia.

"The collapse of the imperialistic State, czaristic to most democratic, goes on simultaneously with the collapse of the imperialistic military system. The armies of millions, mobilized by imperialism, could remain steadfast only so long as the proletariat remained obedient under the yoke of the bourgeoisie. The complete breakdown of national unity signifies also an inevitable disintegration of the army. Thus it happened first in Russia, then in Austria-Hungary, then in Germany. The same also is to be expected in other imperialistic States. Insurrection of the peasants against the landowner, of laborer against capitalist, of both against the monarchic or 'democratic' bureaucracy, must lead inevitably to the insurrection of soldier against commander, and, furthermore, to a sharp division between the proletarian and bourgeois elements within the army. The imperialistic war which pitted nation against nation has passed and is passing into the civil war which lines up class against class.

"The outcry of the bourgeois world against the civil war and the red terror is the most colossal hypocrisy of which the history of political struggles can boast. There would be no civil war if the exploiters who have carried mankind to the very brink of ruin had not prevented every forward step of the laboring masses, if they had not instigated plots and murders and called to their aid armed help from outside to maintain or restore their predatory privileges. Civil war is forced upon the laboring classes by their arch enemies. The working class must answer blow for blow if it will not renounce its own object and its own future, which is at the same time the future of all humanity.

"The communist parties, far from conjuring up civil war artificially, rather strive to shorten its duration as much as possible—in case it has become an iron necessity—to minimize the number of its victims, and above all to secure victory for the proletariat. This makes necessary the disarming of the bourgeoisie at the proper time, the arming of the laborer, and the formation of a communist army as the protector of the rule of the proletariat and the inviolability of the social structure. Such is the Red Army of soviet Russia, which arose to protect the achievements of the working class against every assault from within or without. The soviet army is inseparable from the soviet State."

The concluding paragraph of the main part of the manifesto, in which the task of the International Communist Party is set out, is as follows:

"Spurning the half-heartedness, hypocrisy, and corruption of the decadent official Socialist parties, we, the Communists assembled in the third international, feel ourselves to be the first successors of the heroic efforts and martyrdom of a long series of revolutionary generations from Babœuf to Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg. As the first international foresaw the future development and pointed the way; as the second international gathered together and organized millions of the proletarians, so the third international is the international of open mass action of the revolutionary realization, the international of deeds. Socialist criticism has sufficiently stigmatized the bourgeois world order. The task of the International Communist Party is now to overthrow this order and to erect in its place the structure of the socialist world order. We urge the working men and women of all countries to unite under the communist banner, the emblem under which the first great victories have already been won.

"Proletarians of all countries! In the war against imperialistic barbarity, against monarchy, against the privileged classes, against the bourgeois state and bourgeois property, against all forms and varieties of social and national oppression—unite!

"Under the standard of the workmen's councils, under the banner of the third international, in the revolutionary struggle for power and the dictatorship of the proletariat, proletarians of all countries unite!"

The second part of this manifesto contains the program of the Communist International, the first four paragraphs of which read as follows:

"PROGRAM.

"The new era has begun! The era of the downfall of capitalism—its internal disintegration. The epoch of the proletarian communist revolution. In some countries, victorious proletarian revolution; increasing revolutionary ferment in other lands; uprisings in the colonies; utter incapacity of the ruling classes to control the fate of peoples any longer—that is the picture of world conditions to-day.

"Humanity, whose whole culture now lies in ruins, faces danger of complete destruction. There is only one power which can save it—the power of the proletariat. The old capitalist 'order' can exist no longer. The ultimate result of the capitalistic mode of production is chaos—a chaos to be overcome only by the great producing class, the proletariat. It is the proletariat which must establish real order—the order of communism. It must end the domination of capital, make war impossible, wipe out State boundaries, transform the whole world into one cooperative commonwealth, and bring about real human brotherhood and freedom.

"World capitalism prepares itself for the final battle. Under cover of the 'league of nations' and a deluge of pacifist phrase (?) mongering, a desperate effort is being made to pull together the tumbling capitalist system and to direct its forces against the constantly growing proletarian revolt. This monstrous new conspiracy of the capitalist class must be met by the proletariat by seizure of the political power of the State, turning this power against its class enemies and using it as a lever to set in motion the economic revolution. The final victory of the proletariat of the world means the beginning of the real history of free mankind.

"THE CONQUEST OF POLITICAL POWER.

"Seizure of political power by the proletariat means destruction of the political power of the bourgeoisie. The organized power of the bourgeoisie is in the civil state, with its capitalistic army under control of bourgeois junker officers, its police and gendarmes, jailers, and judges, its priests, government officials, etc. Conquest of the political power means not merely a change in the personnel of ministries but annihilation of the enemy's apparatus of government; disarmament of the bourgeoisie, of the counterrevolutionary officers, of the White Guard; arming of the proletariat, the revolutionary soldiers, the Red Guard of workingmen; displacement of all bourgeois judges and organization of proletarian courts; elimination of control by reactionary government officials and substitution of new organs of management of the proletariat. Victory of the proletariat. Victory of the proletariat consists in shattering the enemy's organization and organizing the proletarian power; in the destruction of the bourgeois and upbuilding of the proletarian state apparatus. Not until the proletariat has achieved this victory and broken the resistance of the bourgeoisie can the former enemies of the new order be made useful by bringing them into accord with its work."

Further on in this program I find the following statement:

"The breakdown of the capitalistic order and the disruption of capitalistic industrial discipline makes impossible the reorganization of production on the capitalistic basis. Wage wars of the workingmen—even when successful—do not bring the anticipated betterment of conditions of living; the workers can only become emancipated when production is no longer controlled by the bourgeoisie but by the proletariat. In order to raise the standards of productivity, in order to crush the opposition on the part of the bourgeoisie (which only prolongs the death struggle of the old régime and thereby invites danger of total ruin), the proletarian dictatorship must carry out the exportation of the greater bourgeoisie and junkerdom and convert the means of production and distribution into the common property of the proletarian state.

"Communism is now being born out of the ruins of capitalism—there is no other salvation for humanity. The opportunists who are making Utopian demands for the reconstruction of the economic system of capitalism, so as to postpone socialization, only delay the process of disintegration and increase the danger of total demolition. The communist revolution, on the other hand, is the best, the only, means by which the most important social power of production—the proletariat—can be saved, and with it society itself."

The way to victory is pointed out in the following language:

"The revolutionary era compels the proletariat to make use of the means of battle which will concentrate its entire energies, namely, mass action, with its logical resultant, direct conflict with the governmental machinery in open combat. All other methods, such as revolutionary use of bourgeois parliamentarism, will be of only secondary significance."

The manifesto concludes as follows:

"The capitalistic criminals asserted at the beginning of the World War that it was only in defense of the common fatherland. But soon German imperialism revealed its real brigand character by its bloody deeds in Russia, in the Ukraine, and in Finland. Now, the Entente States unmask themselves as world despoilers and murderers of the proletariat. Together with the German bourgeoisie and social patriots, with hypocritical phrases about peace on their lips, they are trying to throttle the revolution of the European proletariat by means of their war machinery and stupid barbaric colonial soldiery. Indescribable is the white terror of the bourgeois cannibals. Incalculable are the sacrifices of the working class. Their best—Liebknecht, Rosa Luxemburg—they have lost. Against this the proletariat must defend itself, defend at any price. The communist international calls the entire world proletariat to this final struggle.

"Down with the imperial conspiracy of capital!

"Long live the international republic of the proletarian councils!"

Now, gentlemen, I wish to take the time right now to connect up some of the revolutionary organizations that are in existence in this country to-day, and show you that they are followers of and advocate the principles which have been laid down in this manifesto of the Communist International. In order to give you a comprehensive view of the situation I might state that the Socialist Party held an emergency national convention at Chicago on September 1, 1919, as a result of agitation within the party to compel it to assume a more revolutionary basis, and this convention resulted in the withdrawal of the extreme radical elements in the party and the formation of two new parties, under the names of the Communist Party, headed by Fraina, Ferguson, and Ruthenberg; and the Communist Labor Party, headed by Wagenknecht, Carney, Gitlow, John Reed, and various others. Both these new parties held conventions in Chicago immediately upon their withdrawal from the Socialist Party, and adopted manifestoes and drew up party constitutions. These latter two parties have definitely accepted the manifesto and program of the Communist International, as I will show you from their own documents, and it is my understanding that the Socialist Party is now taking a referendum vote among its members on the question of affiliating with the so-called third international.

I have before me a copy of the September 27, 1919, issue of the Communist, the national organ of the Communist Party, published at Chicago, Ill., and I desire to put into the record the following statements from the "Communist Party manifesto" as adopted and issued by the convention of the Communist Party, the introduction to which reads as follows:

"The world is on the verge of a new era. Europe is in revolt. The masses of Asia are stirring uneasily. Capitalism is in collapse. The workers of the world are seeing a new life and securing new courage. Out of the night of war is coming a new day.

"The specter of communism haunts the world of capitalism. Communism, the hope of the workers to end their misery and oppression.

"The workers of Russia smashed the front of international capitalism and imperialism. They broke the chains of the terrible war, and in the midst of agony, starvation, and the attacks of capitalists of the world they are creating a new social order.

"The class war rages fiercely in all nations. Everywhere the workers are in a desperate struggle against their capitalist masters. The call to action has come. The workers must answer the call.

"The Communist Party of America is the party of the working class. The Communist Party proposes to end capitalism and organize a workers' industrial republic. The workers must control industry and dispose of the products of industry. The Communist Party is a party realizing the limitations of all existing workers' organizations, and proposes to develop the revolutionary movement necessary to free the workers from the oppression of capitalism. The Communist Party insists that the problems of the American workers are identical with the problems of the workers of the world."

The party constitution, as adopted by the convention of the Communist Party, contains the following provisions in regard to membership:

"I. NAME AND PURPOSE.

"SECTION 1. The name of this organization shall be the Communist Party of America. Its purpose shall be the education and organization of the working class for the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat, the abolition of the capitalist system, and the establishment of the communist society.

"Every person who accepts the principles and tactics of the Communist Party and the Communist International and agrees to engage actively in the work of the party shall be eligible to membership. It is the aim of this organization to have in its ranks only those who participate actively in its work.

"SEC. 2. Applicants for membership shall sign an application card reading as follows: 'The undersigned, after having read the constitution and program of the Communist Party, declares his adherence to the principles and tactics of the party and the Communist International; agrees to submit to the discipline of the party as stated in its constitution, and pledges himself to engage actively in its work.'"

These statements, gentlemen, more than anything I can possibly say, definitely align this party with the third international, under the leadership of Trotski and Lenin.

I have before me a copy of the Ohio Socialist, issue of September 17, 1919, the name of which has now been changed to the Toiler, which contains the official proceedings of the Communist Labor Party convention, and also the platform and program of the party itself. I might also state that this publication is published in the interests of the Communist Labor Party, one of the editors being Alfred Wagenknecht, who is the executive secretary of that party. I desire to put into the record the following statements taken from their platform:

"1. The Communist Labor Party of the United States of America declares itself in full harmony with the revolutionary working class parties of all countries and stands by the principles stated by the third international, formed at Moscow.

* * * * * * *

"3. With them it also fully realizes the crying need for an immediate change in the social system; it realizes that the time for parleying and compromise has passed; and that now it is only the question whether all power remains in the hands of the capitalist or is taken by the working class."

From the program of the party, the following statements occur:

"1. We favor international alliance of the Communist Labor Party only with the communist groups of other countries, those which have affiliated with the communist international.

"2. We are opposed to association with other groups not committed to the revolutionary class struggle."

That, gentlemen, more than anything I can possibly put before you shows you the international and revolutionary aspect of this movement and the serious menace that it offers to the institutions of our Government. One of the gentlemen here asked if this movement was gaining many adherents. I can tell you this movement has now thousands of adherents and is gaining in strength every day.

Mr. MORGAN. Can you give us an idea of the number inside of the Socialist Party?

Mr. HORTON. The old-line Socialists' last statement shows 30,000 as dues-paying members; you know you are not a member of that party unless you pay your dues. The last statement of the Communist Party shows 60,000 or 70,000 members.

Mr. YATES. Which has the largest membership, the Communist-Labor or Communist?

Mr. HORTON. The Communist Party.

Mr. MORGAN. Have you collected any statistics—do you know anything about that?

Mr. HORTON. That is a matter on which I am now working. We are checking up their locals, their publications, etc.

Mr. MORGAN. Do you know whether the Department of Justice knows whether they have made any inventory of the men? Do they know who they are?

Mr. HORTON. The report of the Attorney General calls attention to the fact that they have indexes on 60,000 radicals.

Mr. BYRNES. How many of these publications are now being circulated through the mails?

Mr. HORTON. I should say there are 200 foreign-language papers and better than 100 English papers. And you must take into consideration the fact that there is imported into this country, I think the last figures showed, 144 radical papers, mostly anarchistic, from South American and European countries.

Mr. YATES. Are these regularly organized? Do they have regular meetings?

Mr. HORTON. Yes, sir.

And, Mr. Chairman, every person who appeared before the Judiciary Committee in behalf of antisedition legislation showed conclusively that such legislation and legislation with teeth in it is sadly needed by the Government, and that same must be passed if we make this Republic safe against the hellish conspiracies of anarchy.

Let me quote the following from my own statement before the Judiciary Committee, to wit:

STATEMENT OF HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON, A REPRESENTATIVE FROM THE STATE OF TEXAS.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, since back in the days of Shakespeare the legal fraternity has been maligned, but I notice that the people of our country now are looking to one committee of Congress to furnish relief, and that is our Judiciary Committee, and I believe that this committee is going to furnish it. I am getting letters now from all over the country, from lawyers, hoping that proper legislation will be brought before Congress and passed. It just demonstrates to me that after all, whenever you come to a crisis, the country depends upon the legal fraternity to bring them out of chaos.

With regard to these various bills, I will call your attention to the fact that the Byrnes bill was introduced on November 5. The Summers bill and the Davey bill were both introduced on November 17, and the Siegel bill was introduced on November 11. You will note that the bill I have introduced here, which in some particulars is modeled along the lines of the Senate bill, was introduced on October 28, and it contains necessary provisions—as I deem them—not contained in any of these other bills. I refer to H. R. 10235, introduced by me on October 28.

Gentlemen, each of you will remember that in the development of the position taken by William Z. Foster and also by the anarchist lawyer, Margolis, from Pittsburgh, they agreed that in order to properly propagate anarchy in this country they must resort to certain organizations. You will note that they picked upon organizations where few men dominate and control; they picked upon organizations the membership in many of which are non-English-speaking people, in some instances not American citizens—to quite a large extent ignorant people—for they picked upon the labor organizations of our country.

Now, I want to call your attention to the fact that last May, in New York, Dr. Scott Nearing made a speech to 3,000 union members in which he advocated revolution, advocated the overthrow of this Government, and he was applauded to a man, with the exception of the few Government representatives who were present. I am not sure whether any of them applauded or not, but it would not be much of a surprise to me if some of them did; because I want to say this: That if you will dig down into this matter—I am sure this Judiciary Committee has not the time—but if you did dig down into it, you will reach the conclusion that I have reached, and which I have preached here before the House for six months, and which was asserted the other day by Senator King in the Senate, to the effect that the whole Labor Department, from Secretary Wilson down, is so honeycombed with anarchism and Bolshevism that you have got to have a house cleaning there before you relieve this country of the present menace. You have got to have a house cleaning from the beginning of that department to the end.

Now, I want to show you here what took place in Washington on last May Day eve. In the Pythian Temple there was a big red flag meeting, attended by thousands of union members, here in Washington, under the auspices of the Fur Workers' Union. I want to show you what the Washington Star said about that meeting. The Washington Star next day printed the resolution that was adopted, in which, in part, it says as follows:

"Labor now knows its strength. Labor now makes demands. And those demands are heard, they must be heard, for labor, in its might, has learned to achieve for labor, and labor's word is fast becoming law."

And then the Washington Star went on to say this of the meeting:

"The spirit of anarchy, nihilism, Bolshevism, sabotage, and defiance of vested power and authority in government dominated the assembly."

That occurred on May Day eve here in Washington, in the Nation's Capital, if you please.

I want to call your attention to a copy of Freedom, which I hold in my hand, which is the biggest anarchistic paper in this land to-day, published in defiance of law, and disseminated in defiance of the rules and regulations of the Post Office Department and of the laws of this country. It says right at the beginning——

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Do you believe that the Postmaster General is going to suppress that paper?

Mr. BLANTON. How is he going to suppress it when it is protected in a large measure by the very men who ought to be engaged on the side of its suppression?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Did he not suppress the Call?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and he tried to suppress this paper; and he is doing everything that he can, so far as the loyal employees of this Government have brought it about. Here it says "A journal of constructive anarchism," right at the top; and it advertises "Bread and freedom," the biggest bolshevistic anarchistic paper published in Russia. And here it gives the place where it can be found—133 East Thirty-fifth Street, New York City. Anarchism! Advertising that.

Now, let me call your attention, concerning that very title——

Mr. STEELE. The power of the Attorney General is limited to prohibition of transmission through the mails?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; his power is limited.

Mr. HUSTED. May I ask you a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUSTED. Do you happen to know whether he has refused that paper admission to the mails?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; certainly.

Mr. HUSTED. It is still going through the mails?

Mr. BLANTON. It is going through some way. This is July, 1919, that I hold in my hand. Here is a letter that I have just received inclosing a copy of a letter that a gentleman wrote from Philadelphia on December 7, 1919, to Hon. Albert S. Burleson, Postmaster General, Washington, D. C. This reads as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., December 12, 1919.

Hon. ALBERT S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The anarchist paper, Freedom, is regularly published surreptitiously, though forbidden the use of the mails. A copy of it has been given to me, and I now inclose some extracts from it which may be of interest. It deals with the Berkman-Goldman dinner and also a letter that Emma Goldman wrote. The Harry Kelly whose name appears is the editor, and the Leonard Abbot is the assistant editor and the friend of John B. Densmore, through whom he is in touch with William B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor. I hope to get two more copies of the paper, and if so will send you and Attorney General Palmer each one. You will see the overthrow of our Government is freely advocated.

Yours, very truly,

FRANCIS RALSTON WELSH,
109 South Fourth Street.

[Francis Ralston Welsh, investment bonds, 109–111 South Fourth Street.]

PHILADELPHIA, PA., December 9, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: The inclosed extracts from the anarchist monthly Freedom are, I think, well worth reading at once.

Sincerely, F. R. WELSH.

I also sent a copy of letter to Mr. ALBERT JOHNSON.

That is by Francis Ralston Welsh, of 109 South Fourth Street, Philadelphia, Pa., a man who has done more to ferret out this propaganda and to help the Government rid itself of these anarchists than any other man I know of in the country.

Here is a copy of a document that has been sent broadcast throughout this land entitled "Labor, Free Your Prisoners," which is anarchistic from beginning to end. Note these paragraphs:

"Labor, free your prisoners."

"It is necessary for the future liberty of this country that American labor see to it that the prison doors swing open and set free the men and women who are suffering under war-time measures. There are over 1,500 such prisoners in the American jails to-day. It is not only labor's absolute right, but if labor is to maintain its self-respect it must stand back of every man who is now in prison because of labor's struggle."

"Demand—not only demand, but see to it—that there is an immediate amnesty to all the labor and political prisoners in the American jails."

Not only demanding that they see to it that there is immediate amnesty to all labor prisoners in American jails, but it preaches in favor of opening the jail doors by force, not by law, but by force; and this scattered throughout the land. The one who sends me this—of course, it is anonymously sent, but he sends me the nominations of the workers—candidate for President, Eugene V. Debs for 1920, a man convicted and serving his sentence here in this country at this time.

Mr. STEELE. Conducting an active campaign?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and it goes on to say that if I happen to survive so long, they may let me be official bootblack of the outfit.

Mr. STEELE. There is no connection between that paper and the official organizations of labor, is there?

Mr. BLANTON. No; but it shows how the idea, especially the idea of labor, is that of an anarchistic and bolshevistic organization, and that is the result of that Margolis and William Z. Foster have been working hand in hand, to undermine the organization of the Government through this organization.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Do you not think that these people and the Bolshevists are seizing upon labor and using it as an instrument?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; because there are several millions of honest, loyal, law-abiding American citizens who are members of labor organizations, and would not stand for it if it was put up to them; but now they all know, but some of them nevertheless stand back and seek to get the benefit of the acts of these lawless enemies.

Mr. STEELE. As a matter of fact, the leaders control all meetings. It was developed that less than 20 per cent of the members ever attended their meetings.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; it is the radicals that control. I have very little time; there is a lot of this that I want to get before the Judiciary Committee, but I can not. If you gentlemen want to ask me questions, I will spend what little time I have in answering them; but there is much of this that I want to get before you.

I do not agree with my colleague from New York who says that he is not carried away by the idea of this matter having taken hold. If you were down with me in my country out on one of those big ranches, and somebody should strike a match on one of those prairies in the grass, and if you have a bunch of cowboys right there who would get busy and work, they could put out the fire; but if you let it gain headway, you could not put it out, and it would burn, and burn, and burn; and sometimes destroy hundreds of thousands of acres. But you can stop it if you take it quick enough; and that is exactly what we have got to do now; we have got to begin in time with this and stop it, and let these infamous scoundrels know that this is a country of law and order and we are not going to stand for it any longer.

To show you how it is interwoven, now, I am not going to make an attack upon the administration of the party of which I am a member, merely, for I do not want it understood that I am attacking the Democratic administration or anything of the kind, but I want to say that it is interwoven with our Government machinery. We Democrats are not responsible for it, only that we permit it to exist. It is something we have inherited. It is something that has been here for years. It is something that no one man who is President can get rid of. If the President knew what I know about the Labor Department, he would clean it up in 10 minutes; but it takes a long time to find these things out.

Mr. CURRIE. Do you not think that rather a contrary disposition is shown by the President by his having a man like Howe for Immigration Commissioner at New York?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, we tried for weeks to get the House to understand what kind of man he was. Mr. LaGuardia's attacks upon him months ago told what he was; yet we sat there and would not take action. We could have gotten action in a very short time. We tried to cut his salary off in the House, and they would not do that. They said there was a better way to get rid of him. But we could have gotten rid of him by cutting his salary off when the bill was before us.

Here is a document entitled "Armistice Day" [reading]:

"Armistice day mass meeting. Make peace with Russia, too. Faneuil Hall, Tuesday, November 11, 8 p. m. Music by choir of the Russian People's Church.

"Felix Frankfurter, presiding, formerly chairman of the National War Labor Policies Board.

"Wilfred Humphries, recently returned after a year in Central Russia and Siberia with the Red Cross and Committee on Public Information (with lantern-slide illustrations from personal photographs).

"Samuel E. Morison, attached to the American Peace Commission; expert on Russia and the Baltic States.

"Rev. Sydney B. Snow, of King's Chapel.

"The position of this committee is that of Gen. Jan Smuts, member of the British Peace Commission at Paris and prime minister of the South African Republic: 'Leave Russia alone, remove the blockade, adopt a policy of Gallilike impartiality to all factions.'

"Admission free."

What I was going to say is that meeting after meeting is allowed to continue.

Mr. CURRIE. I just want to make this suggestion to Mr. BLANTON. I am in hearty accord with the purpose of which he speaks. You said that if the President understood these matters you knew that he would clean house in that department. Now, he certainly understands what the policy is, does he not, of Secretary Wilson, not only in putting Immigration Commissioner Howe up in New York but in all these other matters to which you refer?

Mr. BLANTON. He has no more idea of it than I have of what is going on in London right at this moment.

Mr. CURRIE. Do you not think he knows about Howe's record in the past, and his associations?

Mr. BLANTON. In what way would it be brought to his attention?

Mr. CURRIE. If in no other way, through the press.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to call your attention to this——

Mr. CURRIE. Here is one thing that I want to bring to your attention, that the President seems to be in hearty accord with Secretary Wilson, as shown during the past week in his approving of Secretary Wilson's course in the coal-strike matter and taking his side as against the Fuel Administrator, Mr. Garfield.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not agree with the President at all about that. I want to say that. But I think that we have slept on our rights when we have permitted one man to decide the destiny of a great people, so far as it was the duty of Congress to make that decision with respect to those matters, both with respect to the coal and the railroad situation. We have been passing the buck time and time again, when we ought to have done our duty as Members of Congress, and that is what I hope we will do in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Your time is up, Mr. BLANTON.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to ask Mr. BLANTON a question, if I may be permitted, Mr. Chairman, before he finishes on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. STEELE. This is for information, as to the legal aspect of this bill.

In the second section of the bill, on page 2, where you prohibit any combination with reference to the mining of coal, how do you make the mining of coal in any State a Federal question?

Mr. BLANTON. I will show you. There are just two ways that anarchists can affect this country's industrial life, and that is with reference to food and with reference to fuel; something to eat and something to keep us warm in winter. Now, in reference to food, if they could call a nation-wide railway strike from one side of the United States to the other they could starve to death in a short time all of the big cities in this Nation. If they could continue a coal strike in the wintertime they could freeze to death the people of this country. There are the avenues of working. It is a Federal question whenever you get to interfering with interstate commerce. It is a Federal question when you get to interfering with carriage of the United States mails. Whenever you stop a train carrying interstate commerce or carrying United States mails you involve in that transaction a Federal question, and there is where the Congress of the United States has a right to come in to protect the people; and you notice in those two provisions in my bill it seeks to protect this Nation with respect to railroad strikes and with respect to coal strikes, and you will notice, you lawyers on the committee will notice, that it does involve a Federal question—I mean it does come within the provisions that would make it constitutional on a Federal question.

Mr. STEELE. It is under interstate commerce that you ground the action?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; certainly, under that.

Mr. STEELE. Interstate commerce is limited to transportation, under the decisions of the Supreme Court.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and whenever you stop coal—in other words, whenever you interfere with the laying of tracks over which trains could carry interstate commerce—you interfere with transportation itself.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me call attention to some of the radical publications which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] read before this hearing of the Judiciary Committee, to wit:

TO ARMS, COMRADES.

Time and again you have been foolish enough to ask or to expect the present exploiting system to go out of existence peacefully.

Day after day the upholders of this exploitation—the Government—have murdered, crippled, and imprisoned thousands of our fighters while you were answering with your paper protests.

But what has happened all over the country on Friday, November 7, 1919, when hundreds of our comrades were brutally crippled, assaulted, beaten up, and then arrested by the wolfish, degrading, cowardly, dirty, thug-armed beasts of the Government ought to open the eyes of every rebel worker who struggles for the overthrow of this system that it is time to change the methods of fighting our murderous enemies.

Open meetings of revolutionary organizations must stop, instead of which all must resort to conspirative meetings in Czaristically Russianized America, as in the olden days of czardom.

We must also be prepared so that when our conspirative gatherings are attacked no such horrible scene as on the bloody Friday of November 7, 1919, should be repeated without bloody—yes, bloody—revenge. We must spend our last money on acquiring guns and ammunition and learn how to shoot, and to shoot into the beasts who would dare attack us.

We trust that our comrades of Russia will reiterate on American officials and in this manner avenge the murderous attacks on their Russian brothers who are kept by force in this country and are not permitted to return home.

We must unite secretly, call strikes in all industries, begin to seize all food stores and factories, attack with any weapon you can capitalism and its upholders.

Carry on the struggle of the social revolution until capitalism's exploitation system, government's murder rule, religion's hypocritical assent to these outrages, together with the daily kept press of the entire country, are all destroyed forever and in its place establish the Anarchist Commune Society, based on real freedom.

Capitalism, through its government, has by its bloody Friday started the spark of the social revolution in America, and it is up to us, the rebelling workers, to keep the spark burning until victory is ours, and victory will only come by our beginning to use all weapons of force which we can lay hold of in fighting our enemies.

To arms, rebelling workers of America.

AMERICAN ANARCHIST FEDERATED COMMUNE SOVIETS.

TO THE WORKING PEOPLE OF AMERICA.

The war is over. Your exploiters have quickly placed their profits in safety.

You, the working slaves, will soon find yourselves on the streets, facing a hard winter, looking for work, for it is your only means to supply yourselves with the present necessities of life, because you lack the courage to use other methods.

You have tolerated all the moral and physical slaveries during this war.

When you dared open your mouths in protest, you were quickly railroaded to jail.

What were your profits out of this war? You lost all the little liberty you had, and gave your sons, brothers, and fathers away to be shot down like dogs and left to rot in the fields of France!

For what?

For the glory of the American flag!

So that your masters may have bigger markets to sell their merchandise and exploit other people like you.

The workers of Russia, Germany, Austria, and other countries have risen and have overthrown their rulers.

Not by ballots but by arming themselves, as it is your only means. You alone do not budge. Are you afraid to follow their example? Are you afraid to take by force what rightly belongs to you?

Will you be meek and slavish? Will you wallow under the iron heel of your masters?

Or will you tear your way by the revolution to a better and happier life? Which will you choose?

A GROUP OF WORKINGMEN.

THE REVOLUTIONARY I. W. W.

The preamble of the I. W. W. constitution in its last paragraph contains the following:

"Organizing ourselves industrially, we are building the structure of the new system within the shell of the old. That is the chief aim of the I. W. W. We are not satisfied with 'a good day's wages for a good day's work'; that is impossible. The workers produce all riches and are therefore entitled to it. We are going to abolish capitalism, taking into our possession the earth and the machinery of production. We do not intend to buy it, but to take it. The rich class has seized it, because they had the power to control and the brain of the workers in the industry."

THE RED WAVE OF REVOLT.

In every center strikes are the order of the day. It is the dawn of a new day, and the red flag of revolution and freedom has begun to wave. Now more than ever the workers of America have taken to solve this social problem by direct action in an economical struggle against the capitalistic dictatorship.

Strike—this is the new solution. This is the forerunner and spreader of the great revolution of the proletariat which is to come.

Only by direct action, strike, general strike, and mass revolt will they gain better living conditions.

Rather than bother with the wasted energy of electing any candidate to Congress or assembly, who betray the laboring class and serve the money bag, the only thing left for the workers is direct action on the economical battle field, which is the best weapon against the weapon of capital.

The time for cheap demands is gone. Now is the time to take possession of the earth under the control of the workers. The Presidents, ministers, Congressmen, Senators, and their agents, they all seek to fool the workers, to make compromises, but when the workers will have sense enough not to let themselves be misled and take control of the fields and wood, shop, mills, railroads, etc., the entire production and commerce in their hands, then we would not live in vain on this earth. We would all hear the sound of the storm bell of revolution, which reports the birth of a new, free, humane society.

The time of idle talk has passed. The time for action is at hand. Let us act. If every one of us will do his share capitalism will lie at our feet in short order. Poke the flame of dissatisfaction until it envelopes this rotten capitalistic world.

THE NEGRO AND THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

The Messenger magazine, the only magazine of scientific radicalism in the world, published by negroes, has been carrying on relentless and widespread propaganda among negro workers in this country for nearly two years. It is being read this month by over 33,000 negro workers and a few thousand radical whites. * * *

Industrially, let the farmers organize farmers' protective unions. Let the lumber workers, molders, masons, plasterers, and other negro workers on railroads and in mines organize into unions quietly and unostentatiously. Be prepared to walk out in concert, every man and woman who does any form of work. Let it be known that we are down to plain business, free from any foolishness or play.

Let every negro in the South begin to work on this program by agitating for it in the lodges, churches, schools, parlor, and home conversation, and while at work in factory or field. Write also to us about any detail in entering upon this work. If this program is pressed, a year from now we can call out of the fields, the factories, and the mines between a million and two million negroes, who will initiate the true work of making American a real "land of the free and home of the brave."

Yet the large majority of negro cotton plantation workers are in dire poverty on account of the starvation wages they receive. What is the remedy, is the question coming from the mouths of millions of black workers.

The answer is contained in one word—"strike!" Piteous appeals are of no avail. Positive demands enforced by the strike are the only things that count. If the Negro cotton workers were to strike, the great cotton mills of England that rely upon the cotton exported from the South would be forced to close down. Now, since these cotton mills are owned by the capitalists of England, who in turn control Parliament, representations would be made immediately to America with a view to influencing the action of the Government with respect to the cotton strike. When the Negro understands his power to cripple the main industry of the South by arresting production, and thereby stopping the creation of profits, he shall have reached the point where he will be able to secure a respectful hearing in the highest court of American public opinion in general, as well as an attentive audience from southern cotton plantation owners in particular.

The exploiting classes in all parts of the world can appreciate a blow in the pocketbook. Negroes must form cotton workers' unions and present their demands to the masters of the cotton industry in the South. There is no need for fear. Not a sign of cotton can be raised without Negro labor. Southern white capitalists know that Negroes can bring the white bourbon South to its knees by one strike at the source of production. So, go to it.

NEGRO MASS MOVEMENT.

Fourth, and last, negroes must get into the Socialist Party. Politics should reflect the economic condition of a people. Socialism is the political party of the working people. Now, 99 per cent of the Negroes are working people, so they should join the working people's party. The Republican Party is a party of monopoly, big business, and wealth. It represents plutocracy. Negro plutocrats should belong to the Republican Party, but negro working people should join and support the workingmen's party. That is the Socialist Party in all countries. It draws no race, creed, color, or nationality lines. All are freely welcome into its ranks.

And, Mr. Chairman, in this Messenger, published by radical negroes, in last Thanksgiving number it heralded that it did not thank God for anything, but on behalf of the toiling masses of the world and their achievements it was thankful for the Russian revolution, for the German revolution, for the Austrian revolution, for the Hungarian revolution, for the Bulgarian revolution, for the world unrest, for the titanic strikes sweeping Great Britain, France, Italy, the United States, Japan, and every country of the world; for the solidarity of labor; for the growth of industrial unionism; for the triple alliances of the railway, transport, and mine workers in America and England; for the radicalism permeating America, giving rise to many of the greatest strikes in history, such as the steel strike, the coal strike, and the impending railroad strike; for the first successful general strike in America, in Seattle, Wash.; for the new crowd of negroes asserting by force their equal rights in every avenue of life; and for the fact that the sleeping giant—labor—has awakened.

Following such hearing, as is usual in such cases, a member of the Judiciary Committee, generally conceded to be one of the best lawyers in the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], prepared an antisedition bill, copying from the bills before the committee the many sections contained therein which appealed to him, which he introduced in the House on January 5, 1920, as H. R. 11439. He is an LL. B. of the University of Pennsylvania and an LL. D. of Lafayette College, was district attorney of Philadelphia for 27 years, was professor of criminal law in the University of Pennsylvania for 11 years, and is a lawyer of such eminent ability that in private practice could likely command retainers amounting to $100,000. This Graham bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary on January 5, 1920.

On January 10, 1920, the Senate of the United States passed the Sterling antisedition bill (S. 3317), which was referred to the House Committee on the Judiciary on January 12, 1920.

On January 12, 1920, the Committee on the Judiciary amended the Graham bill (H. R. 11430) to suit its ideas and reported it so amended to the House (Rept. No. 536), recommending its passage.

On January 14, 1920, the Committee on the Judiciary reported the Sterling bill (S. 3317) amended to conform with the provisions of the amended Graham bill (Rept. No. 542), recommending to the House that it be passed. We all know that this legislation then met with the approval of the Republican steering committee, else these two favorable reports could not have been made. Everything was propitious for the immediate passage of this measure through the House. The only obstacle was that it had to await its turn on the calendar, unless the Committee on Rules would grant a resolution making it in order for the House to give such proposed legislation immediate consideration. When the matter came before the chairman of the Rules Committee something halted the granting of the expected rule. Some of the New York morning newspapers for January 17, 1920, advised the Congress and the public that on the preceding day Mr. Samuel Gompers had stopped the rule and was not going to let same be granted, as such legislation would shackle organized labor, and that the chairman of the Rules Committee had called a hearing on the rule for Thursday, January 22, 1920, at which Mr. Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, would appear. On the evening before I had made a hurried trip to Providence, R. I., where to an audience of patriotic business men I spoke against anarchy on the night of January 16, 1920, hence became much interested in these newspaper articles while eating early breakfast on the diner out of New York the next morning while returning to Washington.

In the House that day I rose on the floor and called attention to what the New York papers said, and let me now quote from page 1691 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for January 17, 1920, as follows:

Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that several of the New York newspapers of this morning tell us that the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], the chairman of the great Committee on Rules, has seen fit to deny a rule making in order this Graham sedition bill, stating that such action was taken because Mr. Samuel Gompers and the American Federation of Labor were against this sedition bill and had demanded a hearing on it. Because of what? Why was the rule denied and a hearing granted? Why, if you please? Because Mr. Gompers and the American Federation of Labor had asked that no rule be granted, but the matter be suspended; and said New York newspapers stated that upon such demand of Mr. Samuel Gompers and the American Federation of Labor a hearing had been granted on the bill for next Thursday.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the New York newspapers correctly report my friend from Kansas?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not know where the newspapers could have gotten that impression. After consulting other members of the committee I did fix on next Thursday at 10.30 o'clock to hear both the proponents and the opponents of the measure.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the opponents of the measure include Mr. Gompers?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not that I know of.

Mr. BLANTON. This morning's New York newspapers so report, and I have not seen any denial from Mr. Gompers. Before this sedition bill was reported the Committee on the Judiciary held exhaustive hearings on the measure, considering not only the sedition bill introduced by me but likewise numerous others.

And, Mr. Chairman, in the press of the very next day, Sunday, January 18, 1920, a long article appeared from Mr. Samuel Gompers stating that he and the American Federation of Labor would not stand for this antisedition law, and that it must not pass.

Some of us knew that during the week preceding this stoppage by Mr. Gompers, the Attorney General of the United States had personally stated to the chairman of the Committee on Rules that without a new antisedition law it was impossible for him to reach a certain class of criminals in the United States, and that he needed additional law to break up anarchy in our country.

On Thursday, January 22, 1920, the Rules Committee was called to order for this hearing, when Mr. Gompers appeared both personally and with his attorney, and, in a crowded chamber, where standing room was at such a premium that ladies could not find seats, began his fight against an antisedition measure designed to free his Government of anarchy and of anarchists. When devoting nearly an hour to a general attack against the measure, claiming that it denied a free press, and free speech, and would shackle labor, and that he appeared not only for organized labor but assumed to speak for unorganized labor as well, the chairman of the committee asked Mr. Gompers to point out the specific paragraph of the bill which denied free speech and free press and which shackled labor. Whereupon Mr. Gompers became so discomfited he could not answer, but hummed, hawed, swallowed, hesitated, gulped, and finally turned to his attorney, who pointed out the paragraph relating to force, and claimed that because it did not say physical force it would deny organized labor the right to use moral force to change the Constitution, and asserted that the Supreme Court of the United States was in effect always ready and willing and anxious to improperly construe laws so as to deprive labor of its lawful rights, and would shackle labor if given any opportunity.

Thereupon the chairman of the great Judiciary Committee of the House [Mr. VOLSTEAD] arose and stated that the committee in framing the bill had no intention to deprive any person, or combination of persons, of the right to use all moral force possible to change the Constitution either in one way or a hundred ways, in accordance with constitutional provisions for its changes, or to change any part of the law, through lawful means, but only sought by this law to prevent anarchists from overthrowing, or seeking to overthrow, this Government by physical force and violence, and that if the proposed law was ambiguous in any particular, the Committee on the Judiciary, which would have charge of it in the House, would see that it was properly amended so as to make it clear beyond doubt that physical force and violence and not moral force was required, and that the guilt of a person should not be left to the Postmaster General or any other officer to decide, but that same should be decided by proper court trial.

After which one of the committee again asked Mr. Gompers whether after incorporating the amendments promised by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee safeguarding in every way the rights of the press, of public speakers, and of all laborers he would still oppose a new sedition law. And he promptly answered "Yes," that he did oppose it, and did not want any passed, because it interfered with the aspirations of organized labor.

Simply because the Attorney General did not personally appear before said hearing and give Mr. Gompers, and Mr. Gompers's attorney, a chance to interrogate him, and find out the secret plans of the Department of Justice to apprehend anarchists, members of the Rules Committee publicly condemned the Attorney General and accused him of getting "cold feet," and the afternoon papers heralded the fact that antisedition legislation was killed, and that Mr. Gompers would not permit the rule to be reported. Why, Mr. Chairman, at such a hearing, where their rights were vitally affected, did not this committee know that in that large crowd many anarchists were likely present? Whose interests were most affected? Why should not they come to such a hearing? If in the dead hour of midnight, anarchists would put a bomb on the doorstep of the Attorney General and blow away all of the front of his residence, and take such chances in doing it that the one handling the bomb was blown into a thousand pieces, why would not they make an attempt to bomb the Attorney General while testifying before a committee, some members of which were not his political friends and antagonistic enough against him at least to publicly accuse him of having "cold feet" with respect to the sacred performance of his duty? Would the Attorney General want anarchists who might be present to interrogate him?

But, Mr. Chairman, within a very short time after said hearing began the Attorney General sent to the Committee on Rules the following communication, embracing the form of the identical bill which he desired enacted into law and which he told the committee he stood ready to enforce if Congress would pass it, and that he would enforce any law which Congress saw fit to pass, to wit:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1920.

Hon. PHILIP P. CAMPBELL,
Chairman Committee on Rules,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CAMPBELL: I find that public business of pressing importance will make it impossible for me to attend the hearing before your committee to-morrow morning. I would be glad if you would print this letter in the hearings as a statement of my views with respect to the legislation which you are considering.

I have read with great care both the Sterling bill, passed by the Senate, and the Graham bill, reported by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, and feel impelled to say that neither of these bills accords with my views as to what the legislation ought to be.

In response to a Senate resolution I prepared several months ago and transmitted to the Senate the following as a draft of a law which, in my view, meets all the requirements of the situation:

"SEDITION.

"A bill defining sedition, the promoting thereof, providing punishment therefor, and for other purposes.

"Whoever, with the intent to levy war against the United States, or to cause the change, overthrow, or destruction of the Government or of any of the laws or authority thereof, or to cause the overthrow or destruction of all forms of law or organized government, or to oppose, prevent, hinder, or delay the execution of any law of the United States, or the free performance by the United States Government or any one of its officers, agents, or employees of its or his public duty, commits, or attempts or threatens to commit, any act of force against any person or any property, or any act of terrorism, hate, revenge, or injury against any person or property of any officer, agent, or employee of the United States, shall be deemed guilty of sedition, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000, or by imprisonment for a period not exceeding 20 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 2. PROMOTING SEDITION.—Whoever makes, displays, writes, prints, or circulates, or knowingly aids or abets the making, displaying, writing, printing, or circulating of any sign, word, speech, picture, design, argument, or teaching which advises, advocates, teaches, or justifies any act of sedition as hereinbefore defined, or any act which tends to incite sedition as hereinbefore defined, or organizes or assists, or joins in the organization of, or becomes or remains a member of, or affiliated with, any society or organization, whether the same be formally organized or not, which has for its object, in whole or in part, the advising, advocating, teaching, or justifying of any act of sedition as hereinbefore defined, or the inciting of sedition as hereinbefore defined, shall be deemed guilty of promoting sedition, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment of not exceeding 10 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 3. ALIENS TO BE DEPORTED.—Any alien who shall be convicted under any of the provisions of this act shall, at the expiration of his sentence, be taken into custody under the warrant of the Secretary of Labor and deported in the manner provided by the immigration laws of the United States then in force, and said alien shall forever thereafter be debarred from again entering the United States or any Territory or possession thereof.

"SEC. 4. DENATURALIZATION AND SUBSEQUENT DEPORTATION.—The conviction under any of the provisions of this act of any naturalized citizen shall be deemed sufficient to authorize the cancellation of his or her certificate of naturalization in the manner provided by section 15 of the naturalization act of June 29, 1906. It shall be the duty of the United States attorney in the district where said naturalized citizen is held in custody or resides to institute and conduct such proceedings immediately upon the entry of final judgment of conviction. Upon the cancellation of the certificate of naturalization the alien shall become subject to the provisions of section 3 of this act.

"SEC. 5. The Department of Justice shall furnish the Secretary of Labor such data as will enable him at the proper time to effect the deportation of those made subject thereto by the provisions of this act."

I understand that this bill has been introduced in the House by Representative DAVEY, of Ohio (H. R. 10650).

Of course the form which legislation shall take is for the Congress exclusively.

The bill which I have quoted was prepared by me only because requested so to do by a Senate committee.

It is unnecessary for me to add that the Department of Justice stands ready to enforce whatever legislation the Congress shall see fit to pass.

Yours, truly,

A. MITCHELL PALMER,
Attorney General.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, does the above look anything like "cold feet" with the Attorney General? When he sends to the Rules Committee word for word the specially prepared form of law that he wants passed and which he told the chairman of the Rules Committee the preceding week that he needed to reach a certain class of criminals to put anarchy out of business in the United States, and he tells the Rules Committee that he stands ready to enforce any law which the Congress sees fit to pass, did he have "cold feet" or was the case of "cold feet" then being suffered by his accuser, who had just been told by the autocratic dictator of Congress, and of all legislation—Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor—that organized labor would not stand for such a law and that it must not pass?

Immediately after the testimony and statement of Samuel Gompers the afternoon papers here in Washington stated that the antisedition legislation was dead and that the Committee on Rules would not grant a rule to make it in order for consideration by the House.

The Committee on Rules can not camouflage this issue. It can not claim that it refused a rule because it did not like the Graham bill, or that the Graham bill needed amending, or that by granting the rule it would evidence its approval of the Graham bill. For every Member of Congress and every person acquainted with the rules of the House knows that the province and function of a rule from the Committee on Rules merely makes the proposed legislation in order for immediate consideration by the House, and that the Committee on Rules could have passed a resolution merely giving the House the right to consider and properly perfect this proposed antisedition measure into proper and wholesome legislation, and just this, and nothing more or less, did the Committee on Rules refuse to do under the whip and lash of Samuel Gompers.

Again, I repeat, that not a single loyal newspaper in this whole land has objected to Congress passing a proper antisedition bill. The most that loyal newspapers, such as the Dallas News and others, have done was to protest against the Postmaster General or any other individual being empowered to pass upon guilt, but that same be left to a court after trial.

Is it anything out of the usual or astonishing in any way that Mr. Samuel Gompers should object to a law that would hamper, restrain, or punish anarchists?

I deny that he represents in any way the 25,000,000 unorganized laborers of this land. He and his unions have been their worst enemies. Have not he and his unions denominated every unorganized laborer in the land a "scab"? Have not he and his unions attacked, threatened, bulldozed, beaten, dynamited, cut, shot, stabbed, brickbatted, rifle-balled, and murdered in cold blood the unorganized laborers of the land, and tried in every way possible to starve them to death by refusing to work with them and by preventing them from getting jobs of any kind by which they could make an honest living and earn their daily bread? Have Mr. Gompers and his unions ever been guilty of a single friendly act toward a single one of the millions of unorganized laborers of the land? No.

And now Mr. Gompers would try to hoodwink the farmers, but they are too intelligent and have too much sense to be fooled. Every farmer knows full well that there is not one single community of interest between the farmers and organized labor. Every piece of farm utensils, implements, and machinery used by farmers has been forced up to the highest maximum top notch in price through strikes of unions until for a Studebaker wagon that used to cost a farmer $65 he now has to pay $175, and the difference has gone into the pockets of unions. Everything a farmer and his family wear on their bodies has been forced up to the highest maximum top notch in price through strikes by unions until a suit of clothes which the farmer used to buy for from $15 to $20 he now has to pay from $60 to $75 for, and most of the difference has gone into the pockets of unions. Every farmer knows that every product of the farm, in the planting, cultivating, and raising of which he and his wife and hard-working little children labor from early morning until late at night, has been forced down to the lowest possible minimum by unions, because they are all consumers and want all food products at the lowest price possible, and the farmers know the record of Mr. Gompers and his unions in attempting to keep down the price of the products of the farm. As said above, there is no community of interests between them. But there is a community of interests between the farmers and all of the business men in the towns, and the business men, through their organized chambers of commerce, are cooperating with the farmers, and when they get finally waked up thoroughly and get into action they are going to make Mr. Gompers and the power of his autocratic, anarchistic, grasping, labor-union leaders, who have been misrepresenting the hundreds of thousands of loyal, patriotic, deserving, but overly credulous union laborers of our land, look like 30 cents, and the farmers and business men of this country, aided and abetted by the loyal, patriotic union laborers, are going to commence electing their officers—their Presidents, their governors, their Senators, their Congressmen, their legislators, and all State and county officers—and the public officials who have permitted Mr. Gompers to rule them are going to have a helliver time getting back into their jobs again.

And I now warn this Republican Rules Committee and this Republican House of Representatives that the people of the United States are going to hold you responsible for bowing to the command of Samuel Gompers and permitting him to control legislation in this Congress so vitally needed by the people, and they are going to punish you by taking the reins of power in this House and Senate away from you in the next election.

Let me again recite a part of the war record of Mr. Gompers and his union-labor leaders:

(1) Mr. Gompers got members of union labor exempted from the draft.

(2) He helped to put the cost-plus 10 per cent profit provision in war contracts, by which the Government was swindled out of hundreds of millions of dollars, and saw-and-hammer men with union cards were paid as high as $15 per day for doing little or nothing.

(3) When it was proposed in giving the 240,000 Government employees drawing salaries up to $2,500 per annum a bonus of $120, that they should work eight instead of only seven hours per day, Mr. Gompers said that to make them work eight hours "was damnable," and by threats of marching on the Capitol and of having the employees walk out and leave the Government helpless in war time, he forced the President to veto the law, and the clerks continued to work only seven hours, although drawing the $120 bonus, and later the $240 bonus, which Mr. Gompers forced from Congress. These employees get 30 days vacation each year on full pay, 30 days additional on doctor's certificate on full pay, all 52 Sundays, all holidays, half of each Saturday during the three summer months, and all special occasions so numerous in Washington, besides working in comfortable buildings, under pleasant surroundings, getting their pay in cash twice a month, enjoying all the free pleasure provided for them here—the parks, the swimming pools, the tennis, polo, and cricket grounds, the horseback-riding paths, the many public buildings of interest, the National Zoological Park, the museums, the lovely Congressional Library, the fine churches, the splendid theaters, and the miles and miles of paved streets, which have been half built with the money of the people of the United States. And all the while we had 2,000,000 soldiers in foreign lands, working sometimes 24 hours out of the 24 for $33 per month, when a falter meant court-martial and dishonorable death by shooting against a brick wall, facing death in trenches knee-deep with mud, cootie infested, and who on return to their native land, victorious, received only a paltry $60 bonus, and not one word has Samuel Gompers ever said to a Republican Congress to do one single thing for them, a returned victorious army.

(4) That during war time, from April 6, 1917, until November 11, 1918, Mr. Gompers permitted 6,000 strikes in the United States, of an average duration of 18 days each, and in many instances the President had to command the men to return to work by threats.

(5) Mr. Gompers permitted the four railroad brotherhoods during war through death threats of murdering the industrial life of this Nation, by tying up every railroad so tight it could not run, which meant defeat of the war to the United States and our allies, to force Director McAdoo to hand over to them $754,000,000 in cold cash, and then later permitted them through such threats to force Director Hines to hand over to them $67,000,000 more in cold cash, and has lately permitted them to force Director Hines to hand over more millions in cold cash, with promise of still more, and has forced a law that makes all these raises permanent to be passed by the House and now held up in the Senate, and has threatened a revolution if Congress protects the people by passing an antistrike provision in the railroad bill.

(6) When Gen. Crowder told Congress that it was unnecessary to draft the 18-year-old boys, as he had 21,000,000 able-bodied grown men from which to pick only 2,300,000 needed soldiers, and that he was going to make all men, union and non-union alike, either work or fight, it was Mr. Samuel Gompers who stopped the proceedings and said that the "work or fight" order should not apply to union labor, as union labor would not stand for it, but would cause a revolution if it were attempted. And Gen. Crowder had to change his plans, and in bowing to Mr. Gompers Congress drafted 670,000 18-year-old boys, but, thank God, some of us forced Congress to put them in college, and they were not needed and did not have to go to the trenches of France, where Mr. Gompers tried to force them to go.

(7) Notwithstanding that in his book W. Z. Foster preached the overthrow of this Government by force and violence, and advised the anarchists of this country that the way to do it was to "bore from within," and to accomplish it through the labor unions of this country by first getting under control the constabulary, having all peace officers, policemen, and firemen join unions, and in this way get the Government under control, by taking charge of it through force and violence. Mr. Samuel

Gompers selected this anarchist, W. Z. Foster, to conduct the steel strike and put him in charge of it. A steel strike, when some of the steel workers were getting as high as $40 a day. And then he helped with the coal strike, whereby every man, woman, and child was discomforted and caused to suffer. And Mr. Gompers criticized the court for granting an injunction, denounced our courts, and denounced the President, claiming that he was promised that the Lever law would not apply to his unions, but that unions should be exempt, but every other of the 110,000,000 people should be affected by it. And he again threatened revolution and a disregard for and disobedience to law of the land.

(8) And when the anarchist, W. Z. Foster, did carry out his program by "boring from within," and having the policemen join and strike, when the Boston police turned Boston over to thugs, and in one night $300,000 worth of property was destroyed, and women were attacked, and many crimes committed, it was Mr. Gompers who defended the police and tried to defeat Gov. Coolidge, who stood for law and order. And it was Mr. Gompers who threatened Congress time and again when we passed the two measures preventing policemen and firemen in the District of Columbia from joining the American Federation of Labor or any other strike organization.

(9) It was Mr. Gompers who sat on the platform with Mrs. Rene Mooney, wife of the convicted bomb-throwing anarchist of California, at the Atlantic City convention of the American Federation of Labor and helped to applaud Secretary of Labor W. B. Wilson when he said that he and the Government was doing much to free Mooney, and was not done yet, but still trying to free him. And after the President removed Frederick C. Howe from Secretary Wilson's employ because Howe had helped thousands of anarchists to escape, it was Mr. Gompers who helped to put said Howe in charge of the Plumb Plan League, which is now robbing the union laborers of the country out of at least $10,000,000.

(10) It was Samuel Gompers who helped the McNamaras in California and again helped the anarchist Mooney.

(11) It was Samuel Gompers who led the parade of the American Federation of Labor from Atlantic City in its historic march on the Capitol, on last Flag Day, protesting against the Constitution, and threatening that unless the union laborers got their beer and wine there would be a revolution, and concerning which all union men and women in Washington who refused to march in said liquor parade were fined $5 by their unions.

Mr. Chairman and colleagues, the above fairly illustrates what Mr. Samuel Gompers means by moral force and by labor being shackled.

Now, let me insert the Graham bill and my own bill so that the American people may say whether or not they present sufficient skeleton outline that by proper amendments by the House could be made into a proper antisedition law.

The following is the Graham bill:

A bill (H. R. 11430) to punish offenses against the existence of the Government of the United States, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever incites, sets on foot, assists, or engages in any insurrection or rebellion against the United States or the authority or laws thereof, or whoever sets on foot or assists or engages in the use of force or violence, with intent to destroy or cause to be destroyed, or change or cause to be changed, or to overthrow or cause to be overthrown the Government of the United States, and the death of any person or persons is caused or results directly therefrom, shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction shall be punished by death, or shall be imprisoned not more than 20 years or fined not more than $20,000, or both, and shall forever be debarred from holding office under the United States: Provided, however, That the death penalty shall not be imposed unless recommended in the verdict of the jury. If two or more persons conspire to commit any offense defined in this section they shall each be subject to the punishment provided in this section for such offense.

SEC. 2. That whoever incites or sets on foot or assists or engages in the use of force or violence with intent to destroy or cause to be destroyed, or change or cause to be changed, or to overthrow or cause to be overthrown the Government of the United States, and death does not result, shall, on conviction, be imprisoned not more than 20 years or fined not more than $20,000, or both. If two or more persons conspire to commit any offense defined in this section they shall each be subject to the punishment provided in this section for such offense.

SEC. 3. That no person shall orally or by writing, printing, or the use of any sign, symbol, picture, caricature, or otherwise teach, incite, advocate, propose, or advise, or aid, abet, or encourage forcible resistance to or forcible destruction of the Government of the United States, its Constitution, laws, and authority, or the governments of the several States, all or any of them, or the existence of constituted government generally, or orally or by writing, printing, or the use of any sign, symbol, picture, caricature, or otherwise teach, incite, advocate, propose, or advise, aid, abet, encourage, or defend the destruction of human life or the injury of any human being or the injury or destruction of public or private property as a means of changing the Constitution, laws, or Government of the United States or defeating the authority thereof.

SEC. 4. That no person shall write or knowingly print, publish, edit, issue, circulate, distribute, transport by express or otherwise, display, or sell any book, pamphlet, newspaper, document, handbill, poster, or printed, written, or pictorial matter of any kind or form wherein or whereby the overthrow or change of the Government of the United States or the Constitution, laws, and authority thereof by force or violence or by levying war against the same or by resistance to or rebellion against the execution of any law of the United States by force or violence is incited, suggested, taught, advocated, or advised.

SEC. 5. That no person shall display or exhibit at any meeting or parade, or in any other place, any red flag or banner as a symbol of anarchy, or of any of the purposes forbidden in this act, and the display or exhibition of such flag or banner in any meeting or parade shall be prima facie evidence that it is so displayed and exhibited as such symbol, and no person shall display or exhibit at any meeting, gathering, or parade, or in any other public place, any flag, banner, emblem, picture, motto, or device which tends to incite or indicates a purpose to overthrow, by violence or by physical injury to person or property, the Government of the United States, or all government, or to overthrow, change, or defeat the Constitution of the United States and the laws and authority thereof.

SEC. 6. That every book, magazine, newspaper, document, handbill, poster, or written, pictorial, or printed matter, memorandum, sign, symbol, or communication of any form wherein or whereby the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence, or resistance to or rebellion against the authority of the Government or the overthrow, change, or defeat of Constitution of the United States, or the laws or authority thereof by force or violence, is advocated, advised, or incited, or wherein or whereby the use of force or violence or physical injury to or the seizure or destruction of persons or property is advocated, advised, defended, or incited as a means toward the accomplishment of industrial, economic, social, or political change, or wherein or whereby an appeal is made to racial prejudice the intended or probable result of which appeal is to cause rioting or the resort to force and violence within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, is hereby declared to be nonmailable, and the same shall not be deposited in any post office for mailing or be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or by any letter carrier: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize any person other than an employee of the Dead Letter Office, duly authorized thereto, or other person, upon a search warrant authorized by law, to open any letter not addressed to himself.

SEC. 7. That no person shall import or cause to be imported into the United States, or any place subject to its jurisdiction, any matter declared in this act to be nonmailable and not transportable, or to transport or cause to be transported any such matter from one State into another or into any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 8. That no person shall knowingly use or attempt to use the mails or the Postal Service of the United States, or knowingly transport or attempt to transport by express or otherwise, by public or private conveyance, any matter declared by sections 6 and 7 of this act to be nonmailable and not transportable.

SEC. 9. That any association, gathering, assembly, society, or corporation which seeks, directly or indirectly, by force or violence, or by injury to or destruction of human beings, or public or private property, to bring about a change in the Constitution or laws or authority of the Government of the United States, or of any State thereof, or of all forms of organized government, or which teaches, advises, proposes, threatens, or defends the unlawful use of force or violence in any form to bring about any such result, or which attempts to prosecute or pursue such purpose, is hereby declared to be unlawful.

SEC. 10. That no person shall act as an officer of any such unlawful association, or, knowing the object, purpose, teaching, or doctrines of such unlawful association, become a member thereof or become affiliated therewith, or continue to be a member thereof or affiliated therewith, or contribute any money or other thing of value thereto or to anyone for its use, or rent any room, building, or place for the use of said unlawful association, or permit the occupation by such unlawful association or any committee or branch thereof of any room, building, or other place under his ownership or control.

SEC. 11. That the giving, loaning, or promising of anything of value to any such unlawful association shall constitute affiliation with such unlawful association; and the giving, loaning, or promising of anything of value to any person or partnership or unlawful association engaged in advertising, teaching, advocating, or defending any of the things the teaching, advocacy, or defense of which is forbidden in this act shall be prima facie evidence of teaching, advocating, or defending said forbidden things against the person so giving, promising, or loaning anything of value as aforesaid.

SEC. 12. That any alien convicted under any of the provisions of this act after serving his sentence shall be taken into custody and be deported under the immigration laws of the United States then in force. Any person convicted under this act who has declared his intentions of becoming a citizen but has not been naturalized shall be forever ineligible to citizenship, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to institute proceedings to cause his petition and declaration of intention to be dismissed and annulled and all court proceedings in his case quashed and to furnish to the Secretary of Labor such data as to enable him to cause such person to be deported under the immigration laws of the United States then in force. The conviction of any person who is a naturalized citizen of the United States of any of the things forbidden in this act shall be sufficient to authorize the cancellation of his or her certificate of naturalization in the manner provided by the naturalization laws of the United States then in force. It shall be the duty of the Attorney General to institute proceedings and conduct the same to a final judgment immediately after conviction and sentence of the naturalized citizen aforesaid. Every alien deported under this act is hereby forbidden to again enter the United States or any Territory or possession thereof. It shall be the duty of the Attorney General of the United States to enforce this provision against all deported aliens returning to the United States as aforesaid.

SEC. 13. That in any investigation or prosecution for any of the offenses specified in this act no person shall be excused from attending or testifying or deposing, or from producing any book, paper, document, or other evidence on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty of forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing as to which in obedience to a subpœna and under oath he may so testify or in obedience to a subpœna shall produce evidence, documentary or otherwise. But no person shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

SEC. 14. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

SEC. 15. That section 5334 of the Revised Statutes, section 4, act of March 4, 1909 (vol. 35, Stat. L., p. 1088), be, and the same is hereby, repealed. Any offenses heretofore committed in violation of said section 5334 and all cases pending thereunder may be prosecuted and punished as therein provided in the same manner and with the same effect as if this section had not been enacted.

SEC. 16. That any person convicted of violating any of the provisions contained in any of the sections of this act, except sections 1 and 2, shall be punished by being imprisoned for not more than 20 years or fined not more than $20,000, either or both. And any citizen of the United States convicted under this act shall be forever debarred from voting thereafter and holding any office of profit, honor, or trust under the United States.

Mr. Chairman, both the Rules Committee and the Congress knows that the above bill could have been amended in any particular by the House while considering same, if only the Rules Committee had made it in order by a rule.

The following is the bill introduced by me several months before the Graham bill was introduced, mine being introduced on October 28, 1919, to wit:

A bill (H. R. 10235) to safeguard the transmission of interstate traffic and United States mails, to punish unlawful conspiracies, to protect citizens in their right to labor and to punish unlawful interference therewith, and to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States, and to prohibit the use of mails in furtherance of such acts, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for two or more persons to enter into any combination or agreement (1) to prevent, hinder, or restrain any other person from seeking and engaging in work of any kind for railroads or boats carrying United States mails or engaged in interstate traffic; or (2) to prevent, hinder, or restrain the movement of United States mail, or of persons or commodities in boats or over lines of railroad engaged in interstate traffic; or (3) to prevent, hinder, or restrain the movement of trains or boats carrying United States mails or trains on railroads engaged in interstate traffic. Persons so combining and agreeing shall be deemed guilty of a conspiracy and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 and by imprisonment not exceeding two years: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to deny to employees the right to quit work at their option, after giving 30 days' notice of such intention.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for two or more persons to enter into any combination or agreement (1) to prevent, hinder, or restrain any other person from seeking and engaging in work connected with the mining of coal, upon which the public or railroads and boats engaged in carrying the United States mail rely for fuel; or (2) to prevent, hinder, or restrain the movement of such coal. Persons so combining and agreeing shall be deemed guilty of a conspiracy and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 and by imprisonment not exceeding two years: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to deny employees the right to quit work at their option after giving 30 days' notice of such intention.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person (1) to advocate or advise the overthrow, or to write, or knowingly to print, publish, utter, sell, or distribute any document, book or circular, paper, journal, or other written or printed communication, in or by which there is advised the overthrow, by force or violence, of the Government of the United States; or (2) to advocate resistance by force or violence to the Constitution and Government of the United States, or by force or violence to prevent, hinder, or delay or attempt to prevent, hinder, or delay the execution of any law of the United States; (3) to display or exhibit any flag, banner, or emblem intended to promote or incite the overthrow, by force or violence, the Government of the United States, or resistance to its laws; (4) to transmit or attempt to transmit through the United States mails any of the seditious communications mentioned herein, all of which are declared to be nonmailable; (5) to import or cause to be imported into the United States any matter declared to be nonmailable. That any person who shall violate any of the provisions of section 3 of this act shall be deemed guilty of sedition and punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 and by imprisonment not exceeding 20 years, and if an alien, shall be, upon the expiration of sentence, deported from and forever barred from reentering the United States.

All laws or parts of laws in conflict with this act are, to the extent of such conflict, hereby repealed, this act being cumulative.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I leave it up to the American people to decide whether a Republican Committee on Rules, and a Republican Congress, and a Republican steering committee has permitted Samuel Gompers to dictate to it, and to obey his commands, and keep back wholesome and needed legislation in the interests of active anarchists of this country who are seeking to overthrow this Government by force and violence. It is only through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that the people may get the facts, for no other publication in the country will dare to publish same, as they would be boycotted and ruined. Does the Republican Party longer deserve to retain the power of government or to control legislation in Congress? This is for the American people to decide.

The newspapers reported that I said I hoped that the Republicans would be successful in the next election. That is as near as they ever come to reporting me truthfully. This is what I said: I said that if the Democrats lay down on this proposition, and if they did not take a stand on this question, which is pure Americanism, and if the Republican Party did take a stand on it, and if they did put up a man in favor of Americanism, I hoped they would give us a licking because we deserved it. Such a licking would do us good. That is what I said. But the Republicans have fallen down, and the American people are going to help us Democrats give you a licking when election time comes. [Applause.]

Mr. BURKE. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the time has been fixed by the House and is under the control of the gentleman from South Carolina and myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] is recognized.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 26 minutes remaining.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield 26 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it has never been my habit or custom to appear either as an apologist or a defender of estimates submitted from the executive departments to Congress for appropriations for the ensuing fiscal year. My attitude in that respect, speaking generally, has been more in the way of criticism than commendation, although I do realize, and I think this bill shows, that there are many instances in which the estimates are fairly and properly made out and based upon the actual needs of the department for which the appropriation is asked. But we all know that there has grown up in the departments, or at least in many of the departments and in many of the bureaus in the departments, a habit or custom of estimating for more money than is actually needed for the next fiscal year, with the idea that when the estimates reach Congress, Congress will reduce them, and that possibly in the reduction they will get just about what they need. That habit or custom is not of recent origin. It has not grown up in the last few years, but it is a custom that has obtained for many years in the past, both under Democratic and Republican administrations. As I have had occasion heretofore to say, to my mind it presents one of the strongest reasons for the establishment of a budget system, so that there may be some one in the executive departments who is charged with the direct responsibility of revising the estimates and seeing that they are reduced as much as possible before they are sent to Congress for final action. A budget bill passed the House last October, and it is to be most sincerely hoped that the Senate will stop fiddling on the peace proposition, get down to business and ratify the peace treaty with such compromises as can be agreed on, and then get busy on this and other domestic problems which should be solved without delay.

I have said that in some cases estimates are submitted based upon the actual needs of the department, and the appropriations in this bill bear me out in that statement.

This bill carries over $88,500,000 by way of direct appropriation and over $11,000,000 of reappropriations, making a total in appropriations and reappropriations of just about $100,000,000. It is by far the largest deficiency bill that was ever enacted by Congress or presented to Congress in peace times. I dare say that I would not be missing the mark if I said it was three or four times larger than any other deficiency bill ever presented to Congress in peace times. But it is entirely fair and proper to say that the size of this bill is largely brought about by certain expenditures made necessary on account of the war. In other words, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the Vocational Board have aggregate appropriations in this bill amounting to $67,000,000. Now, when the sundry civil appropriation bill and the other bills were passed by this Congress last spring and summer the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] in particular, had a great deal to say about the reductions that had been made in the estimates submitted by the executive department, and their speeches were heralded all over the country as an evidence of the fact that the Republican Party had entered upon an era of economy and was reducing the estimates submitted by the Democratic administration. There were heavy cuts in the estimates. There are always heavy cuts in the estimates. It has been so during the entire history of Congress, that estimates are never submitted to Congress without being very greatly reduced by Congress in the making of the actual appropriations. But I had occasion to say then that many of these cuts were being made for the sole purpose of making a record for economy at that particular time, that many governmental activities were being cut to a point which gentlemen knew would deprive them of the money necessary to run them during the fiscal year, and that later on it would be necessary in deficiency bills to provide the money which they had failed to appropriate. I said then that it was my purpose later on, as these deficiency bills came before the House, to point out the truth of the assertion which I made at that time.

Now, what does this bill do? It carries $55,000,000 for the pay of military and naval compensation in the War Risk Bureau. The estimates submitted for 1920, original and supplemental, were $71,473,000; but what did the committee do? In spite of the fact that this was recognized as a necessary sum and that the director on coming before the committee insisted that even this estimate was not sufficient, they deliberately cut those estimates and appropriated $50,000,000, or more than $21,000,000 less than the estimates at that time. Then they came before the House and the country and pointed to this reduction of $21,000,000 as a part of the evidence of the economy which they were practicing. Later on there was an estimate of $30,000,000, which was appropriated for in a deficiency bill. Now, here in less than seven months after that bill was passed cutting the estimates $21,000,000 Congress is compelled to appropriate not $21,000,000 but $55,000,000 to take care of the military and naval compensation to be paid by the War Risk Bureau. I am not criticizing the amount. I am not undertaking to criticize anybody for extravagance in making that appropriation, because it is clearly necessary. But what I do wish to do is to call attention to the fact that the majority party in this House took credit last summer for having saved, as they said, over $21,000,000 on these estimates alone, and here in less than seven months from the beginning of the fiscal year we are required to appropriate $55,000,000 more.

But that is not all. The Public Health Service, for the care of the war-risk patients, is given in this bill an appropriation of four and a half million dollars. There were estimates last year for this fiscal year of $7,867,980. The committee last summer cut that estimate to $4,000,000, or $3,857,000 less than the estimates.

And now after a little more than half the fiscal year is gone Congress is called on to appropriate not only $3,857,000, which they deliberately cut out of the estimates last summer, but more than that, namely, $4,500,000.

Yet the majority party last summer, on the floor of this House, and in speeches heraided over the country, took credit for $3,857,000 which they said they had saved to the Treasury of the United States in this item alone.

But that is not all, Mr. Chairman. The Vocational Board for Training and Rehabilitating Soldiers has an appropriation of $12,000,000 in this bill. The estimates for 1920 were $21,000,000. There was appropriated in the sundry civil bill and in deficiency bills $13,000,000 and $6,000,000 by way of a special act. In other words, the committee last spring and summer, for the purpose of making this record or false show of economy before the people, deliberately cut the estimates submitted by the Vocational Board for Rehabilitation of Soldiers in the sum of $8,000,000. As I predicted at the time, they are now called on, when only a little more than half of the fiscal year has passed, to appropriate $12,000,000 to help to take care of this splendid service in behalf of the disabled soldiers and make up for the reduction of estimates when the sundry civil bill was passed. But last summer they took credit before the country for having saved $8,000,000 as a matter of economy.

Now, this bill undertakes to cut the amount of the estimates submitted by the Director of War Risk Insurance $62,750,530, a reduction of over $7,000,000. The chairman of this great committee will not tell you that he is absolutely sure and certain that the $7,000,000 will not be required between now and July 1. He will not tell you that he is absolutely certain that it will not be necessary to make a still further appropriation for them in another deficiency bill. But he will tell you that inasmuch as a deficiency bill can be passed between now and July 1, if they need more money, that it can be taken care of. The same is true of the Vocational Board for the Rehabilitation of Soldiers.

I am not complaining. Sometimes, gentlemen, a deficiency is a good thing; in a majority of cases a deficiency is a good thing. I mean by that that it is not always the best policy to give an administration or an executive department all that it needs because if you cut the appropriation close they will do more to hold down the expenses than if they had a fat pocketbook from which to draw.

The reason that I call your attention to this is that the majority will claim credit for having reduced the estimates to something like $29,000,000, whereas a part of this reduction was counted in last spring and heralded over the country as evidence of the economy of the majority party.

There is a further reduction in this bill of a million dollars from the $2,000,000 submitted for the enforcement of the prohibition law. In addition to that, as evidence of what I said at the outset, that there are always some officers of the executive departments who will come and assist Congress in arriving at the very lowest figures necessary for expenses, there is a cut or saving of a million dollars in this bill in the appropriation for temporary clerical service in the Postal Service at the suggestion of Mr. Koons, the First Assistant Postmaster General, who said that if they would give him other estimates he could get along with this reduction.

Now, gentlemen, in conclusion, for I want to yield back some of my time, I desire to refer for a moment to some remarks submitted the other day by my friend the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] in reference to hospitals.

I am satisfied that the gentleman from South Dakota, whom we admire and honor not only as a Member of this House but as a distinguished soldier in the war, would never have made that speech if he had taken the time, as he should have done, to read the evidence taken before the subcommittee in the preparation of this bill. The gentleman, as I recall, stated that the Secretary of the Treasury had not spent any of the money that was appropriated March 3, 1919, which, as I recall, was $750,000; that he had been neglectful of the soldiers in making proper preparation for their reception in hospitals. If he had read the evidence, he would have seen that the Secretary of the Treasury has taken over 20 of the Army hospitals, 17 of which are in active operation. Dr. Stimpson, who appeared for the Public Health Service, said that it was their purpose to take over other Army hospitals as soon as they are available. This bill carries $500,000 to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to put these 17 hospitals in proper condition for the use of the soldiers. He has already spent $750,000, or it is obligated, and this is a deficiency to assist him in taking care of the soldiers in the hospitals.

The gentleman from South Dakota is asking too much when he criticizes so harshly the Secretary of the Treasury and Dr. Blue, the Surgeon General, because it was impossible for these hospitals to be taken over and instantly put into proper shape. The very fact that the House is now providing $500,000 to complete these 17 hospitals shows that it was due to lack of appropriation and not to any want of anxiety on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Bureau of Public Health to put these hospitals in proper shape. In addition to that the Secretary of the Treasury asked your committee for $500,000, which it was stated was to be used for unknown projects, because, he said, as will appear in the hearings, that it was the purpose to take over these Army hospitals just as rapidly as they are available, and he wanted on hand a sufficient amount of money so that he could make proper repairs and put them in suitable condition for the patients. That sum has been denied him. I dare say, when he takes over those additional hospitals and sends, as he will have to do, these war-risk patients to them in order to provide medical treatment, possibly the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] or some other gentleman will rise and complain because the Secretary of the Treasury has not put them in proper shape and condition, when the truth of the matter will be that it is because this bill fails to carry the necessary sum for that purpose. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 28 minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from South Carolina. In 28 minutes it will be impossible to give more than a general idea of the provisions carried in this bill. The subcommittee on deficiencies conducted extensive hearings, going into all of the estimated requirements for deficiencies. The total amount estimated was $117,662,511.87. The bill carries $88,684,324.14. There is a reduction in the estimates there of $29,145,669.73. I was particularly interested in what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] had to say with regard to the claim made for these reductions. If the gentleman will examine the sundry civil appropriation bill that passed the House in the last Congress, when his party was in power, he will find that it carried for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance $50,000,000, which was $20,000,000 in excess of the original estimate. When the present Congress was convened and the sundry civil appropriation bill was reported out and passed, it carried the same amount. There was no time given, as the gentleman well knows, to go into details at all, except in those cases where the departments claimed the amount carried in the previous bill was altogether inadequate, and that the reduction made in the last Congress would not permit the department to function in a healthy way. Since that time we have already appropriated for the Bureau of War Risk $30,000,000 in addition to the amount carried in the sundry civil act, and this bill carries $55,000,000 more. The gentleman knows and well knows that with a service like the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, a new service, no one, I do not care what his politics are or what his study has been, can tell us within reason what the service will cost. So, too, with the Public Health Service. Here is a new service that we can tell nothing about except by experience, and the policy of the committee has been, and I assumed it was the unanimous policy of the Committee on Appropriations, that on those things where we can not tell by past experience what the requirements will be, we hold down the appropriations so that we will not appropriate enough to leave a balance unexpended at the end of the year and thus invite extravagance.

It seems to me that that is the business way to do it. It has been the policy of the committee in the past Congress, with regard to items of this kind, and I commend it, and I commend the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the last Congress for his attitude upon that subject, and in accepting the present policy we have simply followed in that respect what we found was a good business policy.

Let us take the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and examine it, because of the amount carried in the bill more than half is for that bureau. There are beneficiaries in the bureau to-day, total permanent disability beneficiaries, to the number of 960. There are permanent partial disabilities numbering 1,017. There are temporary total disabilities to the number of 36,556, and temporary partial disabilities of 38,436. The total is 86,122 soldiers who are drawing compensation. That has been increasing. The increase has been steady, and no committee and no Congress could tell exactly what the requirements would be. For example, on the 4th day of August last the total beneficiaries in the bureau were 36,684. On the 6th day of September the number had increased to 47,785. On the 7th of October it had increased to 61,129; on the 3d of November to 71,223; on the 3d of December to 79,778; and on the 8th of January of this year it totaled 87,885. Besides that, there are 39,000 beneficiaries who are drawing death claims under the act. In considering the amount that we should report out in the bill for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance we took into consideration the fact that it would require for those who were entitled to the benefits under the retroactive features of the State law about $36,000,000.

There was on hand on January 3, 1920, $19,694,076.67 plus the $30,000,000 that we appropriated just before the holiday recess, making the total available cash for the bureau of over $49,000,000. It is estimated that it will take to discharge the retroactive obligations of the recent law $36,000,000, leaving the balance on January 3 of $13,604,000. To this we have added by this bill $55,000,000, which, if appropriated, will give to the bureau, in addition to the $36,000,000 for discharging the obligations created by the retroactive provisions of the Sweet law, $68,604,000 with which to pay the compensation to our discharged soldiers. It has been estimated that it will require about $11,000,000 a month to discharge the bureau's obligations. Therefore the amount the committee has appropriated is $2,000,000 and more in excess of the total estimated requirements, basing those requirements upon the number that are now beneficiaries of the war-risk insurance. The matter was gone into carefully. We are not attempting to camouflage anything in regard to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. Congress has enacted a law fixing the amount of compensation to which every discharged soldier is entitled, and Congress has provided the machinery by which these discharged soldiers can go to the Government and establish their claims. Every dollar due to the discharged soldier and every death claim ought to be paid and paid promptly, and I believe that the bill carries an amount which will enable the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance to pay these claims promptly, and if there are no increases from this on there will be more than enough to pay all the obligations that are likely to be presented by July 1. It was understood, thoroughly thrashed out before the committee, that inasmuch as we always have a deficiency bill at the end of the year to take care of those things which must be taken care of by the 1st of July, if there was any deficiency in this matter, that it could then be taken care of.

Take, now, the Federal Board for Vocational Education. The sundry civil bill carried $8,000,000. We have since that time made two appropriations. Here again no one can tell how many persons will apply to the board for training. The recent act of Congress, which increased the pay for subsistence to those men who do apply and are accepted for training, has had the effect of very largely increasing the number of applications to the board. For example, there were in training in September of last year 9,520 persons; on October 31, there were 15,407 persons; on November 30, there were 19,382 persons; December 31, there were 21,837 persons; and on January 17, 1920, there were 22,999. And if my friend from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] will take the trouble to examine the estimates, he will find that neither the Treasury Department in the case of the war-risk estimates, nor for the Board for Vocational Education or for hospital service, estimated anything like the amount that we have already appropriated for these services.

Now, I do not blame the Treasury Department, and the gentleman from Tennessee ought not to blame the party in power in Congress, because it has been obliged to bring forward these estimates and to appropriate additional money to meet the requirements of law and pay compensation to our discharged soldiers and to provide training and for rehabilitating those who were so unfortunate as to have been injured in this recent war. We have already appropriated $19,000,000 for this service, and this bill recommends $12,000,000 additional. There was unexpended on January 1, $9,387,601.90. To that we have added by this bill $12,000,000, making $21,387,601.90. The total disbursements for November, the last month for which the figures were available, aggregated $3,576,000,000.

We have appropriated practically upon the basis of the November expenditures. It is the last expenditure where the figures were available, and in giving that amount the officers in charge of this service came before the committee and said if $12,000,000 were given it would carry enough to permit them to perform their work until the 1st day of July. The board, however, asked for $15,000,000 and expressed the belief that it would take the entire amount. The reduction was made on the theory that the best policy would be to appropriate now only what we were certain would be required, and if when July 1 came a deficiency existed it could be appropriated for.

Now, it seems to me, when we consider the present condition of the Treasury, we must keep somewhere near actual expenditures in determining what the requirements are to be. Men in vocational training, for example, are leaving before their courses are finished, and when spring comes, especially if there are great inducements for entering employment in the industries, a great many of these men may leave, as they have left in the past, to take up work where they can receive greater compensation than the allowances they are receiving. And it is possible that we have already reached the peak of the work which this board will be called upon to perform. For one it has seemed to me that this work was very necessary work. The rehabilitation of the men who were injured in this war is absolutely essential, and the quicker we do it and get the men prepared for their life's work the better for the Government and for the men. [Applause.] And there will be no hesitation in bringing out an appropriation bill at any time the necessities for such a measure are apparent.

The Public Health Service had a regular appropriation carried in the bill that was enacted last Congress of $4,000,000. We have already reported one deficiency of $2,000,000. There was a balance on hand in the Treasury to the credit of this appropriation on the 31st of December of $2,434,180, inclusive of the appropriation of $2,000,000 that was made before the holiday recess.

There are at present 6,324 men receiving hospital treatment. The cost per day per patient, according to the statements made by those in charge, is $3.30. The department is expending for public health at the rate of $1,000,000 per month. The medical and technical and clerical services require about 6,000 persons, and the amount required to pay the salaries of this class of men employed in this service amounts to 40.9 per cent of the total appropriation—an altogether too large proportion of the appropriation. No hospital in time of peace ever required an expenditure of 40 per cent for technical and clerical work in connection with it. Nineteen and four-tenths per cent is expended for subsistence and 19.20 per cent for the maintenance, including dental treatment.

I am a little afraid that the Public Health Department is overstepping the requirements of the law with regard to what is required to give medical treatment to the boys who for some reason or other become incapacitated because of their military service. Their construction of the law is this: That if a young man went into the service and was accepted and he now goes to a dentist after he is discharged and it is found that he has, say, 20 cavities in his teeth that the Government of the United States furnish this dental work for him. That is practically what it amounts to, and the service is now establishing in practically every community a dental surgeon to whom such a soldier can go and have his teeth examined, and if that dental surgeon finds the cavities are of such a size that his service in the Army added to the decayed condition the Government undertakes to take care of his teeth, have them filled, put in bridges for him, and all that sort of thing. I want the Government of the United States to treat the boys who are discharged from this Army with liberality and fairness, and I hope it will not make namby-pambies of those boys by doing things not contemplated by the act, and I do not believe this service was ever so contemplated by Congress.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], in addressing the House a few minutes ago, criticized the majority side of the House because they had not reported out a bill to pay a bonus to the soldiers. I wish the gentleman in considering statements of that kind would read the sound advice of his patriotic Secretary of the Treasury, who says that to do that sort of thing would bring the United States face to face with a financial situation just as critical as any that faced the Government during the war.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. For a question.

Mr. CALDWELL. Do I understand from the gentleman's statement he is opposed to doing something for those soldiers?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no. I was in favor of doing something for them when, if I remember the RECORD correctly, the gentleman from New York was opposed to paying them $30 a month during their service in the war.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman does not recollect any such thing. The gentleman is trying to make me take a position which I did not take.

Mr. GOOD. I think the gentleman voted against the increase.

Mr. CALDWELL. I would ask the gentleman to look at the RECORD.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman asked whether I am in favor of doing something for the soldiers. I certainly am, and always have been, and so is Congress. Already in this Congress we have appropriated, counting the amounts carried in this bill, practically $200,000,000 for the soldiers of this war—their rehabilitation and hospital treatment, for compensation and payments through the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

How much did you appropriate for that purpose? The gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] knows, if he will read what the Secretary of the Treasury states on the subject, that we must take into consideration in making appropriations the condition of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. We are paying now vast sums of money in settling contracts made during the war. Those contracts were made in good faith. They must be paid, and the only way the Government can pay them is either by taxation or by borrowing the money.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I have only a brief time.

Mr HUDDLESTON. I wanted to ask the gentleman, for information, whether we are to have an additional appropriation for soldiers by way of bonus?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know about that. The gentleman knows as much about that as I do. I do not know.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. What is the attitude of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. GOOD. I hope that the advice of the Secretary of the Treasury, who perhaps knows more about the subject than I do, so far as the demands on the Treasury are concerned, will be followed. He says it would create financial havoc in the United States; that it is unthinkable that we should engage in any such undertaking at this time. I do not know what Congress will do. Personally I do not see how we can do anything with this matter now. I do not care to discuss the matter further, because I have not the time.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would like to know if the gentleman's position is the position of his side and the position of the steering committee on his side?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Can not the gentleman state?

Mr. GOOD. I can not.

Mr. GALLIVAN. The gentleman says there were contracts made that must be met in good faith. Was there not an implied contract made with the boys when they went into the war that they would be taken care of after the war?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, there is always an implied contract of that kind, and I think the Government is proceeding with a spirit of considerable liberality in taking care of the boys that were wounded, in taking care of the boys who were disabled. As I stated before, with the amount in this bill I think the gentleman will find that the total, including the amount carried in the bill for hospitals which was passed on the 3d day of March, amounting to something like $9,000,000, which will practically all be expended during this fiscal year, the total amount we are paying out of the Treasury this year for that object will approximate $200,000,000, even if we do not bring forth any further deficiency bills for the soldiers. I do not complain about that. I commend it. I think we have got to take care of those men, but we must accept the situation that actually confronts the Treasury of the United States. If we are to pass a bonus bill, we will bring in at the same time a tax measure that will pay the bonus, because otherwise it can not be paid. Personally I should be compelled to vote against such a bill, but I do not pretend to speak for anyone but myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BITUMINOUS COAL COMMISSION.

For expenses of United States Bituminous Coal Commission, including the employment of three commissioners, secretaries, chief clerk, and other expert, clerical, and other assistance; for equipment and supplies, including law books, books of reference, newspapers, and periodicals; for traveling expenses, per diem allowances in lieu of subsistence not to exceed $4; and for printing and binding done at the Government Printing Office, $50,000.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago, when the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] was talking, he said I had voted against the $30 proposition for the pay of the private soldier. The statement is based upon the fact that there is a record vote——

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman says he did not vote that way, I will accept his statement. My recollection is that he did.

Mr. CALDWELL. I understand the gentleman wants to be entirely fair, and I want to be entirely fair with the gentleman. The gentleman's statement was that I had voted against the $30 pay for the soldiers.

Mr. GOOD. That was my recollection.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman's recollection was doubtless based upon the fact that when the motion was made to recommit I voted against the motion to recommit. But I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that in that vote I did not change my position, because before that and thereafter I voted for the $30 for the soldiers, at a time when the gentleman and his colleagues were not prepared to go forward with the Army preparedness as we were prepared to go. I will not say that the gentleman's statement was disingenuous, but it bordered upon it. With other Members who voted against recommitting that bill, and they included practically all of the leading Members on both sides of the House, I knew that every hour of delay was a peril to this country. I knew that there would be plenty of time for us to do anything we wanted for the Army, but I wanted to raise an Army without further delay. The men who are here shouting, trying to make political capital for the coming campaign, and who were here at that time doing the same thing, are now standing between those boys and what they are entitled to. The Democrats will never forgive them, and the boys in the war will never forgive them, and this kind of talk will not enable them to escape the punishment that will overtake that side of the House for the treatment it is giving to the men who went away when the country needed them.

Mr. GOOD. I do not care to enter into a controversy in regard to a matter that was not in the bill, but while I was trying to explain a situation in regard to the appropriation for war-risk insurance and vocational training of the soldiers that are carried in the bill the gentleman from New York sought to embarrass me by asking me if I was in favor of a bonus law, when he knows that his own Secretary of the Treasury and everybody under him in authority are perhaps the most determined in their opposition to such legislation. I said to the gentleman—and my memory was correct—that I recalled that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL], when the question of increasing the pay of the soldiers was up in the last Congress, voted against an increase of the pay.

The facts are these: That the House had passed a bill increasing the base pay of the soldier to $30 a month. The bill went to the Senate, and the Senate fixed the base pay at $29 a month. Ordinarily the conferees have only a choice in accepting one or the other of the propositions, or something between the two, but the conferees under the parliamentary situation then existing brought back a conference report reducing the pay of the soldier to $25 a month, $4 lower than the amount fixed by the Senate and $5 lower than the amount fixed by the House; and when I offered a motion to recommit, directing the conferees then and there to bring in an amendment to increase the pay of the soldiers to $30 a month, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL], who now talks so loudly about a bonus law, voted against the motion to recommit. Those are the facts. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL], as well as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], how much it would delay the bill by recommitting it with instructions? About how long?

Mr. GOOD. About an hour and 40 minutes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Oh, if you will be perfectly frank with the gentleman from New York, you will state how many times such a proposition was recommitted to the House that came back without a delay of days in the whole history of the country.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It would not have made any delay at all.

Mr. CALDWELL. When the matter came up before this House I voted for it, and when the conferees' report came back I voted for it.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a theory here that somebody voted against raising the soldiers' pay because we were in such a hurry. At that time the newspapers stated that the War Department had announced that no troops would be sent to France until the 1st of July of the next year, so there was not any great hurry about that. At that time the law was of such a nature that it was six months after the war began before the first drafted men were put in camp anywhere. The first drafted men did not get into camp until long after these gentlemen voted to recommit that bill. Now, they were not in a very great hurry to provide for the pay of the drafted men, because they did not get any drafted men into camp for some time. They were not in any great hurry about paying the men in Europe, because the department announced that there would not be anybody going to Europe until July 1, 1918, if the newspapers were telling the truth. So what was the hurry about? As has been suggested here, the proposition to recommit would not have occupied more than an hour or two. It was a matter of one amendment. Gentlemen had a perfect right to vote as they pleased, but I have heard over and over again here excuses for voting in the way they did on the ground that there was no time to vote any other way. Nobody is going to believe that when you go home. You will just challenge attention to the fact that you voted that way. If you voted that way, you may have had some reason, but there was no hurry about it that required any such hasty action as that, so as to refuse to consider the bill for an hour or two for that purpose. I do not like to see gentlemen offer excuses that are not valid excuses.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I should like to have an explanation from the chairman of the committee as to what the United States Bituminous Coal Commission is. Last summer I introduced a resolution asking for an investigation as to coal, and since that time some gentlemen around the Chamber have been throwing stones at me for talking about coal in July. My feelings have been somewhat relieved since I received a communication from one of the towns in my neighborhood a few days ago stating that they had received 60 tons of coal there when they should have had 1,500 tons; that they were burning packing boxes and everything that they could get hold of, with the thermometer at 14 below zero and 3 feet of snow upon the ground. With this situation existing, I feel that I was somewhat justified in suggesting the investigation of the supply and the price of coal last summer, even though it was very hot in Washington in July. I would like to have some information as to what the United States Bituminous Coal Commission is and what it does and what it hopes to accomplish.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I had asked the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a question.

Mr. GOOD. I desire to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman sat down and the Chair recognized me. I insist on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was mistaken. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR] had not yielded the floor.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman sat down. I do not know how he could retain the floor when he did not remain on his feet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Alabama presently.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-two Members present; not a quorum.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and pending a division, Mr. GREEN of Iowa asked for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. GREEN of Iowa and Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 2, noes 87.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count gentlemen who are present who have not passed between the tellers. Sixteen gentlemen are present who did not pass between the tellers. One hundred and five Members are present; a quorum. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR] has one minute remaining.

Mr. GOOD. Answering the inquiry of the gentleman from New York, I will say that when the coal strike was on the President secured an agreement between the operators and the miners whereby the miners should have an increase of 14 per cent if they would return to work immediately, and that then there should be a commission appointed by the President to take into consideration the entire question. Now, the President appointed a commission. It is true the commission was appointed without authority of law, but it seems to me it was a wise thing to do. That commission is at work. The miners and the operators have agreed to abide by the decision of that commission. If you will read the memorandum on page 670 of the hearings, you will find that both parties have agreed to abide by the decision. The commission estimated that it would take $134,000 to do the work, but finally said that if we would give them $50,000 they could get along with it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, so far as the pay of the soldiers is concerned, I am willing to "let the dead past bury its dead." That question is no longer alive. But the question as to what we are going to do for the soldiers who have been discharged, in the way of restoring them to their places in industry and to positions of usefulness, and in some slight degree compensating them for the financial sacrifices that they made in going to the war, is a live question.

Now, it just so happens that the Secretary of the Treasury is not at this time a Member of either House of Congress, although it seems he is about to become a Senator. At any rate it is not the privilege of Congress to leave to any Secretary of the Treasury to decide as to what it may do touching questions of important public policy. We can not shift our responsibility to that official. We must decide whether anything is to be done for the discharged soldiers. The responsibility is with Congress, and I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, for whom I have the highest esteem, and also of the Republican leader [Mr. MONDELL] to the fact that the responsibility rests upon their party now as to what is to be done for the soldiers. Are the majority going to do anything?

I got a letter yesterday from a former soldier, a friend of mine, who asked, "What is Congress going to do for the discharged soldiers?" I answered back and said, "I regret very much to reach the conclusion that this Congress is not going to do anything for the soldiers." Many bills have been introduced and are pending before committees. Not one of them can get out. Some of them are unreasonable and some are reasonable. The House can not get a chance to act on them. That responsibility is upon that side of the House. A great part of it is on the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] and a great part is on the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. We have had a lot of talk here about a soldiers' land bill. What has become of that bill? Can anybody over there tell me? Has it gone into its long, last sleep? It proposed to settle the soldiers on swamps and barren lands of one kind and another and to make the swords cut two ways—give something to the soldier and at the same time work off on him a lot of worthless land for him to improve. What has become of that bill. The soldiers' expectations were raised to the sky. They were campaigned and dragooned and asked what they thought about it——

Mr. KREIDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Not now. I will yield a little later. They were dragooned, and each man's opinion was asked as to what he thought about the soldiers' land bill, and their expectations were excited high. Now, what are you going to do about it? Is it all to end in talk? Have you meant what you said, and if you meant it why do not you make good? You have the control of Congress—

Mr. KREIDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will not.

Mr. KREIDER. Why does the gentleman ask questions and not yield for an answer.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am asking those who have charge. I ask what are they going to do for the soldier? Are you going to do nothing? Are you going to feed them on empty hopes? Are you really willing to do anything for them? I am willing to do something, but what are you willing to do? Now I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KREIDER. How many soldiers, I will ask the gentleman, does he know who are anxious to go out on the swamps?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. If there are any I do not know it; no one has expressed such a willingness to me, and I think they have good sense not to do it. There has been a lot of delusive talk as to what a fine thing the soldiers' land bill was going to be. Now, gentlemen, I challenge you to make good on a satisfactory land bill or admit that you are bluffing, and that there was nothing in what you have said. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE.

For expenses of experimental work and investigations undertaken by the Council of National Defense, by the advisory commission, or subordinate bodies; for the employment of a director, secretary, chief clerk, and other expert, clerical, and other assistance; equipment and supplies, including law books, books of reference, newspapers, and periodicals; subsistence and travel, including the expenses of members of the advisory commission, or subordinate bodies or other employees going to and attending meetings of the advisory commission or subordinate bodies; and printing and binding done at the Government Printing Office, $50,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. TINKHAM. I reserve a point of order.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. How long do you intend to maintain the Council of National Defense?

Mr. GOOD. The Council of National Defense was created before the war. It was created in 1916. It is considered one of the permanent establishments of the Government of the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. If that is the case, Mr. Chairman, I will make the point of order now.

Mr. TINKHAM. I want to raise the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. It is clearly out of order; there is no law authorizing it; it is not germane to any section of the bill.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Texas did not understand what I said. I said it was authorized by law as a permanent establishment of the Government. There is an estimated deficiency, a great deal more than we have provided for. We have not provided for all of the anticipated deficiency of this year. We did not give them the money they asked for to do the work that we thought was not of a character authorized by the bill.

Mr. GARNER. That is just what I wanted to inquire about. What function does the Council of National Defense perform?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order on the ground that there is no law authorizing it. Can the gentleman from Iowa cite to the Chair law authorizing the Council of National Defense?

Mr. GOOD. It was authorized in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917. I have forgotten the date of the act.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman concedes that it was a rider on an appropriation bill. It was only for that session and could not be considered permanent law unless it was clearly the intention to make it permanent law.

Mr. GOOD. It was permanent law.

Mr. BLANTON. It was a rider on an appropriation bill and is not shown to be permanent law.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the intention was, although I rather anticipate they intended to make it temporary, but, as a matter of fact, they did make it permanent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been furnished with a copy of the act referred to. It is as follows:

SEC. 2. That a Council of National Defense is hereby established, for the coordination of industries and resources for the national security and welfare, to consist of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor.

The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve other points of order.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is for an anticipated deficit and not an actual deficit, and by unanimous consent I want to make a statement to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can discuss his point of order.

Mr. TINKHAM. In connection with the discussion of the point of order I want to make a short statement of facts.

Mr. GOOD. I shall object to any statement that is not confined to the point of order under discussion.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, it relates to the point of order under discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order to discuss the point of order before the committee.

Mr. TINKHAM. It has been often stated that only an actual deficit could be met by appropriation in a deficiency bill, and in order to have this point, an important one, authoritatively determined, I raise the point of order that the appropriation in this item is not for an actual deficit but for an anticipated deficit. This will plainly appear if the hearings are read in relation to this item, when witnesses appeared before the subcommittee on deficiencies of the Appropriations Committee. I want to direct the attention of the Chair to the following statute before he rules, so as to indicate to him the importance of his decision. The statute to which I desire to direct his attention is Federal Statute No. 27, 1906, volume 34, page 49, section 3:

No executive department or other Government establishment of the United States shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year or involve the Government in any contract or other obligation for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations unless such contract or obligation is authorized by law. Nor shall any department or any officer of the Government accept voluntary service for the Government or employ personal service in excess of that authorized by law, except in cases of sudden emergency involving the loss of human life or the destruction of property. All appropriations made for contingent expenses or other general purposes, except appropriations made in fulfillment of contract obligations expressly authorized by law, or for objects required or authorized by law without reference to the amounts annually appropriated therefor, shall, on or before the beginning of each fiscal year, be so apportioned by monthly or other allotments as to prevent expenditures in one portion of the year which may necessitate deficiency or additional appropriations to complete the service of the fiscal year for which said appropriations are made; and all such apportionments shall be adhered to and shall not be waived or modified except upon the happening of some extraordinary emergency or unusual circumstance which could not be anticipated at the time of making such apportionment, but this provision shall not apply to the contingent appropriations of the Senate or House of Representatives; and in case said apportionments are waived or modified as herein provided, the same shall be waived or modified in writing by the head of such executive department or other Government establishment having control of the expenditure, and the reasons therefor shall be fully set forth in each particular case and communicated to Congress in connection with estimates for any additional appropriations required on account thereof. Any person violating any provision of this section shall be summarily removed from office and may also be punished by a fine of not less than $100 or by imprisonment for not less than one month.

If the Chairman should rule that an anticipated deficit can not be met in a deficiency bill, that ruling will carry with it the following result: That the Appropriations Committee can only appropriate for anticipated deficiencies where the amounts involved are contingent expenses or for other general purposes which have been apportioned and the apportionment subsequently waived with notification of the reasons given to Congress in accordance with the law I have cited.

So that an appropriation for a special object where there was a deficiency to be anticipated or an appropriation for an emergency or an appropriation to extend and add to any work by any department or bureau could not be met in a deficiency bill, as this would be an anticipated deficit and not an actual deficit. The result of the Chairman thus ruling would mean that anything of this character must be met in a special bill and come from the appropriating committees having charge of the subject matter.

To obtain a ruling on this point, a most important one, I have raised this question at this time in relation to the particular item for the Council of National Defense, because the deficiency in this case is an anticipated one and is not in order unless anticipated deficiencies, other than those authorized in accordance with the law I have read, can be met in a deficiency bill.

I desire to direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that there is no law which says that anticipated deficiencies of this character can not be met in a deficiency bill; that there is no rule on this point and no ruling. I therefore ask for a ruling on the point of order which I have just made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will withhold his point of order for a moment until the Chair has asked the question. Could the gentleman explain a little more clearly to the Chair just what he means by an anticipated deficiency as distinguished from a deficiency?

Mr. TINKHAM. A deficiency would be money which had been expended or even contracted for so that it must be expended where there was no appropriation to pay, or it would be in accordance with the statute which I have just read an anticipated deficiency where there had been a waiver of the apportionment required under the law and reasons certified to Congress.

The amounts appropriated in this item and, in fact, in nearly all of the items in this deficiency bill are amounts for the various departments and bureaus which are needed for the continuation of the service or for the expansion of the service or for emergency requirements before the next annual appropriation bills. In other words, there is no deficiency to-day, but there is an anticipated one unless Congress makes appropriations asked for. An actual deficit could not be created without violating the law which I have just read in many of these cases.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the point of order to which I desire to call attention of the Chair is that in the point of order made by me a moment ago it was claimed that this item was not a deficiency item, and that is the same point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask my colleague, who is on the Committee on Appropriations, if he raised this exact question when the bill was under discussion in his committee?

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to answer the question, because it allows me to state in reply why I have raised the question at this time.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no; it will do nothing of the kind. The gentleman must confine himself to the question.

Mr. TINKHAM. I am going to answer my colleague's question. I have been asked a question. Does the Chair rule that I can not answer it?

The CHAIRMAN. Unless it be pertinent to the point of order before the committee. The gentleman will proceed to discuss the point of order. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I can not proceed further until I know whether my colleague did or did not raise this question in the committee, and in view of the ruling of the Chair I will not proceed.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this is certainly a very interesting and far-reaching point of order, but one that does not seem to me to present any great difficulty. The Chair has asked how the distinction may be made between an actual deficiency and a problematical, or conjectural, deficiency. To ask the question is to answer it. A deficiency is a shortage. Until a shortage of the fund takes place, there is no deficiency. There is a statute on the subject plainly showing the concept of a deficiency in the legislative mind. This statute does not deal with problematical or conjectural deficiencies, but with plain, old-fashioned shortages. Having in mind actual shortages, the statute forbids their creation and punishes the officials who bring them to pass. This statute was made necessary by reason of the fact that the Congress would often make appropriations, and the departments thinking, as they frequently do, that Congress did not know what it was doing, or was lacking in vision, would proceed to expend the money in hand before the purposes intended to be accomplished by the fund were actually secured or else would create obligations for the Government in excess of the amount appropriated for the work or object in contemplation. In either case an actual shortage would arise. This shortage, and any shortage is an actual shortage, is a deficiency in ordinary contemplation. A request for an additional appropriation by a department is a perfectly valid and competent request, but an appropriation in conformity with that request is certainly not a deficiency appropriation, whatever else it may be. The Congress tired of the unlawful acts of the departments in contracting to expend or actually expending amounts in excess of those set aside for expenditure by the lawmaking body. Hence the penal statute, known as the antideficiency act.

This act made it penal for a department to bring about any shortage of funds, either by actual expenditure or contract obligations, with a saving clause to meet urgent conditions. This saving clause afforded a measure of discretion to the departments for exercise in emergencies. In the discharge of that discretion in emergencies a department might create a deficit, but was required to report the fact and the imperious reasons for this extraordinary action to the Congress. This saving clause gives the departments sufficient leeway to meet and deal with unexpected situations, while in the main deficiencies are forbidden. This is a very wholesome statute, and, as I have said, very clearly shows the legislative concept of a deficiency. But if there is no actual shortage, if it is merely considered that on the whole more money will be required for the consummation of a particular project than the amount originally appropriated, the committee making that original appropriation, not the deficiency committee, should be asked to make and in a proper case should award a supplementary allowance. That would be the proper and lawful course to pursue. The Committee on Appropriations possesses full power to meet that precise situation, but the effort to do so should not be made in a deficiency bill which in its nature and essence deals with shortages or deficiencies, not with supplementary allowances in advance of actual shortages. There is no lack of authority in the Appropriations Committee to provide for any lawful request of an executive department. If an appropriation of a hundred millions is made in a sundry civil bill, and the department handling the appropriation establishes the fact that another $100,000,000 is needed, whether that need is due to the advance in labor and other costs or to more ambitious schemes of expenditure by the department, that increase can be afforded by another sundry civil bill. But, as I have stated, that supplementary allowance is in no sense a deficiency. The department is forbidden to create a deficiency, save as provided.

Mr. WALSH. Suppose this related to the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States, would the appropriations have to be made by the Military Committee or the Naval Committee?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No.

Mr. WALSH. Why not?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Because so far as deficiencies are concerned, they are dealt with in one deficiency committee belonging to the general Committee on Appropriations. There is no such thing, so far as I am aware, as a military or naval deficiency committee.

Mr. WALSH. But I meant a situation which the gentleman was describing, where it did not represent an actual shortage.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What committee would deal with it in the judgment of the gentleman?

Mr. WALSH. The Appropriations Committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No. The Naval or Military Committee, as the case might be, would be competent to report another bill. Why not? Are not these appropriating committees for the very purpose of enabling the public business to go forward clothed with the exceptional right of being able to report bills at any time? At any time that a committee that has the general appropriating power and is advised that some work or project over which it exercises jurisdiction, fairly requires an additional appropriation, lacking which the public interests will suffer, such a committee can report to this House a bill affording the necessary supplementary allowance. The fact that such an appropriation may have been carried heretofore in a deficiency bill does not alter the situation.

Now it is very proper that this should be so, and that the executive department which conceives that it needs a larger allowance, should submit its request for this additional allowance to the committee which afforded it the initial appropriation, so that the House, being advised through its committee of the facts, can determine whether it will make the allowance asked for. This requirement maintains the principle of the antideficiency law and the rights and prerogatives of the Congress to determine policies, and the amounts to be expended by the departments. We alone hold the purse strings of the Nation. Committees should not cross lines. What is the need of a deficiency bill, if it is not to deal with deficiencies? Why should it interfere with other committees and the work which appropriately belongs to them?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Is money to be spent in the future concerning a new plan, under possibly an existing law, a deficiency?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Your very statement shows that such an expenditure would not be a deficiency.

Mr. BLANTON. That is exactly what this money is to be spent for. It is to be spent in the future.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If there is no actual shortage, why, there is no deficiency.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. How would you get, under the antideficiency law, an actual shortage?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Very easily, indeed. Do as these departments have often done heretofore—violate the law. Spend your appropriation before you complete what Congress has ordered to be done, or enter into obligations in excess of the appropriation, and a deficiency will be thereby created. A department can also create an actual deficiency by exercising the powers given to it for an emergency.

Mr. GARNER. In other words, they must follow this statute, then, before there is a deficiency, and in each instance if a Member of Congress made the point of order that it was not a deficiency it would be incumbent upon the Member in charge of the bill to show that there was a deficiency?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Precisely. Is not that what our parliamentary law requires?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman this question with reference to this appropriation: Assume, for the sake of argument, that it is not a deficiency, but it is a sum that the Council of National Defense and the committee expect will be necessary between now and July 1, beginning the next fiscal year, to run their organization; now, this is an appropriation which is carried in the sundry civil bill. The sundry civil bill for this fiscal year has passed and has been disposed of by Congress; now, if the contention of the gentleman is correct, how on earth would Congress ever be able to make the necessary appropriations unless it was through a deficiency bill?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I was on the point of developing, by way of illustration, the situation involved in my friend's question. There is no limitation on the power of the Appropriations Committee to report as many sundry civil bills as may be thought necessary during a session of Congress. The Committee on Appropriations can report as many of them during a session as the public needs may require. The sundry civil bill is under the jurisdiction of the sundry civil subcommittee. But, to answer further your question. You ask me how the necessary appropriations to meet the public needs would be made if my contention is correct. My answer is, by the appropriate committees. This point is not in derogation of the power of the House. It merely raises the question whether a deficiency bill should deal with anything but deficiencies.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] asked me a question which I undertook to answer by stating that there are only two ways in which a deficiency or shortage can be created. One is for a department to violate the statute; the other is by conforming to the statute. Both will create deficiencies which can be appropriated for in a deficiency bill, but only one will be penal. The shortage will take place whether the statute is violated or not. In the one case the department will be punishable under the law should it create a deficiency, but in both cases the shortage created can be appropriately provided for in a deficiency bill.

Mr. TINKHAM. I would like to ask the honorable gentleman from Virginia a question. I note by the bill that it is for deficiencies, and for other purposes.

Now, if the Committee on Appropriations has the right at any time to report a bill concerning the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses or sundry civil expenses, then, this being for other purposes, other than deficiencies, it might allow this appropriation to stand in the deficiency bill, not as a deficit but as an appropriation over which they have jurisdiction.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But the committee lacks jurisdiction as to matters that are not deficiencies.

Mr. TINKHAM. In this particular department, then.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It is without jurisdiction to deal with such matters. This is a deficiency bill, which, under the rules, should deal with deficiencies.

Mr. TINKHAM. But it says, "Deficiencies and other purposes."

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will say to my friend from Massachusetts that committees, by putting in words of that character can not secure a jurisdiction not afforded to them by the rules. If so, it would be a very simple process for any one committee to take jurisdiction over any and all subjects.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Suppose, as a matter of fact, taking the appropriation now under consideration as an example, the appropriation for the Council of National Defense, it is ascertained by the committee that, say, $100,000 will be needed by the Council of National Defense to carry on its activities throughout the entire fiscal year, but that the Congress appropriated on the sundry civil bill only $50,000.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, later on the Council of National Defense comes before the committee and says, "We needed $100,000, and you gave us only $50,000." Could not that be fairly construed to be a deficiency in the amount of money necessary to carry on the activities of the Council of National Defense?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will return the question to my friend. Does he think that upon the facts stated, a deficiency in common ordinary parlance such as was contemplated by the antideficiency act, exists?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. A deficiency in the appropriation.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What is a deficiency? It is a shortage in one case in the funds that have been appropriated for a certain specific purpose created by the misconduct of the department charged with the expenditure of those funds. If that is not a deficiency, what is a deficiency? I have been waiting for some one to make clear the proposition that a supplementary allowance to a legitimate proposition, is a deficiency or shortage.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. In the appropriations for the departments we usually intend to appropriate all that is necessary.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. All that we expect for them to expend on a given line.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. For the fiscal year.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes. We have made it penal for them to expend more on that line than we have appropriated.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. If we have failed to appropriate what is absolutely necessary, does not the gentleman think it should be called "a deficiency"?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman is an English scholar. Does he think that the development of the fact that more money in the result will be needed, either to carry out the original project, or to expand it, establishes that there is a present shortage, or deficiency?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Sometimes legal and sometimes rational considerations do not coincide.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The law should be followed, if it is clear. But in this case the law and reason are in harmony.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Is there any precedent for such action?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not believe there is any precedent for holding that, as a matter of law, a deficiency bill can make appropriations that are not for deficiencies.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Is it not the custom of the House?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes; it is often done, without objection, in deficiency bills.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I am asking for information.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The practice with respect to this bill is the same that prevails with regard to other appropriation bills, namely, that they contain many items without warrant of law, but it has been often ruled that an unlawful thing may be carried in an appropriation bill for 50 years, and yet when a point of order is directed to that illegality and the presiding officer is asked to rule, the offending matter must be expunged. The protagonist of the bill must afford the authority that justifies the particular appropriation that is assailed. [Applause.]

Mr. FAIRFIELD. It would seem, then, not to be a deficiency.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have shown one way in which an actual deficiency can be created by a department, namely, by a violation of the statute, also the other way in which it may create one by conforming to the statute, and exercising the discretion which that statute affords. But in both cases there is a real shortage, or deficiency. There is no occasion to bring conjecture into play.

Mr. GARNER. In each instance, then, in order to create a deficiency, under your contention, it would be necessary for the department which is authorized to function under an appropriation by Congress to report back to Congress under the terms provided by law?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes. As I have pointed out, Mr. Chairman, this point of order does not impinge upon or limit the power of Congress. It does not impinge upon or limit the power of the Appropriations Committee. It does not shackle the Congress in any way. It does not hamstring the departments in the slightest degree. If sustained, the effect will be that in substance we will say to the Committee on Appropriations: "If you are confronted with a deficiency, appropriate for it in a deficiency bill, but if there is no deficiency, make the necessary appropriation by a bill reported from a committee that has jurisdiction." [Applause.]

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, I think some confusion arises in coupling the words "in anticipation" with "deficiency." I grant you, for the purposes of the argument, that the position taken by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], when he coupled with "deficiency" the words "in anticipation," in so far as this legislation is concerned, would be primarily correct. But in the consideration of this particular measure one must look to the title of the bill and to the purposes of the bill. Now, the bill itself in its title says that it is "A bill making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year euding June 30, 1920." Therefore the title to the bill clearly expresses the purpose and the intent of the bill. What is the purpose and intent of the bill? To supply a deficiency. In what? Not in anticipation of some future indebtedness, but to supply a deficiency in the appropriation which has already been made. Therefore it is apparent from the face of the bill and the title of the bill that the first premise in this argument is this: Was there an appropriation made? That seems to be beyond dispute, to wit, that there was an appropriation made for this purpose—for the establishment and maintenance of the Council of National Defense.

Then the next process in reasoning would be, if this bill is to meet the provisions of its title and its intent, Was that appropriation insufficient? In the judgment of the committee it seemed that the appropriation was insufficient, and therefore the purpose of this bill, as expressed by its title, is not to meet in anticipation a future indebtedness that might be contracted, but it is for the purpose of supplying a deficiency in an appropriation already made, which has been found to be insufficient.

Now, if that be true, we have but two steps in the reasoning, excluding what was inadvertently, I think, suggested by the chairman of the committee himself, that it was an anticipated deficiency.

Really, what is a deficiency? I suppose Webster's definition would govern the chairman in regard to the construction of words. Webster's definition of deficiency is—a state of being deficient; lack or insufficiency; failure; incompleteness.

And in construing phrases we have this very definite idea as expressed in regard to deficiency bills, for Webster says:

Deficiency bill: A legislative measure for increasing some previous appropriation of money.

And that is the conclusion of this argument, so far as my humble judgment is concerned, in regard to the germaneness of this provision in this bill and in regard to its being in order. In other words, it is exactly what Webster says it is. It is a legislative measure for increasing some previous appropriation of money.

Mr. WALSH. My colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM], used the expression "anticipatory deficiency," and read some statute which places a prohibition on officers expending money or incurring obligations beyond the sum of money made available. Now, the mere fact that a department head had a certain sum of money appropriated for the purposes of the Government work under his supervision, and that he increased obligations beyond that sum which it is necessary to meet within a certain fiscal year, does not necessarily make it follow that we are precluded from making an additional appropriation. The department may have money on hand at the time the appropriation is made, but before the end of the year arrives that department may find itself short of funds, and that is an existing deficiency. It is not necessarily an anticipatory deficiency, because the obligation may have been incurred at the time the additional appropriation was requested.

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. TINKHAM. If the obligation had not been incurred—and I think an examination of the hearings will disclose that as to this particular item no obligations have been incurred, or but a few, if any—then the appropriation is anticipatory in every characteristic, as there is no present deficit, but only one which will occur in the future, if what the commission desires to do is done.

Mr. WALSH. No; it is not anticipatory. I should say if the department has got money on hand, and the obligations which it has incurred will not require more money than that which it has available for the balance of the year, then to make an appropriation in a bill like this is to authorize new work.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. May I call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to this condition which would exist if this point of order should be sustained? For instance, you have in this bill appropriations made for deficiencies in the foreign service. The original appropriation bill comes from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. You will probably have some, I believe, from the Post Office Department and some from the Agricultural Department.

Mr. GOOD. And from the War Risk.

Mr. GARNER. And the War Risk and other appropriations. Now, let me call attention to the fact that if this point of order should be sustained and this committee could not bring in deficiencies for this purpose, then each one of the original committees would have to bring in an appropriation bill appropriating this money. Now, understand me, I am not saying there is not a good deal of merit in the suggestion made by the gentleman from Virginia under the strict rules of this House; but if the gentleman will permit just one other suggestion in this connection, it directs attention to this one fact that the committees of this House have concurrent jurisdiction on appropriations, and that if a department goes to the Agricultural Committee or the Naval Affairs Committee to get a certain lump sum or other appropriation to conduct its affairs, if it does not get what it wants it comes back to the Appropriations Committee, and if it can finally convince that committee it gets the money. This illustrates the importance of having one appropriations committee rather than half a dozen.

Mr. WALSH. There is much merit in what the gentleman from Texas says, but after all this is a matter of the rules of the House and not a question of statute. The statute does not say that Congress can not appropriate in case the executive head incurs obligations beyond the appropriation. Certainly if a deficiency is created Congress can appropriate money to cover that. But it is a question of the rules of this House, and it is not necessary to interpret that statute. If these executive chiefs have violated the terms of the previous statute, that certainly does not mean that the rules of the House preclude Congress from appropriating money to cover any deficiency that may exist by reason of expenditures made or obligations incurred.

Mr. LITTLE. It has just occurred to me that if there is a law authorizing an appropriation, and Congress has appropriated for it, that ought to close the matter. If it has not appropriated for it, then there is a deficiency. But whether you call it a law or a rule, if Congress has appropriated for everything that the law authorizes it to do, it ought to be through. Congress can not appropriate for anything unless there is a law authorizing it, and if it has followed out the law it is finished. If there is no previous law, it can not make the law for it at the time it passes the appropriation. The law is exhausted after it is obeyed for any given period.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman undertakes to say that the law must be made anew each year when the appropriation is made. That is not necessary.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, but will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Before the Chair rules I want to put this statement in the RECORD. It is from page 45 of the hearings, and it occurred on December 31, 1919, the last of last month:

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; you had, all told, for this half year $103,640, and you have on hand $18,000.
Mr. CLARKSON. With a present monthly expense of about $11,000.

That shows that after paying the expenses for this month of January they will still have on hand $7,000 unexpended on the 1st day of February, 1920, which clearly shows that it is not a deficit but that this proposed appropriation is for a future expenditure.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, let me put this in. I stated in response to an inquiry by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] that the committee could in the course of the year introduce half a dozen deficiency bills if necessary. I wish to call attention to the fact that the deficiency bill in the last line says, "This is to be known hereafter as the second deficiency appropriation act." The other appropriation committees have just as much right to make supplementary appropriations as this committee had.

The CHAIRMAN. The act cited by the gentleman from Massachusetts and explained with clearness by the gentleman from Virginia does not, as it seems to the Chair, enter into the consideration of this point of order. The act referred to was passed for the purpose of controlling heads of departments in the disbursement of appropriations, and not to affect in any way the rules of the House or the proceedings of the House in making appropriations. Therefore the Chair does not feel called upon to construe the act.

The point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts is that the paragraph in question does not present a deficiency. He distinguishes between a deficiency and an anticipatory or anticipated deficiency. The Chair is not able, however, to follow this line of argument to any satisfactory conclusion, being unable to distinguish between a deficiency and an anticipated deficiency or an anticipatory deficiency. If the paragraph does not present a deficiency in the parliamentary sense of the word as used in this House it has no place in the bill.

It has been shown that this appropriation sought be made in this paragraph is authorized by existing law. It is also shown that it was appropriated for in a previous act, now current law.

The question now is whether the present paragraph is a deficiency item appropriate to be included in a deficiency bill.

A deficiency, as used in this House, as was so ably explained by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT], means a deficiency in an appropriation heretofore made. In the practice of the House deficiency bills have always carried the items for the expense of carrying on the different departments of the Government for the time intervening before the end of the current fiscal year. It has been the practice in the House that each appropriating committee, other than the Committee on Appropriations, shall bring out one appropriation bill each fiscal year. The Appropriations Committee brings out the sundry civil bill, one District appropriation bill, one fortfications bill, one legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, one pension appropriation bill, and such number of deficiency bills as may be necessary to take care of the deficiencies arising from lack of sufficient appropriations in all the other bills for carrying on the various activities of the Government to the end of the fiscal year.

It is clear to the Chair that an estimate having been brought in by a department of the Government, the estimate having been considered by the Appropriations Committee, and it having been found by that committee to be necessary to add to the appropriations heretofore made an additional sum to carry on the activities of this particular department to the end of the present fiscal year, it was properly included in this bill as a deficiency item. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think it is proper for me to explain why I made the point of order against the section and now seek to strike it out. The bill states that a part of the purpose of this $50,000 is to carry on the investigation of subordinate bodies under the Council of National Defense and the expenses of the subordinate bodies. I want to call the attention of the House to one of the subordinate bodies. In Stamford, Jones County, Tex., the offices of this particular subordinate body issued what they called their summons in a printed notice to every citizen in Stamford community over 16 years old, stating that by virtue of the laws of the Council of National Defense you are hereby summoned to be and appear at the Methodist Church in Stamford on next Thursday night, then and there to show how many Liberty bonds you have purchased, how many war-savings stamps and certificates you have purchased, and other matters pertaining to their private affairs. And you are hereby notified by the Council of National Defense that you have been assessed the sum of so much in money each, and you are required to bring that sum with you on next Thursday night or suffer the consequences under penalty, and so forth.

That notice was addressed to every person, white and black, man, woman, and child over 16 years of age in the Stamford community. Of course a great many people paid no attention to it. They were not there on that Thursday night. Then a second summons was sent in this way: "Final summons. Inasmuch as you disobeyed the order last sent you by this council of national defense and failed to appear at the time and place named and failed to bring the assessment with you and failed to give the information requested of you, you are hereby commanded to appear at such a place, Stamford, Tex., on such a night, under penalty," and so forth.

Do you think that any unbusinesslike people sent that out? No. There was the president of a big national bank who signed that summons. Among the directors who signed that summons was a man who has sat in that gallery month after month, a lobbyist, Homer G. Wade. Men of intelligence sent that kind of a summons out to people, American citizens.

People began to wire me as to what their rights were, whether they were to be taxed by a local organization, and whether they could be forced to appear at public places and give information as to their private affairs. I took the matter up with the Council of National Defense, and it took an order from it to stop it through the San Antonio office in Texas.

I say when such monkey business as that is being carried on in the name of the law and in the name of the Council of National Defense by one of the subordinate bodies, spending money for such monkey business as that, the appropriation of $50,000 ought to be stricken out.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman does not mean to seriously contend that that board he speaks of was a subordinate body of this Council of National Defense?

Mr. BLANTON. Of course it was.

Mr. BLACK. It has no subordinate bodies of that kind.

Mr. BLANTON. It was a subordinate body that was controlled by this office at Washington through the office at San Antonio.

Mr. BLACK. It had no connection with it. It was a local organization, such as they had all over the country.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; but it was a local organization of the Council of National Defense for Stamford, Jones County, Tex., claiming to be a part of the National Council here in Washington.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is that in the gentleman's district?

Mr. BLANTON. It is; and I am against appropriating money that can be expended by any subordinate organization with such little sense.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GOOD rose.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. This Council of National Defense was created in an appropriation bill coming from the gentleman's committee?

Mr. GOOD. No; it came from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GARNER. And the appropriation for it is now carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill, from the gentleman's committee?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. It just occurred to me that 12 or 14 months after the war is over, in view of the very name of the institution, it must have been created for the purpose of defense of the Nation and that probably its duties and functions have ceased to exist. I would like to have the gentleman state to the House just exactly what the duties and necessities are now for this Council of National Defense and how long he anticipates the Council of National Defense will exist?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I had the same opinion that the gentleman has expressed in regard to this law. I thought it was a war organization, but when the matter came before the committee we ascertained that the act creating the council was approved August 29, 1916, and it is the opinion of the Secretary of War, and, I understand, the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, and of the Interior, and of Commerce, and of Labor, and of Agriculture, all of whom are members of the council, that it is a peace time preparedness organization that should be continued and preserved.

They are doing some things that I do not approve of. I approved of the inquiry of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] last year when he brought them to time because they were issuing bulletins telling farmers how to keep their live stock off the railroad tracks in order to increase the food supply of the Nation. They are doing a whole lot of things with regard to the high cost of living that it seemed to the committee are not a part of their function; but when it comes to correlating the work of the various departments so as to furnish the actual information as to what our productivity does amount to, so far as military supplies and food supplies are concerned, it seemed that it was an organization tending to bring about a speaking relationship between the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, and so on, in regard to what the situation is in the various departments, to the end that all information as to production might be at hand at any time, and it ought not to cost very much money to continue such an organization.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. What is the actual expense of this council per year?

Mr. GOOD. There was an unexpended balance on the 1st of July of $87,464. In addition to that, they received in rentals $16,176, and that gave them $103,640. They have a balance on hand of $18,000. They have 63 persons, as I remember, with a director and other officers, in the departments. They asked for $150,000 for the rest of the year. The committee has very much reduced their estimates, as gentlemen can see, and the appropriation carried here will provide for a very much reduced force. The complaints that have come to the committee have not been because we have given too much but because we did not give enough.

Mr. SNELL. What actual loss would it be to the country if at this time this war commission ceased to function?

Mr. GOOD. I think there would be a considerable loss if it ceased to function now, because the Council of National Defense have all of the files of the War Industry Board, and certain other files of other war activities as well as functions have been turned over to them. Gen. Lord, of the finance department, goes to the Council of National Defense every day for his information to settle war contracts. Other departments go there for similar information. They could not get the information unless we turned these records over to some other bureau, if this one was abolished. I think for the rest of the year, at least, whether you want it or not permanently, or until these contracts are taken care of, and until we have provided for some other depository for this information and the records, it is absolutely necessary to continue the council.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Does the gentleman favor making this a permanent part of the functions of our National Government?

Mr. GOOD. The law creating the council makes it permanent. I would say to the gentleman that we did not go into the question with that thoroughness to warrant giving him an answer as to whether that act should be repealed. We went into it because of certain functions they are performing now, of certain work which has been turned over to them by the President, and to continue for the rest of this year at least the work the council is engaged in.

Mr. LAYTON. Could the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. GOOD. I have tried to answer it.

Mr. LAYTON. Can not the gentleman give me his personal opinion in regard to the matter?

Mr. GOOD. It would not be worth anything because I have not studied it enough to know.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The particular item here appropriates for expenses of experimental work. Was there any testimony in the hearings in respect to the nature and character of the experimental work?

Mr. GOOD. No. I will say to the gentleman that we have, as he knows, in carrying these items in the appropriation bill, carried them in the language in which the original appropriation is made, but I do not suppose that with this appropriation we are giving them here they would be able to do any experimental work. It was not the intention of the committee that they should have any money for that purpose.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Do I understand that it is necessary to have another department or division in order that one department can get some information or see some records in another department?

Mr. GOOD. That was the law we passed, which was approved August 29, 1916, when it was supposed that we would never be in the war at all.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If so, then I think we would need to modify that statute.

Mr. GOOD. They were supposed, under that law, to work out defense problems, so that the country could prepare for an emergency.

Mr. GARNER. What I understood the gentleman to ask was, was it necessary to have this organization in order to have one department get the records of another department?

Mr. GOOD. No. The War Industries Board has disbanded, and their records have all been turned over to the Council of National Defense, and for the balance of this year and for longer no department could get this information without the council unless you found another depository.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] that when the Council of National Defense came before the sundry civil subcommittee in the last session I entertained the view that it was one of the war emergencies which should be discontinued. I believed all of them should be discontinued. But upon investigation I learned I was entirely wrong in my impression; that the true purpose of the Council of National Defense was as a peace-time agency and not a war instrumentality. I found, as has been stated, that the Council of National Defense, beyond the scope of its functions, was making investigations that I do not think they had any right to make; but the purpose of the Council of National Defense, as provided in the original act, is what they are now attempting to carry out, namely, the coordination of the military activities of the Government. And in order to do that they have established a board having a representative from the Navy Department, the War Department, and from the other departments of the Government. That board meets, and its purpose is to prevent a duplication of effort on the part of the various departments of the Government. It is said, and correctly said, that various departments are constantly engaged in the same kind of activities, and the only way in which it can be corrected is to have a clearing house, where information can be had of the activities of the various departments.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. LAYTON. What relation does this have to the time of peace? What particular function would this have in time of peace that could not be subserved by some other department of the National Government already existing?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will tell the gentleman that. Here is what actuated the Congress, I have no doubt, in originally establishing the council. When we get into war it is too late to ascertain how many industries of this country are capable of being immediately converted into the manufacture of munitions. That information must be at hand; it must be in the department. They must have on record exactly that information. And, in addition, they must have information as to how many pairs of shoes can be manufactured, how many uniforms can be made, and the possible output of the various industrial concerns. Complete information as to the military resources of the country is essential to the prosecution of a war. If we do not have one agency doing that, the result would be that you would have five or six agencies doing it, each one duplicating the efforts of the other, with additional clerks and additional expense to the taxpayers of the Government. There is no reason on earth why one agency can not secure full information as to the industries of the country from which supplies can be obtained, and if the council has that information, if war should ever come to us, it can then be drawn upon by every department that is under the necessity of securing the information. During the war the Council of National Defense had to go, shortly after its organization, beyond its peace-time activities, and it became an emergency proposition. It could not perform any of the functions originally anticipated. It is now proceeding to carry out the provisions of the act creating the council.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. HUSTED. I wish to ask the gentleman if, as things now stand, as the General Staff is now constituted, we would have anything in this country from which a real general staff could be had without the continuance of this organization?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Not at all. And I will say this: The records of the Food Administration, the War Industries Board, and various other war agencies have been turned over to the Council of Defense. From these records information is being compiled so that if the necessity ever comes the Government can draw upon it, and all of the valuable information obtained during the war will be available to the Government. Abolish it, and who would you expect to do this? If it was a large expenditure, I might not approve it; but I feel that it will serve a worthy purpose, and therefore we can not afford to discontinue it at this time.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman is of the opinion that this is a bureau that should continue indefinitely?

Mr. BYNRES of South Carolina. I think so.

Mr. GARNER. If that is true, is it not the duty of your committee to reorganize and place the salaries of this bureau as they should be, and let Congress direct its activities?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I think so.

Mr. GARNER. Instead of doing that you are making a lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The situation as to the appropriation was this——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Now, the appropriations were made originally with the intent that they would carry this organization until this time, the statement being made to the committee that by this time they would be in a position to tell just exactly what organization would be necessary for the carrying out of the functions of this peace-time organization. In the middle of the year they have come in with this estimate for an appropriation far in excess of what this committee is giving to them. The purpose of the committee is that in the legislation for the next fiscal year Congress shall do exactly what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] believes should be done, and it should be done then by the sundry civil subcommittee, of which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is also the chairman.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. GARNER. I notice in creating these new bureaus for the purpose of getting away from duplication you never cut down the appropriations for the other fellows; and allow me to call your attention to the fact that this duplication work is one of the reasons we gave for passing the so-called budget bill, namely, that we were going to bunch the matters so that there would be no more duplication.

Yet here you have an organization whose principal function and reason for its life and existence is to keep on duplicating some of the work that is being done or can be done elsewhere.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If we could only pass the budget bill it might not be necessary.

Mr. GARNER. If you can get the other body to function on that bill, we would have it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Perhaps the gentleman from Texas has more influence over there than I have.

Mr. GARNER. I want to direct the attention of the gentleman further to the fact that the Department of Commerce can do the very things which he says this council should be continued for, first, to ascertain the resources of this country in case of war. I understand that we are going to carry this Council of National Defense for an indefinite period, because of the fact that we want to keep our hands on what is being produced in this country for use in case of war. I do not think this is needed for any such purpose.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman will examine the hearings he will notice that I examined the representatives of the Council of National Defense on that very point, but I do not believe the Department of Commerce does any work in conflict with the work of the council.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Can the gentleman inform us whether the Council of National Defense is taking any part in the propaganda that is being carried on throughout the country in favor of compulsory military training?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I never heard of it before, and I am satisfied they are not. Certainly they are not authorized to engage in such work.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BEE. I am not familiar with the functions of the Council of National Defense, but I am rather inclined to agree to the statement of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] that it ought to be maintained at least for this time.

But that is not the point upon which I rose to speak. My colleague [Mr. BLANTON] has referred to an instance in Stamford, Jones County, in his district. I am satisfied that the statements made by him are absolutely correct and that this local council in Stamford far exceeded its authority under the statements so set out. But I want to say a word—and I think I would be recreant in my duty if I did not say it—in behalf of the Council of Defense in the State of Texas, of which this Stamford branch was probably a subsidiary organization. I was a member of the senate of Texas which incorporated and put into life this Council of Defense in Texas. The governor of Texas and myself at that time and subsequently were not in agreement, but I want to do him the justice of saying that he appointed to the membership of that council from the citizenship of Texas the best men he could find, and they served splendidly, patriotically, and unselfishly in the interest of their country at the time the honor of our flag was involved, without any recompense except a sense of duty well done. The secretary of that organization—and I speak of this especially, because the secretary of that organization was the man upon whom the heat and burden of the day fell in connection with this work—is an honored citizen of my city of San Antonio, Judge J. F. Carl, at one time on the appellate bench of the State.

These men may have made mistakes. I am not commending the action at Stamford. This Council of Defense in Texas may have made mistakes. They may have gone too far in bringing responsibility and patriotism and duty to the doors of the citizenship of that State. I came in contact with them in the performance of their duty, and I know that no more unselfish body of men ever more patriotically served their country and their Commonwealth than did the members of the Council of Defense for the State of Texas. I regret that hardships were inflicted. I regret that the patriotism of some men swept them beyond their moorings. But I could not sit silent and allow imputations to be made, though not intended, as to the State council and let it go out that that organization sanctioned this character of action, or that that organization in our State—and I believe in every other State of this Union—stood for but one thing, and that was the strongest effort to win this war and to bring victory to yonder flag. [Applause.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word. I took part in the legislation creating the Council of National Defense. I felt then that it was a good thing to do. I believe it is a good thing now to continue the Council of National Defense, if kept within due bounds.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] very clearly defined the purposes for which the council was created. The intention was to have the various members of the Cabinet act as the council, with authority to appoint an advisory commission or subcommittee for the purpose of taking an inventory of all the assets in our country that might be utilized in time of war.

That was the purpose of the thing, that was the purpose for which it was intended; and it is a laudable purpose, in my judgment. But what are the facts? As soon as we got into the war they began to appoint subcommittees, and they had subcommittees on every conceivable subject; not advisory committees, as the law intended they should be in every instance, but committees which assumed jurisdiction to act, such as the Committee on Emergency Contracts, the Committee on the Allocation of Lumber, the Committee on Copper, the Committee on Cement, and various other committees. Instead of acting as advisers to the War Department and the Navy Department, they took upon themselves the authority of action, and they did act and become administrators.

Now, in my judgment we ought to continue the Council of National Defense, give them sufficient money to keep up their organization, and continue the acquisition of this information which the country desires to have on hand, but they should not be permitted to enter into the field of investigation and experimentation, as is provided for in this scheme. That ought to be cut out, and they ought to go on and do the work which the Congress intended they should do when we enacted the law. I shall offer a simple amendment, Mr. Chairman, that will confine, as I believe, the Council of National Defense to the duties which they ought to perform.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKENZIE: Page 2, line 11, after the word "of," strike out "experimental work and investigation undertaken by," and on page 2, lines 12 and 13, strike out the words "by the advisory commission, or subordinate bodies."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is recognized.

Mr. GOOD. I think the vote first recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] to perfect the text.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. GOOD. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. GOOD. I should like to see if we can agree as to time.

Mr. BLACK. I want very little time. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] a question about his amendment. I do not care to argue it at all. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that the real purpose of the Council of National Defense was one of investigation and assembling information. If we strike out the words "and investigations undertaken by the Council of National Defense" that would really have the effect of destroying the purpose of the organization, would it not? I agree with the gentleman in the main purpose he has in view, and if he will modify his amendment I will be very glad to vote for it, but if investigation does not involve the searching for information I do not understand the meaning of the word.

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that I would not care to do the thing that he thinks perhaps my amendment might do, that is to cripple them in making the investigation, in preparing the inventory that we want to have on file down here; but I do not think there is any danger along that line, for the act creating the commission specifies the powers that it may exercise, and this is simply an appropriation to pay the expenses of the Council of National Defense.

Mr. BLACK. I really think there is force in what the gentleman from Illinois says.

Mr. TREADWAY. If the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is adopted, which I understand would cut out the words "experimental work and investigations undertaken by the Council of National Defense, by the advisory commission, or subordinate bodies," should it not also include, in lines 17 and 18, the words "including the expenses of members of the advisory commission or subordinate bodies, or other employees, going to and attending meetings of the advisory commission or subordinate bodies"?

You are limiting the duties of the advisory commission and subordinate bodies.

Mr. McKENZIE. Oh, no.

Mr. TREADWAY. You are striking out those words, are you not?

Mr. McKENZIE. I am striking out the power of the advisory commision to do experimental work. I have no objection to paying their expenses, including the attending of meetings. That will take up some of the matters that come directly under the jurisdiction of the council.

Mr. TREADWAY. Did I not understand the gentleman to offer an amendment striking out the words "by the advisory commission or subordinate bodies"?

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will look at the text, the language with my amendment in it will read as follows:

For expenses of the Council of National Defense; for the employment of a director—

And so forth. It provides the money to take care of them and permits them to perform all the duties that they will then have to do.

Mr. GARNER. May I ask the gentleman from South Carolina what salaries are included in this matter?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The salaries of the employees.

Mr. GARNER. What salaries are paid—$10,000 or $25,000, or what?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The salary of the director, as I remember it, is $10,000.

Mr. GARNER. They do not pay as much as they pay to one of the advisers of the Cabinet officers—$12,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. All the expenses of the council are paid out of this fund. Do I understand that the purpose of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is that no part of this fund can be used for the expenses of the advisory commission selected from the various departments for the purpose of preventing duplication of work in the departments?

Mr. McKENZIE. No; I leave that language in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas to strike out the paragraph.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Two principals of junior high schools, at $2,500 each.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia makes a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Is there any authority of law for that appropriation? Is this an increase of salary?

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. These are additional positions and are not authorized by law. I will say to the gentleman that a very serious condition confronts the schools of the District of Columbia. The superintendent of the public schools came before the committee and told us that in the month of April last year, the month in which the enrollment is the highest, they had 56,100 pupils. This year in December, when he said, according to their experience, the enrollment is low, the total enrollment in the schools was 60,000, and they are anticipating an increase this year by the month of April of 10 per cent over the enrollment of last year.

In the high schools last year they had 6,400 pupils. This year they have 8,000 pupils in the high schools. One thousand one hundred and thirty pupils will graduate from the graded schools next week, and practically all of them will enter the high schools, and only 200 graduate from the high schools at the end of this semester, so that you will have in the high schools 9,000 pupils, as compared with 6,400 last year.

The situation is very serious. We were told by the superintendent of schools that the number of students in high schools for each teacher is limited by good authority to about 30, whereas in our high schools every room has more than 30, and some have many more. The teachers have been obliged to take in these large classes, and in some places there are classes now waiting for more teachers. These two high-school principals are needed to take charge of the two schools that are being opened. The same condition prevails in the graded schools as in the high schools. We did not give the full amount requested. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia, who is as much interested in the schools as any gentleman, that I think the only thing perhaps that the committee might be criticized for is that the schools are not given more teachers. We only gave them one-half of their estimated requirement, and we did it on the theory that going in now and employing so many teachers they would no doubt take on a great many as instructors who were not equipped for teaching.

So far as the graded schools are concerned, the superintendent estimates that for these classes there ought not to be more than 40, and yet some rooms have as many as 56 students. With that condition the committee did not feel warranted in cutting the estimate any more than we have.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Has the committee made any provision for the graded schools where eighth-grade teachers also act as principals? I have in mind one school of 20 rooms where the principal is the only teacher for the eighth grade.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that this will relieve that situation.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It is a very serious situation as far as the eighth grade is concerned.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a plea to the gentleman from Virginia not to insist on his point of order for the reason that if there ever was a just request for an additional appropriation it is contained in this item.

The committee has cut in half the number of teachers asked for. To-day there are 412 classes in the high schools of more than 30. In the graded schools, out of 1,271 classes we have 547—40 per cent—with over 46 pupils and 79 with over 48. The teachers are overburdened, and even if this item is enacted into law the result is that in the schools of the District of Columbia, after February 1, they will have to cut down the course of instruction in order to take care of the pupils in the public schools in this city. Even when you give them all that the bill carries, that will have to be done.

The situation is so serious that I hope the gentleman from Virginia will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say im primis that I am convinced that the gentleman from Iowa is really an economist, and I very highly indorse his work on that line. But this particular item is one of those anticipatory, conjectural deficiencies that abound in this bill. While it is in order on that line under the ruling of the Chair, it fails to meet the requirement that each item in an appropriation bill must have a warrant in law.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will permit, I want to say that this is not even an anticipatory deficiency. It is creating new positions not considered at all in the present law.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I think that situation can be reached by a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa concede the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. I think unquestionably there is no authority for creating these new positions. The committee put in these two positions and the following positions in addition to the present force. These persons are not employed, and I think unquestionably, if the gentleman insists on the point of order, they will have to go out.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I feel that this item can be taken care of in another bill where it more appropriately belongs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Night schools: For teachers and janitors of night schools, including teachers of industrial, commercial, and trade instruction, and teachers and janitors of night schools may also be teachers and janitors of day schools, $25,000.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that proposition.

Mr. GOOD. I do not believe that is subject to a point of order. There is no definite employment for a stated number of teachers as carried in the District bill. The appropriation for the regular school-teachers carried in the District bill fixes the number of teachers, and it fixes their salaries, and the appropriation is made for that purpose. That is not true in regard to the night schools. The expense of the night schools is determined by the number of people who apply for training, and that determines the number of teachers required. The appropriation this year is altogether inadequate to supply the training for these students. Just as the number of students increases the expense increases.

Last year there was an enrollment of 6,100 at a given time, about this season. Now there are 9,400. Inasmuch as there is no specific number of teachers required, there being a lump sum, there is a deficiency in the appropriation for night schools. I do not believe this is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Could the gentleman from Iowa cite the law by which this is authorized?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to pass over this item and return to it later, as I am not able now to put my hand on the statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to pass over this item and return to it later. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent and other necessary expenses, including equipment and purchase of all necessary articles and supplies for classes in industrial, commercial, and trade instruction, $1,000.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the gentleman will want to return to this item also, will he not?

Mr. GOOD. I think that comes right along with the former item; yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I make the point of order against that.

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent that that item may be also passed over with the other, to be returned to later.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

One-half of the foregoing amounts to meet deficiencies in the appropriations on account of the District of Columbia shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the language contained in lines 16 to 20, inclusive.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman would not contend that that is not within the Holman rule?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am not contending anything. I make the point of order that it is legislation. I would like to get a ruling under the Holman rule.

Mr. GOOD. That is the act of 1878, that one-half should be paid from the District revenues and one-half from the revenues of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that has been ruled on before, and the point of order is overruled.

The Clerk read as follows:

Vocational rehabilitation: For an additional amount for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, funeral and other incidental expenses (including transportation of remains) of deceased trainees of the board, printing and binding to be done at the Government Printing Office, law books, books of reference, and periodicals, $12,000,000: Provided, That the salary limitation placed upon the appropriation for vocational rehabilitation by the sundry civil appropriation act approved July 19, 1919, shall apply to the appropriation herein made.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, after line 11, insert the following:

"The Secretary of War shall have authority to transfer to the Federal Board for Vocational Education, without compensation therefor, certain surplus machine tools and other equipment belonging to the War Department and now in possession of the Federal board and being used by that board as equipment in schools for vocational education controlled by the board. Property so transferred shall be dropped from the records of the War Department on the filing with the War Department of an itemized receipt for the articles thus transferred."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, some of these schools have received equipment from the War Department. Men are now using machines and equipment in their training that have been furnished the board by the War Department. The War Department claims now that that apparatus must be removed. If it is removed, then it will be necessary immediately to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars for new equipment. I think the value of the items referred to here amount to about $350,000 worth of equipment which the War Department turned over to the board. One of two things must be done. Either we must authorize the Secretary of War to turn it over to the Federal board or he will sell it under authority of law, and the Federal board will have to buy new.

Mr. GARNER. And he will sell it for 10 cents on the dollar, and pay 100 cents for it to get it back.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; or 150.

Mr. BANKHEAD. This equipment is absolutely needed by the Vocational Board?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; they have it now and are actually using it.

Mr. GARNER. Will this item that is in this bill, $12,000,000, relieve the situation complained of by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], with reference to the want of hospital facilities?

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from South Dakota was complaining in regard to the hospital service and not the Federal Board for Vocational Education. That is another item which we will come to later in the bill.

Mr. GARNER. Then in this bill there is provision to relieve the situation referred to by the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; for the Public Health Service.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the Good amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "board" in the Good amendment insert: "and the Secretary of War is authorized and empowered to transfer to the Federal Board for Vocational Education such additional machines, appliances, tools, and other equipment as may hereafter be declared as surplus and which the chairman of the Board for Vocational Education may certify as needed for the rehabilitation of discharged or disabled soldiers, sailors, or marines."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the situation is this: The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], chairman of the committee, applies only to the tools and equipment which already are in the hands of the Board for Vocational Education for rehabilitation of disabled soldiers. There are constantly being declared as surplus additional tools of that nature, and therefore my amendment would permit the War Department to transfer to the Board for Vocational Education those additional tools which from time to time they are declaring as surplus at the various depots where supplies of the War Department are located. I have in my district, and adjoining my district also, where they have also been established, schools under municipal authority for the purpose of serving the rehabilitation work, and there have been ordered from the surplus stock of the zone officer in Bridgeport and Springfield various tools which the department has turned over to the Board for Vocational Education. Those tools have not yet been taken out of the storehouses. Under an order issued by the Assistant Secretary of War on January 22 it is now impossible for those tools to be transferred to the Board for Vocational Education.

This subject of the transfer of the surplus stock to the Vocational Board came up through an order originally issued on May 6, 1919, by Dr. Keppel, then serving as Third Assistant Secretary of War. It was found that there was no authority for that transfer, and therefore the Assistant Secretary issued this order to which the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa refers. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa will care for the tools transferred to the Board for Vocational Education, but it will not care for tools and equipment needed by the same schools which have not already been taken out of the possession of the Secretary of War.

So it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, if we are going to give the Vocational Education Board the right to use these tools and equipment of the War Department, and practically transfer them to the Vocational Board, there is no reason in the world why they should be limited to the stock already transferred. If those articles are declared as surplus by the Secretary of War, then I maintain we can not do too much to equip these schools for the rehabilitation of the soldiers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wanted to withdraw my reservation. That explanation is entirely satisfactory to me. The purpose of my reservation was to get the information.

Mr. TREADWAY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. This is providing for turning over some additional machinery that the Vocational Rehabilitation Board may find useful in connection with its work?

Mr. TREADWAY. Absolutely.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The question I want to ask the gentleman is this: Does the amendment provide that the War Department shall turn this stuff over at their expense?

Mr. TREADWAY. No, sir. It is provided it shall be packed and shipped at the expense of the Federal board.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I was going to say that you should provide for the expense.

Mr. TREADWAY. It is provided for in the original amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Heretofore, when we directed the War Department to turn over certain materials to the Agricultural Department, they declined to do it, because they said they did not have a fund for that purpose.

Mr. TREADWAY. There is no expense to the War Department. I have a list here of over 25 schools needing this equipment, and it seems to me perfectly proper both should be included.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

The amendment to the amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, there is a technical proposition involved in that amendment. I call to the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts the fact that there is no such officer as "chairman" of the Vocational Board. It is "director."

Mr. TREADWAY. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to change my amendment accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the proposed modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modification: Strike out the word "chairman" and insert in lieu thereof the word "director."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman offers the amendment at a point about in the middle of the amendment I have offered, as I read it, and if you will read the two amendments I think it will be impossible to tell just what is intended. In the first place, what the committee attempted to do was this:

This matter was presented to the committee, and it was the intention to insert this amendment which I have offered in the bill, but by an oversight it was omitted. We have done by this amendment all the Vocational Board has requested. This is the request of the director of the Board for Vocational Education, and they have not asked for a single thing, so far as the Committee on Appropriations is concerned, for additional transfers, but they have asked the Committee on Military Affairs for legislation. Now, it does seem to me that before we give general authority to transfer everything of this kind that may be declared as surplus, we ought to have a care; we ought to know the requirements. There ought to be a hearing in order to see what the necessities are. The Federal board now wants some of these manufacturing plants in which to train the men. They have gone to the Committee on Military Affairs for authority to turn over to the Federal board some of those things. Some authority of that kind will have to be given, and I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] can well wait the action of the Military Affairs Committee on the bill that is now pending before that committee. I think it is very unwise to take action of this kind on a matter where there has been no hearing at all.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not recall the exact wording of the proposed amendment to the amendment, but I wanted to ask the gentleman this question, whether this is broad enough, for instance, to include automobiles? Or does it apply alone to tools?

Mr. TREADWAY. Tools and equipment.

Mr. GOOD. Tools, machinery, and equipment. It is a pretty broad amendment. I do not know just what it might include.

Mr. TREADWAY. The amendment offered by me only covers what is originally included in the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no; the gentleman is entirely mistaken about that. The amendment the gentleman offered is a part of the bill now pending in the Military Committee, where they ask for land, and his amendment eliminates the land and some of those other things. But it is a proposition now pending before another committee of the House, and I submit on matters of this kind we ought to act in an orderly way, and that the House ought to leave this matter to a committee that is considering the proposition.

Now, I do not know the value of this machinery that might be transferred, but here you are asked to give unlimited authority to turn over property to a board. I imagine that the Committee on Military Affairs would want to have hearings on that matter, and when those hearings are had the whole question of the needs of the service can be gone into.

Mr. Chairman, I want to move to close debate.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to speak once more in connection with what the gentleman has said. Of course, I have no right to the floor if the gentleman objects to my taking it.

Mr. GOOD. Go ahead.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, with the indulgence of the chairman of the committee, I would like to refer to the statement he has just made, that this is copied from the bill which is now before the Military Affairs Committee. It may be in somewhat similar language, but it is not taken from such a bill. He further stated that the Federal Board for Vocational Education had not applied for these tools and equipment which are hereafter to be declared surplus.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman say just what is needed?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes. I have a letter here from the Vocational Board, signed by Mr. Twitchell for the Federal Board for Vocational Education, asking for this very amendment, only not couched in exactly the terms in which I offered it in order to include it within the province of the amendment the gentleman offered. They are not asking for this amendment by original legislation or to interfere in any way with the bill before the Military Affairs Committee, but they want to secure exactly what I stated—sufficient equipment to establish these schools, for which the students are now waiting. Many of the tools and equipments are already assigned to the board but have not been actually shipped to the schools. I can read, if the committee desires, a list of the schools, requests for equipment, and soldiers in training:

Mr. GOOD. I was not asking the gentleman about the schools. I was asking him about the equipment.

Mr. TREADWAY. The equipment referred to in my amendment is identical to that referred to in the gentleman's amendment, except that his provides for what has already been transferred to the board, while mine provides for what hereafter is declared to be surplus. I am not endeavoring to get for the Vocational Board additional kinds of equipment, but simply more of the same kind.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the amendment I have offered is an amendment which was drawn by the Vocational Board, and the committee by this amendment has given them here everything they have asked for when they appeared before the committee.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not doubt the gentleman's statement, but I have a letter, dated to-day or yesterday, from the Vocational Board in which they ask for this very equipment that I am referring to, and also suggest the form of amendment which would be covered by the gentleman's amendment and mine, but in submitting it to the gentleman from Iowa he would not approve it.

Mr. GOOD. Of course I would not approve a proposition to transfer lands and buildings until after a hearing.

Mr. TREADWAY. All I ask for is equipment identical with what the gentleman refers to. He is quibbling on words. I am not trying to get cantonments or lands or buildings. But I do say that these schools should not be tied up by this recent order from Mr. Benedict Crowell. It is simply in support of the attitude of the Solicitor General.

That is all right and proper. But nevertheless the vocational training schools for the disabled soldiers and sailors and marines are suffering from the lack of equipment which the War Department has and which we ought to transfer to them, whether it was agreed that they should have it yesterday or to-morrow. That is the difference between the gentleman from Iowa and myself.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will, if I have the floor. I do not know that I have.

Mr. BLANTON. Why is the gentleman from Massachusetts now so solicitous and so willing to vote for a $12,000,000 appropriation for the vocational training of soldiers and sailors, and also to give them additional equipment and supplies, when he and his party absolutely refused to give them the $4,000,000 that we tried to give them a short time ago at the instance of the President?

Mr. TREADWAY. I think the reference of the gentleman from Texas does not apply directly to tools, to which I am referring. I have always been a consistent supporter of all efforts to rehabilitate the soldiers and sailors and marines.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman knows that his party opposed the $4,000,000 appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have no opinion about this matter other than what I have obtained from the Board for Vocational Education. The board sent its representatives before the committee, and they said there was certain of this equipment that they were now using that they would lose, and they asked for the exact thing contained in the amendment that I have sent to the Clerk's desk. They certainly did not ask for more when they appeared before the committee. The only thing I struck out was a provision as to reports to be made to Congress.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. What proportion of this $12,000,000 proposed to be appropriated here, or of any past appropriation, goes toward buying these various machines and tools that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] wants to provide for?

Mr. GOOD. I think there was nothing of that kind included in their estimates.

Mr. GARNER. In the original estimate there was evidently something of that nature. It occurred to me that if they are using past appropriations or are going to use part of this appropriation to buy machines or tools to teach these boys their various vocations—and they ought to be taught them—and they are in the possession of the War Department and the War Department does not need them, we might turn them over to them.

Mr. GOOD. By the amendment I have introduced, prepared by the Vocational Board, we have given them all they ask for, and they have not asked for a dollar in the appropriation for the purchase of tools. This money goes to pay the tuition and maintenance of the boys in the schools, and so forth.

I agree with the gentleman that if we have this surplus material and they need the same material, it ought to be turned over. But the question of what we are turning over, or what should be turned over, is now being considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, who have a bill pending before them, and they are considering this very thing. Now, it is proposed to take from the Committee on Military Affairs the jurisdiction of this important subject. I have been trying to have the other committees that do not have the power to make appropriations to keep within their jurisdiction, and I have been trying, so far as I can personally, to hold the Committee on Appropriations within its jurisdiction.

The amendment which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] submits was never submitted to the committee. No request of that kind was ever made to the committee, but we were informed that they had gone to the Committee on Military Affairs for legislation. Some time ago I suggested to the board that they take this course. The amendment I have offered is to cover only an emergency, and I submit that in the ordinary way of business procedure we should let the Committee on Military Affairs, which has jurisdiction of this question, consider it at the same time they are considering whether or not they shall give the Secretary of War the right to turn over Old Hickory powder plant or other manufacturing plants where they can give training. At the same time they are considering those questions this broad question of machinery should also be determined by that committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 26.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers on that vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama demands tellers. Those who favor taking the vote by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Sixteen gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are denied.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the question is on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. PLATT. I do so for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Iowa a question and also making a little statement.

A few weeks ago in the course of correspondence with a teacher in an agricultural college, on other subjects entirely, I was very much surprised to receive a letter in which this gentleman stated that at his institution, which is located in the South, there are some 200 boys sent there by the Vocational Education Board for reeducation, and he says that out of those 200 boys fully 50 per cent are there simply to get the $80 a month. He says they are receiving practically no training of value to them, and that the trouble is that the course in this institution requires a boy to have had at least a grammar-school education, and the Vocational Board insists on sending the boys there who have not had a grammar-school education, and who, of course, are utterly unfitted to take the course. Some of them have not even been through the fourth grade.

I have made some casual inquiries through other people about other institutions, and I believe that condition prevails in a number of institutions. Boys are abusing this law, taking advantage of it, or else the board is doing so. Perhaps both are to blame; and boys are being sent to these institutions who are not getting training or who ought to be receiving a different kind of training than that which they are trying to obtain. In other words, they have elected to take courses for which they are not fitted, and the board has not the nerve to send them into courses which they ought to take.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PLATT. I certainly yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has the gentleman from New York called the attention of the Vocational Board to this complaint that has been made in this letter of his friend?

Mr. PLATT. I have talked with the chairman of the Committee on Education and a few other gentlemen to see how much information we could get together before taking it to the board.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman has not yet called it to the attention of the board?

Mr. PLATT. I am doing that now, and I expect to do it in another way later.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Where is this school located?

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman wrote me in confidence, and I am not at liberty to use his name or the name of the institution.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Did he say where the school was located?

Mr. PLATT. Of course he did. He is an ex-service man, an officer in the American Legion, and stands high. His only object in writing me was to call attention to an abuse which should be corrected.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has the gentleman any objection to giving the location of this school?

Mr. PLATT. Yes. I shall not violate the confidence that I received from the gentleman in any way whatever.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will pardon me, there have been complaints by members of the American Legion that the board are too strict in their enforcement of the law, and that they are not admitting a sufficient number of men to take this training.

Mr. PLATT. I have no doubt that is also true.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman is complaining that they are taking in too many.

Mr. PLATT. I have no doubt that the American Legion has complained of the board for being too strict for this reason: The boys themselves doubtless frequently want to receive training for which they are not fitted. They are naturally ambitious, and are not to be blamed for it, and they complain because in some cases the board does not let them. But in other cases the board yields and sends the boys into training-school courses for which they are not fitted. I have reason to believe that in some cases this has been done in spite of protest from the institutions. If boys are sent to take courses where a high-school education is required and they have not had even a grammar-school education, their case is hopeless. They do not get anything from it. They simply stay there and draw their $80, and they injure the reputation of the institution which is compelled to take them.

Mr. BEE. Does not my friend from New York think it would have been better not to have said anything on the floor of the House about a serious charge of that kind until the chairman of the Committee on Education and himself had verified it and until he was able to state the institution? Otherwise it puts all the institutions in the South in jeopardy as being possibly guilty of that sort of thing.

Mr. PLATT. I do not believe it applies exclusively to the South, and I do not believe it is in any sense the fault of the institutions.

Mr. BEE. But the gentleman's statement was that it was an educational institution in the South.

Mr. PLATT. Yes. It happens to be in this case.

Mr. BEE. We ought to know what institution it is.

Mr. PLATT. I got into correspondence with this gentleman on an entirely different matter. He is a teacher in an educational institution in the South, and after two or three letters had passed between us he told me about this other matter which he said he would like to bring to my attention. He said he wanted me to treat it as confidential, but he thought something ought to be done to stop it. I am simply giving the House the information with the idea that something ought to be done to stop it. I have made enough inquiries to feel sure that to some extent the same conditions prevail in other institutions, but how far I have not had a chance to find out.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, my proposal to give the soldiers, sailors, marines, and nurses of the recent Great War is not a question of salary, wages, or even justice; it is a question of equity. Justice is strict. Equity is kind and replete with goodness. Therefore any plan which is equitable and fair to all parties affected by this legislation ought to be agreeable to all. Now, gentlemen, I do not want to use the term bonus; I would prefer to call it a gratuity. The Government is not liquidating an account stated but purely and righteously making a gift, a gratuity.

We should not start with the idea that we are trying to make up what our boys lost financially by being taken from the civil and placed in military life, for that would be impossible.

Nor is it a compensation. The boys were paid their salary. The service man or woman did not enter our military establishments for profit. They felt they were discharging a duty.

A gratuity granted heretofore would have brought relief and assistance to thousands of those who on being discharged from service were thrown back into civil life without employment. How many of those to whom we had said, "We will keep the home fires burning," suffered want until employment was obtained? For a while the soldier's uniform on our streets was a sign of unemployment, a sign of financial need, a sign that the wearer was unable to purchase a suit of clothes. If we grant this gratuity now, we are performing a duty we should have discharged many months ago.

Mr. Chairman, I recognize that the Government has done something for the wounded and maimed who took part in the recent struggle and also has provided for the dependents of those who sacrificed their lives.

It is always easy to do the popular thing. It is sometimes difficult to do the right thing; but I think under the present circumstances I am not only doing the popular thing, but I am also doing the right thing. Back in Chicago I am frequently interrogated by some of my constituents and a great number of the residents there as to what Congress is going to do for the soldiers, sailors, marines, and nurses. I do not entertain the same idea that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] expressed when he said here this afternoon that he thought Congress was not going to do anything for them. I have more confidence in the American Congress. I know back in 1917 and 1918 if the American soldiers had asked the House or the Senate to stipulate for some definite amount in case they went abroad to Europe and won the war we—not only the House and Senate, but the American people—would have promised to do anything in human power for the American soldiers. They did not exact that promise, nor had they the right at that time to do so. They simply went and performed the duty they owed this Government. They did it well. They did it expeditiously. They brought glory to the Stars and Stripes. I think the American Congress ought to recognize the sacrifices made by these soldiers, sailors, marines, and nurses and should manifest its appreciation by some substantial gratuity for these boys, and for the girls also.

In the booklet issued by the repatriation committee of Canada some space is devoted to war-service gratuity. It is interesting and reads as follows:

As soon as a soldier is discharged from the army his first concern is to find a job. He may not find a job at once. During his period of unemployment he will, however, be in receipt of his war-service gratuity.

Before the armistice was signed, post-discharge pay was granted to discharged soldiers. Upon the signing of the armistice it was felt necessary to make certain changes.

A larger grant will now be made to all who have served at the front, whether discharged before or after the armistice. Those who were on active service on the date of the armistice but had not served at the front will also receive a gratuity on a higher scale.

The war-service gratuity is given over and above any back pay, pension, or clothing allowance to which a man may be entitled.

It is given in addition to all the care, attention, and service which the Government will devote in order to restore our fighting men to civil life.

All soldiers discharged on or after November 11, 1918, who have served with good conduct, will receive war-service gratuity according to their class.

Soldiers discharged before November 11, 1918, will receive war-service gratuity only if they served at the front in any actual theater of war.

If a soldier discharged before November 11, 1918, did not serve in any actual theater of war he will be entitled only to post-discharge pay according to his class on the old scale.

The gratuity consists of a continuation of a soldier's pay, field allowance, and separation allowance for a period beyond his discharge.

The period is graded according to the length and character of service.

If his service has been in part overseas, his gratuity is figured on a higher scale than that of the man who has served only in Canada.

The maximum gratuity for the man who served overseas is six months. This is given to the man whose total service amounts to three years or more.

Three months' gratuity is the maximum for the man who has served in Canada only, and it is given for three years' service.

If the monthly pay and allowances for a man whose dependents have been receiving separation allowance should be less than $100, he is given a gratuity of $100 per month. A part of the gratuity equal to separation allowance will be paid directly to the dependent entitled to it.

If the monthly pay and allowances for a man without such dependents should amount to less than $70 per month, he is to receive $70 per month.

Further, every gratuity granted will amount to at least one month's pay, field allowance, and separation allowance.

Men who have already been discharged will be given the gratuity to which they are entitled (less any "post-discharge pay" they have received) after February 1, 1919.

Application for any adjustment must be made to the paymaster of the district from which the soldier was discharged. The necessary forms to be filled out in support of each claim for adjustment may be obtained from the military headquarters of each district, from district unit paymasters, and from officers commanding militia units.

Men who are still in the service will receive their first month's gratuity immediately upon their discharge unless they are "boarded" to receive treatment and full pay and allowances from the soldiers' civil reestablishment.

Men who are in the care of the soldiers' civil reestablishment will get their gratuity as soon as they cease to receive full pay and allowances.

By this token Canada will record her appreciation of her soldiers and sailors to a degree more generous than that shown by any other nation.

Mr. Chairman, that last paragraph deserves repetition:

By this token Canada will record her appreciation to her soldiers and sailors to a degree more generous than that shown by any other nation.

The last paragraph is not only a challenge, it is an indictment, and the appreciation that the American Congress owes the American soldier and sailor is on trial. Lip service, pleas of economy, and "passing the buck" to Democratic officials will not save the Republican majority in both the House and Senate from the merited condemnation of the American people. The people of Canada do not appreciate the Canadian soldier and sailor more than the American people appreciate the American man of war.

The Canadian Houses of Parliament may be more generous to Canadian soldiers and sailors than the present Republican majority in the American Congress will be to the American soldiers and sailors if that Republican majority can find a seemingly plausible defense. But the Republican majority had better remember that the jury in this case is the American people, and their verdict will eventually read that the United States, which generously held out the helping hand to the peoples of Europe, is not ungrateful, is not unappreciative, is not "economical," is not parsimonious with our own flesh and blood. The American soldiers and sailors generously offered their all, even life itself, and the American people stand ready to record their appreciation to a degree at least as generous as that shown by any other nation on earth, not even excepting Canada. And this is not a fanciful or wild prophecy when one remembers the respective powers of Canada and the United States. The final expression of our appreciation in a tangible form, though already tardy, will demonstrate, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that the American soldiers, sailors, marines, and nurses are secure in the hearts of the American people, not only for the year 1920 but until the last American veteran of the World War joins the spirits of his comrades whose bodies lie in France. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, no voice has been raised in denial of the obligation this country owes to the American soldiers and sailors, but "economy" has been urged as the reason for the further inactivity of Congress. We have heard frequently during the World War men in high places demand that nations conform to the same rule of honesty and sincerity that each of us expects of the individual citizen. What lawyer here would maintain that because his client is unable to pay immediately the full amount of a debt due a creditor that the creditor is not entitled to an installment, or at least an arrangement whereby the creditor may be assured that the debt will be paid in a reasonable time?

And what Congressman can object to legislation that will determine some method whereby our obligations to the American soldiers and sailors may be taken care of in the years immediately ahead? We can at least do that. If we are sincere we will set the machinery in motion and the Republican majority will enter into the project whole-heartedly, determined to find that it can be done, if not in a lump sum this year or next year, by spreading the payments over several years. This will be a practical application of individual sincerity to national legislation. This will be an example on the part of the Nation more conducive to generating legislative sincerity than a ton of printed speeches containing platitudes. This will be the best answer to what Congress is going to do for the soldiers, sailors, marines, and nurses. This will prove that Congress is going to do everything that is in accordance with national prudence. And no American soldier, sailor, marine, or nurse expects more. But every American soldier, sailor, marine, and nurse has a right to expect fair play from Congress, fair play through the medium of an honest, determined effort on the part of Congress to set about finding a way—and surely there must be a way—to manifest in practice that appreciation which will be so frequently expressed orally, even by Members of Congress, from countless platforms before the votes of the American people are counted next November. Promise is not performance, my Republican friends, and if you refuse to realize that now, you will have it indelibly impressed on your minds as you watch the election returns on a certain night this coming autumn. There is yet time for action. If you want to do it, you have the power. You can not deny that. If you do not do it now, you can hardly expect your constituents to accept your printed speeches or platform expressions containing in words your appreciation of the sacrifices of the American soldier, sailor, marine, and nurse. And the Member of the American Congress who has not the confidence of the district he represents usually graduates after election day with the degree of "ex," which, before the word "Congressman," indicates previous occupancy of that office.

I was amused when the chairman of this committee suggested that the Secretary of the Treasury was not in favor of a gratuity of this kind. I appreciate also that some Members on the other side, some very conservative gentlemen, sort of anticipate that what is popular at the present time may be presumed to be very radical in a few years, and consequently they do not want to do for the American soldiers, sailors, marines, and nurses what they should do at this time. I want to tell the gentleman, the chairman of this important committee, that his alibi of the Secretary of the Treasury will not excuse him nor excuse the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Republican Party is in the majority in the House and Senate. They have been sending out through the press announcement of what they were going to do and what they would not do. They suggest a system of economy. They said they were going to try and correct extravagance. If they are sincere in that and will stop some of the extravagances, they can economize sufficiently to do something for these soldiers, sailors, marines, and nurses, something that ought to be done for them. [Applause.]

And so, gentlemen, I, as a Representative here, want the country to know that the responsibility for not doing something does not rest on the Secretary of the Treasury but upon the majority members of this Republican Party, both in the House and the Senate. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In other words, on the Republican Party.

Please, gentlemen, let us have a little speed in this legislation, so that it may not be said much longer of the United States that "It is the only country that went to war and forgot its heroes when the fighting ended." [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that no quorum is present. We need another shift. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will withhold his point until we read through the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BLANTON. I will withdraw it for the present.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses: For all other authorized expenditures necessary in the execution of laws to regulate commerce, including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $86,000.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. I renew my point of no quorum.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12046, the second deficiency bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, the following leave of absence was granted:

To Mr. HOCH, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LINTHICUM, for three days, on account of sickness in his family.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 11606. An act to authorize the county of Fountain, in the State of Indiana, to construct a bridge across the Wabash River at the city of Attica, Fountain County, Ind.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 30, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 30, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, let Thy favor rest upon us to-day. As we start on the duties of the day by lifting up our hearts to Thee, may we carry from this sacred moment the influence of our thought and feeling toward God. Let the light of Thy countenance shine upon us. Speak Thou the words of divine wisdom in our hearts that we may know Thy presence and follow Thee in the discharge of our duties. For Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

STOCKYARD LICENSES (S. DOC. NO. 185).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 5th instant, certain information relative to the licensing of all live-stock commission agents, companies, corporations, or firms, etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

WORK ON PUBLIC ROADS (S. DOC. NO. 186).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to the law, certain information relative to additional compensation due to officers and enlisted men on account of work performed by them on the public roads in the various States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

CHESAPEAKE & POTOMAC TELEPHONE CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. for the year 1919, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have a brief communication from the Jamestown (N. Dak.) Commercial Club with reference to the zone system and rates of postage, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution.

Whereas the executive committee of the Jamestown Commercial Club, after considerable investigation and discussion, are of the unanimous opinion that any change in present postal laws that makes a flat rate for transportation of periodicals to all points in the United States should be opposed; and

Whereas we believe that the law, practically universal, that pay for service rendered should be in proportion to the cost of such service, is entirely appropriate in this case, and that this principle that is now being recognized by the Government in charging periodical transportation by weight and distance is one of the principal factors in rate making by rate-making commissions: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we sincerely hope you will use your efforts in Congress to defeat the efforts of publishers to repeal the zone system and revert to the old flat rate of postage on the advertising pages of their periodicals.

JAMESTOWN COMMERCIAL CLUB,
L. B. NIEMEYER, President,
ANDREW HAAS, Secretary.

JULY 28, 1919.

Mr. GRONNA. I also have resolutions from the American Protective Tariff League with reference to the League of Nations, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE AMERICAN PROTECTIVE TARIFF LEAGUE,
New York, January 27, 1920.

Copy of resolutions unanimously adopted by the American Protective Tariff League, in annual meeting assembled, on Thursday, January 22, 1920:

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Whereas the American Protective Tariff League was the first national organization in the United States to oppose the covenant of the League of Nations; and

Whereas the American Protective Tariff League was in favor of a declaration of peace immediately following the signing of the armistice; and

Whereas an attempt by the majority of the United States Senate has been made to Americanize the covenant of the League of Nations; and

Whereas the American Protective Tariff League is opposed to any entangling foreign alliances: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the American Protective Tariff League, in annual meeting assembled, urges immediate declaration of peace with Germany, is unalterably opposed to the covenant of the League of Nations as presented, and opposed to any League of Nations which endangers the sovereignty, entity, and independence of the United States of America.

W. F. WAKEMAN, Secretary.

Mr. GRONNA. I also have a resolution from the Tri-State Grain and Stock Growers' Convention, held at Fargo, N. Dak., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRI-STATE GRAIN AND STOCK GROWERS' CONVENTION,
Fargo, N. Dak., January 26, 1920.

Senator A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At our Tri-State Grain and Stock Growers' Convention, held in Fargo, January 20 to 23, the inclosed resolution in regard to the League of Nations was passed. I take pleasure in forwarding it to you, and trust that you will give it due consideration.

Sincerely, W. C. PALMER, Secretary.

Resolution.

Resolved by the members of the Tri-State Grain Growers' Association, assembled in its annual convention, That we appeal to the Members of the United States Senate to ratify the Paris covenant for a League of Nations without making any changes that are likely to delay or prevent the establishing of said league and longer postpone the coming of peace and the normal life of the world.

JOHN H. WORST,
T. A. HOVERSTAD,
WALLACE MANIKOWSKE,
JOHN N. HAGEN,
C. L. WENDT,
Resolution Committee.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Minnesota, praying for a two years' extension of Government control of railroads, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of Franklin Post, No. 68, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Olathe, Kans., and a petition of E. D. Baker Post, No. 40, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Baldwin, Kans., praying for the passage of the so-called Fuller pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce, of Pittsburg, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to relieve certain conditions in Armenia, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce, of Pittsburg, Kans., praying for the ratification of the peace treaty, with reservations, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HARRIS. I present resolutions adopted by Headquarters Colony Post, No. 14, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Georgia, of Fitzgerald, Ga., urging the immediate passage of what is known as the Fuller pension bill. I ask that the resolutions may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS COLONY POST, No. 14,
DEPARTMENT OF GEORGIA, G. A. R.,
Fitzgerald, Ga., January 24, 1920.

Whereas we learn with pleasure that the honorable House of Representatives on January 5, 1920, passed the pension bill known as the Fuller bill, and it is now in the Senate for its action; and

Whereas those whom it will benefit are old and feeble and passing away rapidly: Therefore be it

Resolved by Colony Post, No. 14, Department Georgia and South Carolina, That the honorable Senate of the United States be requested to immediately take up and pass the said bill so that the old veterans may receive the benefit of its provisions during the few remaining years allotted them; and be it further

Resolved, That the Hon. HOKE SMITH and Hon. W. J. HARRIS, our Senators from Georgia, be asked to use their influence in urging and voting for its immediate passage, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of our Senators and a copy spread upon our post records.

At a regular meeting of Colony Post, No. 14, held January 24, 1920, the foregoing resolution was adopted by a unanimous vote of the members of the post.

C. J. HITCH, Post Commander.

Official:

G. E. WHITMAN, Adjutant.

Mr. HARRIS. I also present resolutions of the Rotary Club of Savannah, Ga., suggesting an amendment to the pending railroad bill relative to the establishment and maintenance of through routes to and from all parts of the United States, and so forth, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution.

Resolved, That the following amendment to the proposed railroad legislation be submitted to our Senators and Congressmen, and that they be requested to attempt to secure its adoption:

"Resolved, It shall be the duty of common carriers subject to this act to establish and maintain through routes to and from all ports of the United States on traffic to and from foreign countries and to establish just and reasonable local or joint through rates, fares, and charges applicable thereon as proportional rates, fares, and charges to or from said ports, and no port shall be subjected to undue discrimination or be given undue preference by refusal of any common carrier or carriers to establish and maintain such through rates, or by refusal or neglect to publish and file schedules showing such rates, fares, and charges. The commission may, upon formal complaint or in proceedings instituted, on its own motion and after full hearing, make an appropriate order for the enforcement of this provision."

Resolved further, That in the event it is found impossible to pass this amendment, other legislation be enacted which will protect the right of shippers under the existing export and promised imports rate from the Middle West to the Gulf and South Atlantic ports.

Mr. HARRIS. I also present a resolution adopted by the Rotary Club of Savannah, Ga., relative to pending legislation before Congress affecting the disposition of Government-owned ships, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution.

"Resolved, That all pending legislation before Congress affecting the disposition of Government-owned ships should embody provisions for the maintenance of all trade routes now in operation and such trade routes as may, owing to conditions, be established in the future, so that the shippers of the United States may be given free access to all ports on equal terms; be it further

"Resolved, That such steel vessels of desirable commercial types, both freight and passenger, as may be needed for the establishment and maintenance of these routes should be retained by the United States Shipping Board or such governmental agency which may be established by act of Congress, for such reasonable length of time as may be necessary to determine the desirability thereof, and should be devoted to such development, and should be used in so far as possible exclusively on the routes to which they may be assigned, in recognition of absolute need for regular steamship service in establishing and maintaining such trade routes; and that permanent allocation of vessels be made in order that definite contracts may be safely entered into for cargo; and be it further

"Resolved, That for the development of freight traffic it is essential that adequate passenger steamship service be inaugurated as a prerequisite to the building up of trade routes."

Mr. COLT. I present a resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, recommending the enactment of legislation providing for a quarantine station in the port of Providence, in that State. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[State of Rhode Island, etc., in general assembly, January session, A. D. 1920.]

Resolution (H. 511) recommending to Congress the passage of legislation providing for a quarantine station in the port of Providence.

Whereas the development of the port of Providence is seriously handicapped by the lack of a quarantine station; and

Whereas the recent movement of ocean vessels entering the port of Providence has been delayed and steamships diverted to the port of New York: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island respectfully requests the Senators and Representatives in Congress to urge the passage of suitable legislation which will provide such a quarantine station, and the secretary of state is hereby instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Rhode Island.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Providence, January 26, 1920.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original resolution passed by the general assembly and approved by the governor on the 15th day of January, A. D. 1920.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State aforesaid this 26th day of January in the year 1920.

[SEAL.]

J. FRED PARKER,
Secretary of State.

WHITE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3779) to authorize the Ozark Forest road improvement district of Baxter County, Ark., to construct and maintain a bridge across the White River, near Norfork, Ark., and I submit a report (No. 403) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That authority is hereby granted to the Ozark Forest road improvement district of Baxter County, Ark., created by act No. 570 of the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas of the session of 1919, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the White River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, near Norfork, Ark., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WACCAMAW RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 10701) granting the consent of Congress to the Whiteville Lumber Co., Goldsboro, N. C., to construct a bridge across the Waccamaw River at or near Old Dock, county of Columbus, N. C., and I submit a report (No. 404) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Whiteville Lumber Co., Goldsboro, N. C., and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Waccamaw River at a point suitable to the interest of navigation, at or near Old Dock, in the county of Columbus, or adjacent thereto, in the State of North Carolina, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 3817) to amend an act entitled "An act to diminish the expense of proceedings on appeal and writ of error or of certiorari," approved February 13, 1911; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3818) granting additional lands from the Fort Douglas Military Reservation to the University of Utah; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3819) for the relief of A. Purdee; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 3820) granting a pension to Charles V. Harris; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 151) to permit the payment for certain lands whereon Army supply bases are situated; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

FOREIGN LOANS.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the statement appearing in the Washington Post this morning, by Secretary Glass, in regard to foreign loans. It exhibits a courage and sanity which indicates that the gray dawn is breaking.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"EUROPE MUST PAY BILLS, SAYS GLASS—UNITED STATES CAN NOT FINANCE FAILURE TO ACT—AMERICA HAS REACHED FINAL LIMIT IN EXTENDING AID—WORK AND SAVE, REMEDY—TREASURY FROWNS ON CONFERENCE TO PLAN WORLD CREDITS—WOULD REDUCE INDEMNITIES—SECRETARY TELLS ALLIES TO FIX ON AMOUNT GERMANY CAN PAY AND COLLECT—EXCHANGES WILL BE ADJUSTED WHEN EUROPE BEGINS PRODUCTION AND RELEASES GOLD—'FOLLY' TO LOOK TO AMERICAN PEOPLE FOR REMEDY—CITES BILLIONS IN ADVANCES SINCE ARMISTICE.

"The United States Treasury does not look with favor upon certain features of the proposed international conference recently called by a coterie of nationally known financiers and commercial leaders in an effort to lead the world out of the financial and commercial chaos into which it was dragged by the war.

"Secretary Glass declared last night in a letter to a committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, which has sought a Government expression on the meeting, that such a conference would serve 'to cause confusion and revive hopes, doomed to disappointment, of further Government loans.'

GOVERNMENT CAN NOT ACT.

"With a note of finality, Mr. Glass set forth the Government's policy with respect to furnishing credits, stating that the Treasury 'is opposed to Government control over foreign trade and finance, and even more opposed to private control. It is convinced that the credits required for the economic restoration must come through private channels.' In this respect this Government fears the proposed conference would mean many Europeans would assume that the United States was about to shoulder more of their burdens, Mr. Glass explained.

WOULD NOT CANCEL DEBTS.

"'If the Chamber of Commerce of the United States (to which were left details of the conference call) considers it advisable and desirable to designate representatives to attend an unofficial conference,' Mr. Glass said, 'the Treasury Department does not offer objection, provided the scope and character and limitations of such a conference, as well as the impossibility of United States Government action, are clearly understood. But there are numerous suggestions contained in the memorial sent broadcast by the leaders which are clearly not appropriate for consideration, such as cancellation of some or any obligations of foreign Governments held by the United States, or even the deferring of obligations of foreign Governments to liens created in favor of loans hereafter made for reconstruction purposes.'

EUROPE'S OWN PROBLEM.

"Mr. Glass directs attention to differences which he discovered in the formal call for the conference as issued here and in several foreign countries. The memorials circulated in Europe, Mr. Glass said, apparently advocated further governmental financial assistance and requested the respective Governments to designate representatives to those international meetings, which thus would accord it an official character. This, however, was omitted from the document circulated in the United States and made public in New York January 14.

"The situation facing Europe, the Treasury Secretary said, was one to be solved by the activity of those nations and their nationals and not for settlement by any world-wide plan such as the proposed international conferences contemplated.

GOLD EMBARGO REMOVED.

"'From the moment of the cessation of hostilities,' Mr. Glass added, 'the Treasury of the United States has pursued a policy of looking toward the restoration as promptly as possible of normal economic conditions, the removal of governmental controls and interferences, and the restoration of individual initiative and free competition in business. The Treasury long since, with the cooperation of the Federal Reserve Board, removed the embargo on the export of gold, thus enabling American citizens and, indeed, the nations of the world, to the extent that they find credit here, to finance their purchases throughout the world in cash.

"'Rightly or wrongly a different policy has been pursued in Europe. European Governments have maintained since the cessation of hostilities embargoes upon the export of gold. The rectification of the exchange now adverse to Europe lies primarily in the hands of European Governments.

WILL NOT FINANCE EUROPE.

"'The normal method of meeting an adverse international balance is to ship gold. The refusal to ship gold prevents the rectification of an adverse exchange. The need of gold embargoes lies in the expended currency and credit structure of Europe. Relief would be found in disarmament, resumption of industrial life and activity, and the imposition of adequate taxes and the issue of adequate domestic loans.

"'The American people should not, in my opinion, be called upon to finance, and would not, in my opinion, respond to a demand that they finance, the requirements of Europe in so far as they result from the failure to take these necessary steps for the rehabilitation of credit.'

"Mr. Glass characterized as 'impracticable' international bond issues, guaranties, and international measures for stabilization of exchange which were to be taken up at the conference. Such plans never would prove workable, he believed, so long as there exist inequalities in taxation and differences in the fiscal policies of the countries involved. When these inequalities and differences no longer exist, reasons for the international measures also will have vanished, he asserted.

WORK AND SAVE IS REMEDY.

"It would be 'folly and unthinkable' to call upon the American people to remedy the present inequalities in exchange. These inequalities, means for alleviation of which formed one of the principal bases for the conference, were born of a policy of taxation less drastic in the European nations than here, Mr. Glass said.

"'The remedy for the situation is to be found not in the manufacture of bank credit in the United States for the movement of exports,' Mr. Glass asserted. 'This process already has proceeded too far. The remedy lies in the actual movement of goods, of investment securities, and, in default of goods or securities, then in gold from Europe; and in order that such securities may be absorbed by investors our people must consume less; they must work and save.'

EUROPE NEEDS CAPITAL.

"Relative to the solution of the exchange puzzle, Mr. Glass warned that this country could not continue to extend credits on a sufficient scale to cover the present swollen trade balances while paying cash (gold and silver) to Latin-American and Far Eastern traders. What the European nations need now, Mr.

Glass explained, is 'working capital rather than so much bank credit.' Then as a solution for the intricate situation—and with which it is mentioned incidentally the proposed conference would be able to do nothing more than discuss—Mr. Glass offers the following:

"'If the peoples and Governments of Europe live within their incomes, increase their production as much as possible, and limit their imports to actual necessities, foreign credits to cover adverse balances would most probably be supplied by private investors and the demand to resort to such impracticable methods as Government loans and bank credits would cease.

UNITED STATES HAS REACHED LIMIT.

"'There is no more logical or practical step toward solving their own reconstruction problems than for the Allies to give value to their indemnity claims against Germany by reducing those claims to a determinate amount which Germany may be reasonably expected to pay, and then for Germany to issue obligations for such amount and be set free to work it out. This would increase Germany's capacity to pay, restore confidence, and improve the trade and commerce of the world. The maintenance of claims which can not be paid causes apprehension and serves no useful purpose.'

"The American Government has done all that it believes advisable and practicable to aid Europe, Mr. Glass said. He pointed out that since the armistice was signed the Treasury has made direct cash advances of $2,380,891,000 to the allied Governments; it has made available $736,481,000 to those Governments through the purchase of their currencies in covering our expenditures in Europe; it has sold through the Army and Navy approximately $685,000,000 in supplies on credit, and has extended approximately $100,000,000 in relief. In addition, he explained, there has been allowed to accrue unpaid interest aggregating $324,211,000.

INTEREST PAYMENTS OVERDUE.

"Accrued interest on loans to European countries totals approximately $325,000,000, according to a table submitted to the Ways and Means Committee by the Treasury Department, which plans to defer collection for a few years, pending reconstruction. Great Britain owes the most interest, the total on loans to that country being $144,440,837. Interest owed by other countries is: France, $94,021,749; Italy, $54,256,589; Russia, $16,832,662; Belgium, $11,465,278; Czechoslovakia, $1,667,083; Serbia, $917,299; Roumania, $609,873; and Liberia, $548."

COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING.

Mr. GORE. I also present two letters from Hon. John A. Simpson, president of the State Farmers' Union of Oklahoma, one of which I furnish now and the other I will furnish later for the permanent RECORD, together with some comments of my own, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The letters submitted are as follows:

FARMERS' EDUCATIONAL AND COOPERATIVE UNION OF AMERICA, OKLAHOMA DIVISION.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 28, 1920.

DEAR SIR: Believing that you are always glad to know the sentiment of the farmers of this Nation on any subject, I take the liberty of presenting to you in a brief letter their attitude on the question of "compulsory military training."

It has been my pleasure to attend many State and national meetings of the Farmers' Union, State grange meetings, national farmers' congress, and a number of federated meetings where I have seen as many as 15 farm organizations represented and coming from 40 States. In all of these meetings, if the question arose at all, resolutions were invariably unanimously adopted against "compulsory universal military training" in any form. I could fill a volume with these kinds of resolutions, but the following will serve the purpose of sustaining my statement.

The National Farmers' Union, in annual meeting at Jonesboro, Ark., August 20, 1917, passed the following resolution, and it is found on page 36 in their published minutes for that year:

"That we are unalterably opposed to large standing armies in time of peace, and that we earnestly protest against any form of universal military training."

Again, at their national meeting, November 18, 1919, at Memphis, Tenn., the same organization passed the following resolution, and it is found on page 50 of their published minutes for that year:

"We are opposed to the maintenance of war-time armaments in time of peace, and to any system of military organization that includes universal military training."

My own State union, at its annual meeting at Clinton, Okla., August 20, 1919, passed the following resolution, and it is found on page 7 of the published minutes for that year:

"We oppose conscription and universal military training in time of peace."

The National Grange, in their fifty-third annual meeting at Grand Rapids, Mich., November 12, 1919, passed the following resolution, and it is found on page 149 of their published journal of that meeting:

"We are opposed to militarism, universal military training, and a large standing army. We deplore any effort to develop in America a caste of authority which has its sole excuse in a shoulder strap and any tendency in thought which would substitute armed force for moral ideas. The invincible character of a citizen army when equipped with justice and Americanism has again been demonstrated. We favor the preparedness of right rather than the preparedness of might."

The following is a copy of resolution recently passed by the national meeting of the American Society of Equity:

"Whereas there is now pending in Congress a bill providing for universal military training; and

"Whereas the war was fought on the principle that militarism be forever abandoned and done away with: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the delegates of the National Union, American Society of Equity, in convention assembled, do oppose the compulsory military training laws now pending."

Unanimously adopted by delegates representing 50,000 members of the American Society of Equity.

Resolutions could be quoted until they would make a book, but these are sufficient to show what organized farmers think of compulsory military training, and we believe that the Farmers' Union, the Grange, and the Equity are fairly representative of all the farmers of the Nation.

In 37 local meetings of the Farmers' Union in my State held during the month of December just past and in a vote taken at the close of each meeting every vote at every meeting was against compulsory military training. This is a question on which the farmers are practically unanimous. Ninety-nine out of every hundred are against it in any form.

Compulsory military training is un-American, without precedent in the history of our country, an enormous uncalled-for expense to already overburdened taxpayers, a staggering blow to production in that it will take from the farm, the shop, and the factory about 700,000 boys each year, and it will mean untold future financial drain on the Public Treasury in subsidies and pensions to in part repay the boys for their sacrifices in time and health in their service in the military training camps.

In proof of the last statement, a high official in the Department of the Interior admitted to us one day last week, in a discussion of the Mondell reclamation bill, that more than half of the nearly 5,000,000 soldier boys were never out of the training camps in this country and that the time of service did not average over 12 months; yet those boys were so handicapped by this average of 12 months' service in health and earning power that they needed special assistance from the Government to put us back on an equal footing with the boys who did not have to make that sacrifice. I believe that official was correct in this statement, and I further believe many of these boys who spent a year in the training camps who now think their health was not impaired thereby in 10 years from now will find themselves breaking down prematurely, and the pension applications of former wars is proof to us that we may expect this to happen again.

This letter must be brief, and in closing let me tell you that not one citizen in a thousand knows that such legislation is pending, and should it pass it will be an indescribable shock to them.

With a firm belief in the justice and power of the time-tried principles of the old order and with little confidence in the experiments of the new, I am,

Yours, truly, JOHN A. SIMPSON,
President Oklahoma Farmers' Union.

FARMERS' EDUCATIONAL AND COOPERATIVE,
UNION OF AMERICA, OKLAHOMA DIVISION,
January 30, 1920.

Hon. T. P. GORE,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: For three successive annual meetings the Farmers Union of this State and the National Union at their annual meetings have unanimously adopted resolutions asking that out of this war we at least advance popular government to the extent of democratizing war by requiring every nation to at once vest the power to declare war in a majority vote of all the people, including both men and women. We were sorely disappointed when the peace conference made no such provision and we laid the blame on the crowned heads of Europe; but we were shocked and astounded when your amendment to the peace treaty providing for that very thing received but 16 votes of the 96 votes in the Senate. We thank you for your efforts in offering the only thing to the peace treaty that can be called democratic; we were pleased to see our good friend Senator CAPPER voted and supported this measure.

We are glad to know of your firm stand against the pending bill which proposes to make the espionage act more drastic in time of peace than in time of war, and which makes the exercise of freedom of thought and speech a capital crime and Sec. 5 of which could easily be construed to render the good women who advocate the suffrage amendment and the prohibition amendment liable to imprisonment for 20 years or to a fine of $20,000, or both. We are glad also to know of your aggressive opposition to the "compulsory military training bill" that would force every boy at 18 to go serve time in a military training camp.

Senator GORE, the wheat farmers of Oklahoma and the Nation owe much to you for your work in defending us against the official pirates who would have taken our wheat at $1.25 a bushel. The cotton farmers of Oklahoma and the Nation owe much to you for defending us against the same gentry when time after time they tried to get through Congress cotton-pricing bills, the most liberal of which was only 20 cents per pound. Representatives of the Farmers Union of Oklahoma were in Washington at every wheat and cotton hearing, and we know how true you were to what was fair and just. We shall never forget you.

Yours, very truly,

JOHN A. SIMPSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
Washington's Birthday.

To the sovereign people of Oklahoma, greetings:

I salute the sovereign people of Oklahoma as my only master. I acknowledge no other. I do not pretend to serve two masters. As I do not pretend to serve both God and Mammon, neither do I pretend to serve both the people and the politicians. I obey no boss. All rings look alike to me. As the people are the sole masters, they must be the final judges of my public services. The people are just. To your justice I appeal from the prejudices alike of the interested and the malevolent. There is no genius great enough to render a just judgment without knowing the facts. A just judge once said to me, "I always keep a corner in my mind for the man who has not been heard." "Hear both sides alike," was the memorable appeal of Demosthenes when arraigned by his rivals before the people of Athens. I am not now speaking as to the future. As to the past and the present I ask no favor but justice. I address you this letter in order that you may hear both sides. I adopt this method because I have no other means of publicity. I have no press agency. I have no publicity bureau. The press does not always publish both sides alike. The leading so-called Democratic paper in Oklahoma has adopted the rule to name me only to blame me. I hope one day to present these matters in person. I can not possibly leave Washington at this juncture of public affairs. More urgent measures are pending now than at any other period of my public service. Not only is the treaty pending, but legislation affecting our soldiers, both old and young, the railroads, the relation of capital and labor, the leasing of oil and other mineral lands, the high cost of living, the ominous danger of compulsory military training, and other measures of the most vital concern. To abandon my post of duty now in order to serve my own personal or political interest would be a betrayal of the trust already committed to me. The Senator or Congressman who could afford to be absent at this time could afford to be absent at all times. Would you not therefore do me the justice to read this and then do me the kindness to hand or mail it to a friend? Everyone who loves truth or hates injustice will be surprised before reading this to the end.

For my own part, I do not profess to be infallible. I have grown too old to imagine that I do not make mistakes. Who has been exempt from error in these strange and troublous times? In the midst of these bewildering times I have pursued the path of duty as I saw it. I shall continue to pursue the path of duty as I see it, though I go barefoot and alone.

COUNTERFEIT FRUIT.

No one has a right to complain of legitimate and constructive criticism. Such criticism has been the headlight of human progress. It lights the way to truth. Job said to his captious critics, "No doubt, ye are the people, and wisdom will perish with you." To mine I would say, as Cromwell said to the artist, "Paint me as I am." The wit of man has devised no better way to judge the tree than by its fruit. The tree that bears evil fruit should be cut down. But the tree has a right to be judged by its own fruit. It should not be judged by counterfeit fruit. Every public man should be judged by his public record. I court such judgment. I ask only to be judged by my record as it is, by my record as I have made it, and not by my record as others have made it appear. Let only Truth accuse. Let only Justice judge.

If I may be pardoned a personal reference, I will illustrate what I mean when I protest against being judged by a record which I did not make. It has been repeatedly alleged that I was one of the "willful twelve" who filibustered the armed neutrality bill to death. As late as August last a newspaper stated as one of its principal objections to my record the alleged fact that I had helped kill the armed neutrality bill. When I visited Muskogee in December, special friends requested me to explain why I helped kill the armed neutrality bill. The truth is that measure was killed on March 4, 1917. I went to bed on January 2, 1917. I was not able to resume my duties in the Senate until April 17. During two and a half months of that time I was sick almost unto death. I was delirious on March 4, the day the armed neutrality bill went to its death. One would think that even malice would blush at such mendacity, and yet this typifies many misrepresentations of my record.

DAILY OKLAHOMAN.

The Daily Oklahoman, in an editorial on March 10, 1919, used the following unqualified language:

When the history of these times is written, it will have to record that Senator GORE, of Oklahoma, was never caught standing by the President.

Possibly some stranger may have believed this statement.

There are indeed different standards of duty. Standing by the President is the Oklahoman's standard of official duty. Standing by the people is my standard of official duty. The voice of the people is the nearest approach to the voice of God. I am happy enough, of course, when I find myself standing both by the President and by the people. As to universal compulsory military training, now pending, I must stand by the people rather than by the President. But I shall not quibble about words. Let truth take the witness stand.

WAR MEASURES SUPPORTED.

I voted for each and every appropriation that was passed. I voted for each and every dollar that was necessary to the winning of the war. This aggregated more than $35,000,000,000. Even calumny can not say that I withheld a single dollar that might either speed or secure success. One would have thought that this would hush the voice of slander and "silence envious tongues." It did not do so so. I not only voted to appropriate the money, I voted to raise the money.

Not only that—

As a member of the Senate Finance Committee I helped prepare and pass the first war-revenue act; as a member of the Senate Finance Committee, I helped to prepare, report, and pass the second war-revenue act. This was the biggest revenue act ever passed in all the tides of time. Was this obstruction? Not only that. As a member of the Senate Finance Committee I helped prepare, report, and pass the first Liberty loan law, the second Liberty loan law, the third Liberty loan law, and the fourth Liberty loan law. I also helped to prepare, report, and pass the Victory loan law. These measures eventuated in a public debt of $25,000,000,000. Was that obstruction?

Not only that—

As a member of the Senate Finance Committee, I helped prepare, report, and pass the war finance corporation act. This rendered Government aid to individuals, firms, and corporations engaged in the manufacture of munitions and other necessary war supplies. We could not afford to wait on the slow and uncertain processes of private credit.

Not only that—

As a member of the Senate Finance Committee, I helped prepare, report, and pass the war-risk insurance act. This act provided insurance for our soldiers, and compensation, allotments, and allowances for their families. I introduced a bill to amend and improve this law at the request of a number of wounded soldiers. I supported the Sweet bill which made the improvements desired by the soldiers. I voted for the Kenyon amendment to double the soldier's pay, although the contrary has been often charged. I voted to double the soldier's pay (see p. —), "tell it in Gath and publish it in the streets of Ascalon."

Not only that—

I voted for the soldiers' and seamen's civil rights act to protect our boys at the front against vexatious litigation and other annoyances at home.

Not only that—

I voted for the bill to draft subjects of the Entente allied countries residing in the United States.

I voted to declare war against Austria. Austria could use her troops either on the Italian front or on the western front. Without a declaration of war, we could only strike back on the western front.

I voted for the preferential shipment bill.

I voted for the so-called trading-with-the-enemy act, an important war measure.

I voted for the espionage act. I am not especially proud of this vote. Under this act things have occurred which reflected no special credit on this great democracy. There ought to be a distinguishable difference between a democracy and an autocracy.

As a member of the Immigration Committee, I helped prepare, report, and pass the act to expedite the naturalization of certain aliens in the military and naval service of the United States.

As chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, I helped prepare and report and managed on the floor of the Senate the food-survey bill, commonly known as the food-production act. This was intended to stimulate the production of an adequate supply of food products for ourselves and for the allied countries, and must be distinguished from the food-control act. Was this the part of an obstructionist?

LEGISLATIVE RESPONSIBILITY.

Such is my affirmative record. I am willing to be judged by my fruit. And yet it has been alleged that I have never been "caught standing by the President." It is not quite clear just what technical meaning is attached to the phrase "standing by the President." And yet the Oklahoman solemnly alleges that I have never been "caught standing by the President." Not only during the war but during my entire service in the Senate I have voted for every measure which I thought would do more good than harm. I have voted against every measure which I thought would do more harm than good. That is the only rule of legislative responsibility which I either recognize or respect. It has been charged that I have voted against certain measures on account of personal hostility toward the President. I have no personal hostility toward the President. It is self-evident that if I had been controlled by such hostile motives I would not have supported the great array of measures enumerated above. I have no respect for a Senator or Congressman who would vote against any measure which he would otherwise support on account of hostility toward any official high or low. I have no respect for any Senator or Congressman who would vote for any measure which he would otherwise oppose on account of friendship for any official high or low. I am firm in the faith that everybody knows more than anybody.

OIL AND ZINC AMENDMENTS.

Before passing to the measures which I did not support I wish to call your attention to the several important amendments which I secured to the second war revenue act. I am pleased to say that it was upon my motion that the prewar postage rates were restored. I mean that the letter rate was reduced from 3 to 2 cents, and the post-card rate from 2 to 1 cent.

It was upon my motion that those who pay income and profit taxes are permitted to pay in four installments during the year instead of being compelled to make the entire payment on a single day. This is a relief not only to the taxpayers but also to the banks and credit institutions. It also avoids a glut of revenue in the Treasury and more nearly adjusts collections to disbursements.

Next to agriculture, oil, gas, zinc, and coal are the leading industries in our State. Under the old revenue law the taxation of these industries was unscientific and unjust. It did not take into account the fundamental facts and characteristics of these businesses. I secured two amendments to the House bill which changed this system of taxation. Under my amendments the hazardous and wasteful character of these industries is taken into account. These amendments both relieve and promote these great industries by rendering the taxation to which they are subjected more just and equitable. One of these amendments limited the tax on profits in certain instances to 20 per cent. The other based depletion allowances on value rather than cost. I shall not discuss these technical terms, but the significance of these amendments is obvious to everyone familiar with these industries.

MILLIONS FOR OKLAHOMA.

In addition to securing these amendments to the House bill, I succeeded in striking out the tax of 2 cents a gallon on gasoline imposed by this measure as it passed the House. This gasoline tax would have cost Oklahoma, in the first instance, approximately $20,000,000 a year, however much the tax might subsequently have been shifted. I based my opposition to this tax purely upon the grounds that it was a tax upon the source of industrial power, and was therefore unscientific, unjust, and undemocratic. Gasoline is about the only source of industrial power that can be made available upon the farm, particularly in a prairie country.

It has been estimated that these several amendments which I offered save the State of Oklahoma many millions every year. These millions are devoted to the further development of our magnificent mineral resources, and contribute to the growing riches and prosperity of our splendid young Commonwealth.

COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENTS.

My success in securing these amendments was due in some measure to my strategic position as a member of the Senate Committee on Finance. I have served for six years on this committee, which handles all revenue legislation. The Finance Committee, as you know, is the ranking committee of the Senate. In addition to my membership on the Finance Committee, I am also ranking minority member on the Committee on Agriculture and ranking minority member of the Committee on Immigration. I am also a member of the Committee on Patents. In the Senate, as you know, seniority counts. I am the senior Senator from Oklahoma. There are only four Democratic Senators and only nine Republican Senators now senior to me in length of service.

MEASURES OPPOSED.

I desire now to call your attention to the several measures which I could not see my way clear to support. This was due not to a spirit of obstruction but to the belief that they were unsound in principle or unwise in policy. The following enumeration will show that there was a pretty definite code of economic principles underlying my position. I thought then, and I think now, that we passed several laws which were uneconomic, unwise, or undemocratic. I feared they would be followed by industrial unrest and discontent after the war. Indeed, I remarked on one occasion in the Senate, "Let us not sow the wind, lest we reap the whirlwind." Has the event justified my fears? As a faithful watchman could I say all is well when coming industrial troubles were casting their ominous shadows before?

I voted against the bill to take over the telegraphs and telephones. I thought this would increase the cost and decrease the efficiency of the service. I believed that we could dethrone the Hapsburgs and Hohenzollerns without controlling the rural telephone lines between Lone Wolf and Wild Horse, between Red Bird and White Eagle, between Big Heart and Bushy Head.

I voted against the bill to take over the railroads. I favored a different and, as I believe, a better plan. I thought Government operation would decrease the efficiency and increase the cost of service. The experiment has bequeathed us an enormous deficit (745 millions) and a whole train of industrial problems.

I voted against the bill to take $100,000,000 out of our Treasury and give the money to the people of southern and eastern Europe. I was willing to lend them money but not to give them money. I did not feel that I had any constitutional or moral right to practice charity with the people's money. I was not willing to tax the drought-stricken people of Oklahoma and donate their scant earnings to aliens and strangers across the sea.

My objection to the measures above mentioned was based on constitutional or economic grounds. I do not believe in needless meddling with private business. Private initiative is one of society's best assets. It has been one of the chief dynamic forces in the advancement of civilization. Oklahoma has had more experience in long-range, absent treatment, bureaucratic government than any other State in the Union. I did not wish needlessly to extend or intensify such a system.

To make this record complete, I mention three amendments. I voted against the censorship of the press desired by the administration. A free press is a palladium of liberty. I voted for the amendment requiring Federal employees in the city of Washington to do eight hours work for eight hours' pay. This was contrary to the wish of the administration. Every Congressman from Oklahoma but one voted as I voted. I voted for Senator OWEN'S amendment to the food-control bill to establish an auditing committee on war expenditures. I thought then and I think now that such a committee would have saved the taxpayers multiplied millions. Recent developments have rather strengthened than weakened that conviction.

I voted against the food-control law. I thought that it would be unjust and injurious to the farmers. It lost the American farmers more than a billion dollars. It lost the Oklahoma farmers more than $50,000,000. These losses were not limited to the wheat farmers alone but extended to the farmers who produce cotton, cattle, hogs, and poultry. These losses were entirely unnecessary. The President admitted in his annual address of 1917 that the food-control act was unjust to the farmers. I am opposed to any policy in peace or war that enables one man to get, without earning, what another man earns without getting. As chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, and representing as I do a great agricultural State, I felt under a double obligation to protect the farmers alike against injury and against injustice.

I voted against the amendment to the food-control bill which permitted Anheuser and Busch and Pabst and Schlitz and Budweiser to make beer out of grain and to make money out of beer while our women and children were patriotically denying themselves bread. The adoption of this amendment was an additional reason for opposing the entire measure. This vote was contrary to the administration's views, but I am pleased to say that the administration afterwards changed its views.

$2.50 WHEAT AMENDMENT.

As soon as the President admitted that the food-control act was unjust to the farmers, I began, as chairman of the Agricultural Committee, to lay plans to correct the admitted injustice and injury. I prevailed upon the Senate to suspend the rules and adopt an amendment raising the price of wheat to $2.50 per bushel. The House reduced this to $2.40. The bill went to the President raising the price of wheat to $2.40. The President vetoed this measure.

I secured the adoption of an amendment to protect the farmers against fraud in the purchase of so-called concentrated feeding stuffs. The amendment was designed to secure simple commercial honesty. It failed in conference.

As chairman of the Committee on Agriculture I began the fight in the Senate to repeal the daylight-saving law.

FARM LEGISLATION.

As chairman of the Committee on Agriculture I helped prepare and report the cotton futures act. This measure was designed to prevent the manipulation of the cotton market and the rigging of cotton prices by mere gamblers.

As chairman of the Committee on Agriculture I helped prepare and report the Federal grain grades act. This was intended to establish uniform grades throughout the country and to stabilize the grain market. Its administration so far has not been entirely satisfactory and should be improved.

As chairman of the Committee on Agriculture I helped prepare and report the bonded warehouse measure. This was intended to give the farmer some voice as to when he should market his crops and to improve the character of warehouse receipts as commercial assets or as collateral security.

As a member of the Committee on Agriculture I helped prepare, report, and pass the amendment establishing the Bureau of Markets, to assist in bringing about a more acceptable and less expensive system of marketing and distributing farm products and bringing the producer and consumer into closer touch with each other. Improved distribution is one of the greatest problems of agriculture to-day.

It is a source of much satisfaction to me that the first proposition which ever passed Congress looking to the establishment of a system of rural credits was an amendment which I prepared and offered to the agricultural appropriation bill of 1913. This amendment created the United States Rural Credit Commission, to study the rural credit systems in Europe. I was appointed a member of this commission by the President, and assisted in preparing its report. It is a source of equal satisfaction that the second propositon that ever passed Congress in respect to rural credits was an amendment which I prepared and offered to the agricultural bill of 1915. This amendment created a joint committee of the two Houses and placed the committee under mandatory instructions to prepare a rural credits bill and report the same to Congress by January 1, 1916. I was a member of this joint committee. It reported the bill which eventuated in the existing rural credits system. Experience should enable us to improve the present system. I desire to see it supplemented by a short-time system of rural credits, a system of rural credits that will meet the needs of our farmers and harmonize with our existing credit institutions. Short-time credit systems have existed for a long time in the Old World and are being introduced in Canada. I should favor a sound system in the United States. This would assist in completing our plans for farm financeering.

The tenant farmer touches my heart. I wish that every American citizen owned his own home, owned the floor beneath his feet, and the roof above his head. I think that whatever the Government can do in accordance with sound financial principles should be done to encourage and render possible home owning throughout the country. Home owning may prove to be one of the paths leading us out of the industrial wilderness in which we are wandering to-day.

HIGH COST OF LIVING.

The high cost of living is a matter of deep and general concern. It is pressing heavily on every class. It presses most heavily, perhaps, on ministers, teachers, clerks, and others having fixed incomes or salaries. Increased production is the only fundamental solution for this problem. The prevention of criminal profiteering would help, but the farmer must afford the real remedy. The farmer will solve the problem of increased production if he is let alone, if he is not overburdened, if he is not borne down to the earth.

PREFERRED VOLUNTEER SYSTEM.

I voted against the first draft bill and withheld my vote on the second. I voted to try the volunteer system, our traditional and time-honored policy, before resorting to conscription. The American volunteer has glorified with valor and with victory every battle field of the Republic. When did it come to be a reproach to vote for the American volunteer? If, as some say, the drafted men themselves prefer the draft to the volunteer system, that, of course, does much to popularize the system.

Notwithstanding there were certain points in favor of the draft, I could not get my consent to vote for draft laws which first and last drafted boys only 18 years of age and drafted gray-haired men 46 years of age and at the same time exempted Senators and Congressmen from the draft. I was not willing to invade the nursery. I was not willing to violate the cradle. There was something in the proposal to draft 18-year-old boys that made me think of robbing a bird's nest.

It would have been gratifying, of course, if I could have agreed with the President on every measure and on every occasion. This would have spared me torrents of abuse and vituperation. No one need imagine that this abuse has been grateful to my feelings. I could, indeed, have avoided it by sacrificing my convictions, and I might in that way have avoided even a contest for my seat in the Senate. But I could not surrender my convictions in order to escape unmerited criticism. I could not afford to purchase immunity or popularity at such a price.

COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING.

I do not agree with the President in regard to universal compulsory military training. He favors it. He has a right to do so. I oppose it. I think I have a right to do so. I regard universal compulsory military training as the very egg of militarism. I want to crush militarism in the shell. I am not willing for it to hatch out its hateful brood in this land of the free. I am not willing for the monster of Prussian militarism which we have crushed in Germany to find a refuge in this self-governing democracy. It is hard enough now to get labor upon the farm. These training camps might cause an exodus of farm boys from the farm.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

I am opposed to the administration's Army reorganization bill, notwithstanding it bears the sanction of the Secretary of War, the Chief of Staff, and other spokesmen of the administration. This bill has been introduced in both Houses. This bill proposes to create a Regular Army of 572,000. It creates an Army of 572,000 Regulars in time of peace as against 82,000 Regulars before the war. More than that, it proposes to create a reserve of 750,000 men in time of peace. More than that, it provides that every able-bodied male citizen in the United States between the ages of 18 and 46 years shall be automatically drafted into the military service whenever the United States enters a war. This universal draft is made automatic without any further action on the part of Congress. I see how an advocate of the draft could favor this wholesale automatic conscription, but I look upon the draft as among the later rather than the first recourses of war. More than that, this new Army is to cost $900,000,000 a year. It is to cost seven times as much as our Army cost before the war. It is to cost $200,000,000 more than the total expenses of our entire Government before the war, excepting only the Postal Department, which pays its own way. How do these vast armaments harmonize with the assurances of perpetual peace and universal reign of brotherly love? I am opposed to this vast Military Establishment in time of peace, much as I should rejoice to agree with the administration. No two thinking men ever agreed about everything. When you see two men pretending to agree about everything, you may set it down as certain that one is doing the thinking and the other one is doing the agreeing. No Senator should be a mere rubber stamp. As for me, I am as unwilling as I am unfit to play such a part. My master's voice is the people's voice.

PRESIDENT'S APPEAL.

If I may say so without lese majeste, I could not bring myself to approve the President's appeal to the country issued just before the election in 1918, no matter by whom counseled or advised. As a Democrat, I thought it bad politics. As an American, I thought it inept to say anything which could even be misconstrued as a reflection upon the loyalty and patriotism of 50,000,000 of our Republican fellow citizens. At that moment millions of Republican fathers and mothers were making the supreme sacrifice. At that moment a million Republican boys were giving the ultimate proof of their devotion.

INTOLERANCE.

I think I am intolerant only of intolerance. I believe in freedom of thought, freedom of speech, and freedom of conscience. I think it better to answer a man's argument than to cut his tongue out. Thomas Jefferson said, "Error is harmless so long as truth is left free to combat it." I have been subjected to an intolerance which I sometimes think more consistent with the lurid flames of medieval persecution than with the white light of twentieth century civilization. It would not become me, however, to say that I have been more sinned against than sinning. Of that others must judge. I am willing to answer argument with argument, but I am not willing to answer abuse with abuse. Fair-minded men charged with grave responsibilities ought to be able to differ without challenging each other's intelligence, integrity, or patriotism. The interchange of ideas is the best searchlight for the discovery of truth and the detection of error. I think that I have learned to keep my head when those about me are losing theirs and blaming it on me. Even when Cam Campbell and the "assembled representatives of democracy" without a hearing characterized me as an obstructionist "undemocratic, unpatriotic, and un-American," rather would I say "God forgive them they know not what they do." If unhappily they could succeed in their apparent purpose to drive everybody out of the Democratic Party who did not agree with the administration in every policy and in every detail of every policy, they should not be surprised to find themselves buried like Sampson beneath a wreck of their own making. I appeal to the people. I appeal to your love of truth, to your sense of justice.

WINNING OF THE WAR.

My attitude toward the winning of the war was often and unmistakably expressed during the war. The following passage from a Liberty loan speech which I delivered at the Academy of Music at Brooklyn on April 27, 1918, gives expression to my sentiments:

"In this momentous contest we can not afford to fail. To fail would be the supreme tragedy of history. To fail would be to arrest the progress and to mar the destiny of the human race. To fail, let me repeat, would be to blot out the star of hope, to blot out the bow of promise from the firmament of the future. From the dictionary of civilization we must therefore blot out the word 'fail.' In this day of danger and of destiny we must have in America no double allegiance, no divided loyalty, no fifty-fifty fidelity. In this crisis the American people must typify 100,000,000 souls with but a single thought; 100,000,000 hearts that beat as one. In all America there should breathe not a single American who never to himself hath said this is my own, my native land. In all America there should breathe not a single American who is unwilling to strive, who is unwilling to sacrifice to bring victory to the Stars and Stripes and enduring peace to a war-stricken world. America has a right to expect, has a right to insist, that every American shall do his duty."

MARE'S-NEST.

The foregoing is my record during the war. By it I am willing to be judged. I will now call your attention to a perfect harvest of evil fruit by which I have been judged, for which I have been condemned, but for which I am in no wise responsible. With your leave, I will now conduct you through the most amazing museum of mare's-nests which it was ever your fortune to look upon.

On October 17, 1917, I delivered an address before the Southern Commercial Congress in the city of New York. This was in the midst of the second Liberty loan drive. The Oklahoman, in a stinging editorial, charged that in this speech I opposed the Liberty loan drive and advised the people not to buy the bonds. If I had been guilty of this, I should have deserved the condemnation of every loyal man, woman, and child in America. The charge was the reverse of the truth. The truth is in that speech, which is a matter of record, I used the following language: "It is as much a public duty to buy bonds as to pay taxes. The man with the pocketbook must stand back of the boy with the bayonet. * * * It would be almost as great a disaster to lose this Liberty loan drive as to lose a battle in France." I came back and took Secretary Houston's place at the final Liberty loan mass meeting in Washington. I addressed one Liberty loan meeting in Brooklyn, which resulted in the raising of $25,000,000. I was doing my best, and while doing my best, I was being misrepresented to the people whose esteem I treasure more than all the wealth of the Indies.

Those responsible for these fantastic charges seem to have adopted the witches' maxim of morality, "Fair is foul, and foul is fair." I would, however, call your attention to the legal maxim, "False in one thing, false in all." But I proceed to expose these travesties upon truth. I proceed to unravel these tapestries of error woven by prejudice upon the loom of fancy.

TELEGRAM MISCONSTRUED.

In September, 1917, the Oklahoman charged in flaming headlines that Senator GORE was giving aid and encouragement to draft resisters. This ridiculous charge was based on the following telegram, which I sent to an unknown constituent. I quote his telegram first:

[Western Union telegram.]

DOUGHERTY, OKLA., September 17, 1917.

Hon. T. P. GORE,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Read your letter State chairman. I travel over Oklahoma. I am confident farmers are with you 20 to 1. Please wire if there is a law that exempts men from any Army service who belong to a religious organization whose tenets are against going to war. Please quote authorities. Answer.

(Signed) H. CAPIRS.

[Western Union telegram.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 18, 1917.

H. CAPIRS, Dougherty, Okla.:

Your telegram received and greatly appreciated. Am quoting the following from section 4 of the draft act: "Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to require or compel any person to serve in any of the forces herein provided for who is found to be a member of any well-recognized religious sect or organization at present organized and existing and whose existing creed or principles forbid its members to participate in war in any form, and whose religious convictions are against war or participation therein in accordance with the creed or principles of said religious organizations."

(Signed) T. P. GORE.

This is the only correspondence or communication which ever took place between us. At his request I quoted without comment the letter of the law. He asked a civil question and I returned a civil answer.

DID NOT STIGMATIZE AS SUNSHINE SOLDIERS.

From the grand jury of his imagination a distinguished lawyer recently returned this complaint against me in a "keynote" speech delivered in Oklahoma City, "Senator GORE seems to have had a holy horror both of soldiers and of war." I certainly have a horror of war. If this be an offense, I am guilty. I say this notwithstanding I voted to declare war against Austria. There is nothing in my record, public or private, to justify such an imputation concerning the American soldiery. Five of my ancestors were soldiers of the Revolution. My father was a soldier of four years' service in the Confederate Army. I am bound to respect and honor our soldiery by every tie of patriotism and affection. I am incapable alike of either disparaging the living or of dishonoring the dead. The American soldier stands unexcelled in the annals of war. In the war which has just ended our soldiers, seamen, and marines gave a new definition and a deeper significance to heroism and sacrifice. In defense of our free institutions and the principles upon which they were founded our immortal dead have sought for death as the bridegroom seeks his bride. I have one sentiment for our soldiers, living and dead, "Cheers for the living, tears for the dead." I hope to have something more than cheers for the living, something more than mere blarney—justice and opportunity, the freeman's best heritage. It has been charged times without number that I declared on the floor of the Senate that the soldiers on the Mexican border were summer soldiers and sunshine patriots. I made no such statement. The truth is I asked this question on the floor of the Senate, "Shall we by implication convey the idea that they are summer soldiers, sunshine patriots, and knights of the drawing-room, and so forth?" I did not say or insinuate that they were summer soldiers. I asked a question which answered itself in the negative and repelled an imputation of that sort. (See bound CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 24, 1916, p. 1914.) Let the real record answer the fabricated record.

WOULD NOT MAKE WIDOWS AND ORPHANS.

Often have you heard this told, that I opposed the payment of $50 a month to the dependent families of soldiers on the Mexican border. Perhaps you have never once heard the truth as to my real position. I was opposed to requiring men with dependent families to render military service. I thought that men with dependent families ought to be exempted from military service. I thought so then, and I think so now; at least, until they are drafted by stern necessity. I did contend for that principle; I did contend for that exemption. I had a rather spirited altercation with Senator REED upon this point. I quote the following extracts from my remarks:

[CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 26, 1916, pp. 9990-9991.]

"The Senator states this to be the issue: If a soldier is at the front imperiling his life in defense of his nation's honor, shall we suffer his family to starve? Mr. President, that is not the issue as I conceive it to be. If the House joint resolution prevails, if the father and the husband go to the front and fall in battle, the curse of the widow and the orphan will be upon the supporters of the House joint resolution, and they will bless the names of those who sought to exempt their fathers and their husbands from a tragic death upon the field of battle. That is the point in this controversy. If you ask whether the family of the soldier at the front shall be permitted to starve, everybody answers that question in the negative. The supporters of the House resolution answer it by saying: 'No; instead of starving you we fling open the doors of the Treasury and give you the generous largess of $50 a month to reimburse you for your privations and for your sorrows.' The supporters of the Senate proposition say: 'No; the family of the soldier shall not starve; he shall not under existing circumstances be required to make the sacrifice; he shall be permitted to remain at home in the discharge of his civic and domestic obligations, and others who have no such obligations, and who are willing and anxious to die for their country, shall be permitted to go, and if, by evil chance, they should fall upon the field of battle, they have no widows and orphans to bewail their untimely taking off.'

"We do not propose to manufacture widows; we do not propose to manufacture orphans by requiring fathers and husbands to go to the front in this emergency. We will permit them to remain at home and allow others to achieve the glories that may be incident to the threatened war. That is the point at issue in the controversy; and that is the only point."

A few days after this debate in the Senate, I addressed a letter to the Oklahoma City News, from which I extract the following:

"There were two opposing theories advanced upon the payment to the guardsmen and their families. The House resolution and its supporters proposed to tear the guardsman from the bosom of his family, even though he had a dependent mother, wife, and children. They proposed to console and compensate these weeping women and children with the miserable pittance of $50 a month. A majority of the Senate, like myself, was opposed to tearing asunder those whom God had joined together. We did not believe, in a war like this (the Mexican border), that it was necessary to break up the home, to separate the family, to run the risk of widowing the wives and orphaning the children, and then make a vain effort to repair their loss and dry their tears with what would be little else than blood money amounting to $50 a month. We have patriots enough to fight our battles in such a war without entailing needless sorrow and suffering upon our soldiers or upon our women and children. I do not know how to estimate the sorrow of women and children in the coin of the realm. I do not know the market price of the mother's sigh, of the widow's tear, or the orphan's sob. I think it infinitely better to leave these men in their homes and with their families rather than send them to the cactus deserts of Mexico and mock the miseries of their loved ones with an offer of so much per sigh or so much per heartache. I can not reduce the most sacred sentiments of the human soul to a common denominator of dollars and cents. I would prevent these distressing tragedies in this enlightened land. I would give these women their husbands instead of filthy lucre. I would give these children their fathers instead of a $50 bill. There shall be no vacant chair in the family circle with my voice and vote—no crêpe on the door. The ghosts of these slaughtered soldiers can not shake their gory locks at me. Heartbroken widows and orphans shall not breathe a curse upon my memory as the despoiler of their hearts and their homes. I prefer the grateful blessings of devoted wives and loving, laughing children as one who had sprinkled the doorposts to turn aside the angel of destruction."

These quotations illustrate my purpose and my point of view. The bill finally passed and the payments were made. I was, however, pioneering for a principle, for what I knew to be a sound principle, the exemption of men with dependent families from military service. I knew I would be misrepresented, as I have been. But somebody must do battle for truth without cowardly calculations as to consequences. My vindication, however, came sooner than I had expected. By formal order, the Secretary of War discontinued the enlistment of men who had dependent families soon after this debate in the Senate, to wit, for the Regular Army July 18, 1916, and for the National Guard November 3, 1916. During the war which has just ended this principle was adopted and approved by universal consent. By its express terms the draft law recognized the justice and propriety of exempting from military service men who had families depending upon them. I may, indeed, be penalized for urging this principle, but it has saved many wives from becoming widows and many children from becoming orphans. It seems to me a fair if not irresistible inference that those who criticized my attitude must favor military service on the part of men who have dependent wives and children.

You may possibly be surprised to learn that the one editorial writer in Oklahoma who has abused me most was among the first to seek and secure his own exemption. When the angel of the passover stopped at his door he thought that a man with his family ought to be excused from military service. He was within the draft age. He did not go. He claimed and obtained his exemption. He let your boy go to the trenches instead of going himself. I do not pass judgment upon his exemption. I merely make the point that he did not avail himself of a perfectly splendid opportunity to fight for world democracy. He was one of those wordy warriors who thought that the pen was mightier than the sword. Like Sir John Falstaff, he thought that discretion was the better part of valor. He thought that prudence was the better part of patriotism. With his refined and delicate sense of duty he thought that he could serve his country better writing fiery editorials against me in a cozy corner in Oklahoma City than by fighting, bleeding, and dying beside Oklahoma's real heroes upon the bloody fields of France. What would those real heroes think of an exempted editor exploiting the virtue and valor of a "self-exempted he-ro"? This is my critic. This is the paragon of patriotism. This is the beau ideal of duty who has been lecturing you upon the duties of citizenship and lecturing me upon the duties of the senatorship. Job said, "The hypocrite's hope shall perish."

VOTED TO DOUBLE SOLDIERS' PAY.

He that is not guiltless himself sometimes casts the first stone in order to conceal his own guilt and to excite suspicion against the guiltless. The following is an example of this: With the design of prejudicing the soldiers, it has been urged against me by those who know better that I voted against the proposition to double the soldiers' pay during the European war. This proposition came up in the Senate in the form of an amendment, on April 28, 1917. The amendment was offered by Senator KENYON. I voted for the amendment. This fact was confirmed by Congressman Austin, who offered a similar amendment in the House. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 16, 1917, bound volume, p. 2391.)

Perhaps the truth will not silence those who wish to profit by misrepresenting the facts. But for those who wish the truth I submit the following letter addressed by Senator KENYON to an inquiring soldier:

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 27, 1919.

Mr. C. E. CLARK,
Post-office Box 238, Lawton, Okla.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter, which has not been answered heretofore on account of being swamped here, in which you make reference to the fact that I introduced the amendment in the Senate to increase the soldiers' pay from $15 to $30 a month. You say that you live in the home town of Senator GORE and Congressman FERRIS, and state, among other things, that it has been charged there that Senator GORE voted against the proposition to double the soldiers' pay. I take pleasure in advising you that Senator GORE voted for my amendment to increase the soldiers' pay to $30 a month. He not only voted for it, but he was an earnest advocate of the increase. * * * You will be warranted by the record and by the facts in denying any charge or intimation that Senator GORE either voted against or opposed my amendment to increase the pay of soldiers.

* * * * * * *

Of course, I am merely answering your letter and do not want to be placed in the position of taking any part in your campaign down there. I do know the soldiers have no more faithful friend in the Senate than Senator GORE.

Very truly, yours, (Signed) W. S. KENYON.

I voted for the Kenyon amendment to double the soldiers' pay—on this point I am willing to match records with any man in Congress—although I knew that the value of their services can not be estimated in dollars and cents. It would seem that such unfounded accusations should discredit the accuser rather than the accused, but mere mortal man can not hope to escape false accusation when the Son of the most high God was falsely accused and crucified.

WANTED JAPAN TO FIGHT.

It has been urged against me time and time again, and was urged against me again by Judge Stuart in his wet-nurse speech on January 29, that I offered an amendment to the first war-revenue bill that none of the money appropriated should be spent to pay the transportation of drafted men outside the borders of America or to feed or clothe them. In order that you may compare the real record with this counterfeit record, I quote the amendment in full, which was offered on August 18, 1917:

That until Congress otherwise provides, no part of the moneys raised or received under the authority of this act or otherwise shall be accepted, expended, or used, either directly or indirectly, to transport over the seas any citizen of the United States drafted into the military service thereof unless such citizen shall also have volunteered for such service over the seas.

This amendment was offered August 18, 1917, just 17 days before the first drafted men were mobilized in the camps. It had no relation to food or clothing. It did not restrict or delay the use of the Navy, Regular Army, or Volunteers. It was intended to be temporary, as indicated by the phrase, "until Congress otherwise provides." This amendment was offered just four days after China declared war. It was intended to secure either a Chinese or a Japanese army at the front. To show my purpose I quote the following statement, which I submitted to the Senate when the amendment was proposed:

"A number of my constituents have requested me to submit a proposal of this character. My principal object, however, in offering the amendment is to stimulate both conservation and efficiency. To conserve, at least for the present, our own man power and to render more efficient the man power of the Entente Allies. * * * China which has just declared war, has 32,000,000 men between the ages of 21 and 30. There is no dearth of man power among the Entente Allies. What they need most is to make this enormous man power effective on the field of battle. What they need most is not men but munitions, arms, the weapons of war, and other necessary supplies. The United States can furnish these better than China or any other allied country. China, Russia, India, and other countries can spare men better than the United States. President Wilson said that the Nation had volunteered en masse, and each man must do the part for which he is best equipped. Each nation waging war against Germany and her allies should do the part for which it is best equipped. Japan, for some reason, is conserving her man power. She has been in the war three years. She has sent no army to the front. There are no better soldiers in the world than the Japanese. So far, Japan has contributed practically nothing but munitions and equipment. Japan and Great Britain have an alliance both offensive and defensive. Japan has conserved both her man power and her 'dignity.' Is not her example worthy of our consideration, at least for the present, no matter how much the false pride of the jingo may declaim against it? Excluding equipment, we could maintain a Chinese army of 5,000,000 men perhaps at less cost than it would require to maintain an American army of 2,000,000. We could send our Regular Army or Navy and the volunteer air fleet, as large as the exigencies of war demand, and all the volunteers which Col. Roosevelt or anyone else could raise for foreign service. We could then devote this country, the greatest workshop in the world, more largely to the maintenance or assistance of the vast armies of the Entente Allies. This would be one of the best guaranties of a short and successful war; of an early, honorable, and lasting peace—that consummation so devoutly to be wished."

There is little doubt that the situation could have been so managed as to compel Japan to send her magnificent army to the trenches. That was my real purpose. Let all who condemn the purpose condemn me.

ARMED BELLIGERENT SHIPS.

I now come to the subject upon which perhaps the greatest variety of fiction has been written. I refer to the armed-ship resolution. It has been asserted that I introduced a bill to warn American ships off the high seas; that I introduced a bill to warn American citizens off the high seas. If my critics do not object, I would like to submit the actual record to the public. I quote the resolution, preamble and all, introduced more than one year before we entered the war:

[CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Feb. 25, 1916, p. 3556.]

Whereas a number of leading powers of the world are now engaged in a war of unexampled proportions; and

Whereas the United States is happily at peace with all of the belligerent nations; and

Whereas it is equally the desire and the interest of the American people to remain at peace with all nations; and

Whereas the President has recently afforded fresh and signal proofs of the superiority of diplomacy to butchery as a method of settling international disputes; and

Whereas the right of American citizens to travel on unarmed belligerent vessels has recently received renewed guaranties of respect and inviolability; and

Whereas the right of American citizens to travel on armed belligerent vessels rather than upon unarmed vessels is essential neither to their life, liberty, or safety, nor to the independence, dignity, or security of the United States; and

Whereas Congress alone has been vested with the power to declare war, which involves the obligation to prevent war by all proper means consistent with the honor and vital interest of the Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress, vested as it is with the sole power to declare war, that all persons owing allegiance to the United States should, in behalf of their own safety and the vital interest of the United States, forbear to exercise the right to travel as passengers upon any armed vessel of any belligerent power, whether such vessel be armed for offensive or defensive purposes; and it is the further sense of the Congress that no passport should be issued or renewed by the Secretary of State or by anyone acting under him to be used by any person owing allegiance to the United States for purpose of travel upon any such armed vessel of a belligerent power.

Mark these points. This was not a bill; it was only a concurrent resolution. It would not have had the force and effect of law. It was merely the expression of the sense of the Congress. It was introduced February 25, 1916, more than 1 year before we entered the war, and 11½ months before Germany defined a danger zone. It did not warn American ships off the sea. It did not warn American citizens off the sea. It did not forbid American citizens to travel on any kind of ship whatsoever. It merely expressed as the sense of Congress that American citizens forbear exercising the right to travel on the armed ships of the belligerent powers. It had no reference to American citizens traveling on American ships. It had no reference to American citizens traveling on neutral ships. It had no reference to American citizens traveling on the unarmed ships even of the belligerents. It referred exclusively to the armed ships of the belligerent powers. It did not forbid Americans to travel even on armed belligerent ships. It merely expressed the opinion that they should refrain from doing so in order to obviate war and bloodshed. It was based on and inspired by the letter of Secretary Lansing published just one week before, to wit, on February 18. In this letter the Secretary referred to the arming of merchant ships as a doubtful legal right under the changed circumstances of submarine warfare. He used the following significant sentence:

"I should say that my Government is impressed with the reasonableness of the argument that a merchant vessel carrying an armament of any sort, in view of the character of the submarine warfare and the defensive weakness of undersea craft, should be held to be an auxiliary cruiser and so treated by a neutral as well as by a belligerent Government, and is seriously considering instructing its officials accordingly." (H. Doc. 2111, 64th Cong., p. 94.)

My resolution was intended to assist in this policy.

It should be remembered that when the war began we expended more than $1,000,000 out of the public Treasury to bring American citizens home from Europe. They, of course, had the right to be in Europe; but out of motives of prudence we brought them home at public expense. As we had brought them home at the expense of the people without dishonor, it seemed to me that we might at least suggest to them that if they must return to Europe they exercise the precaution to travel either on American ships or neutral ships or the unarmed ships of the belligerents. It seemed to me that we might suggest that if they must return to the war zone they refrain from traveling on armed belligerent ships, "auxiliary cruisers"; that they refrain from running the risk and taking the chance of plunging 110,000,000 of peaceable, home-loving people into that terrible whirlwind of blood and fire. I said at the time in the Senate that I had offered the resolution because I feared that we were rushing headlong into war. If I erred in this matter, I erred on the side of peace. President Wilson was reelected in the following fall on the plea that he had kept us out of war. I was trying to help keep us out of war.

PRESIDENT FAVORED SOME.

Those who think that the support of such a resolution proves one utterly unfit or disloyal will not find themselves in uniform agreement with the President himself. Congressman Keating, of Colorado, voted for the McLemore resolution, which was much stronger than the resolution quoted above. Notwithstanding that, the President gave Congressman Keating a signed letter supporting his reelection. Congressman Shouse, Democrat, of Kansas, voted for the McLemore resolution. Notwithstanding that, the President appointed him Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. Congressman Kent, Progressive Republican, of California, voted for the McLemore resolution. Notwithstanding that, the President appointed him as a member of the Tariff Commission, carrying a salary of $10,000 a year.

KEYNOTE BY PROXY.

A dramatic and pretentious effort was recently made in Oklahoma City to lend weight and dignity to these fictitious allegations. I refer to the speech of Judge C. B. Stuart, delivered on January 29. Judge Stuart is a distinguished lawyer. For his brilliant talents I have naught but admiration. The judge is as chivalrous as a knight of old, and I do not believe he would knowingly misrepresent even me. He has been mislead by those whose interest it is to misrepresent me and mislead the public. Stuart's client should have told him nothing but the truth. There was something unique in the occasion to which I have referred. It was a sort of coming-out party, with the debutant playing the second fiddle, or beating the straws on the main fiddle. There was something unique in the judge's speech. It was a keynote speech by proxy. The judge held a well-authenticated power of attorney to speak in the name and by the authority of "Prince Charming." Shades of Calhoun, Clay, and Webster! A keynote speech by proxy. Judge Stuart and his client have not yet learned what Abraham Lincoln taught the rest of the world more than a half century ago, "that you can fool all the people a part of the time and can fool a part of the people all the time, but you can not fool all the people all of the time."

FAVORED RESTRICTING IMMIGRATION.

I omitted to mention one measure passed prior to the war upon which I voted at variance with the President. As a member of the Immigration Committee, I helped prepare, report, and pass the new immigration law restricting immigration and applying the literacy test to would-be immigrants. This was to keep out undesirable aliens. I thought we were admitting aliens who could not be assimilated. Our experience during the war justified my fears. The President vetoed this bill. I voted, with the utmost respect, to pass this bill over the President's veto.

SUPPORTED CONSTRUCTIVE LEGISLATION.

Let me now complete my affirmative record. As a member of the Finance Committee I helped prepare, report, and pass the measure creating the Tariff Commission. This was intended to place our revenue and fiscal system upon a more scientific and less partisan footing. As a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee I helped prepare, report, and pass the act creating the Federal Trade Commission. This was intended to prevent unfair practices in business and to afford equal opportunity to all citizens of the Republic alike. I voted for the so-called Clayton Act, intended to strengthen the antitrust laws and intended to afford equal protection to law-abiding business and to law-abiding labor. Labor is not a commodity. It is human flesh and blood, human thoughts and feelings, and purpose and aspirations.

I strongly favor good roads as one of the urgent needs of the times. On account of bad roads the farmers alone lose one-half a billion dollars a year. We spend billions preparing for war and only a few thousands for rural sanitation. I would spend less on the implements of death and spend more to make the roses bloom upon the cheeks of children. While I favor sound road legislation, I am opposed to pork-barrel legislation. I felt obliged to vote against the highway constitutional amendment voted on in Oklahoma May 6, 1919.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

I voted for the constitutional amendment authorizing Congress to levy a tax upon incomes. This was intended to make wealth share with want the burdens as well as the blessings of Government. I voted for the constitutional amendment providing for the direct election of United States Senators. I think that the governed ought to govern, and I have abundant reason to believe that the people are qualified to elect United States Senators. I voted for the constitutional amendment on the subject of prohibition, and I found myself in a situation where I had to vote to pass the enforcement bill over the President's veto.

SUPPORTED WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

"Whispering tongues can poison truth," says Coleridge. It has been whispered that I did not loyally support the woman suffrage amendment. Let the record speak. I voted for the equal-suffrage amendment in the Senate on October 1, 1918. I voted for the suffrage amendment February 10, 1919. I was paired in its favor on June 4, 1919. I returned from Oklahoma to Washington to cast the first vote mentioned above. In acknowledgment of this I received the following note of appreciation signed by Carrie Chapman Catt, president; Helen H. Gardener, vice president; and Maud Wood Park, congressional chairman of the National American Woman Suffrage Association:

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 2, 1918.

Hon. THOMAS P. GORE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR GORE: We wish to thank you warmly for your support of the woman suffrage amendment and for the long journey which you made in order to cast your vote for the measure. We realize that it was a great inconvenience to you, but we trust that your interest in our success has made you feel that the effort was worth while.

We are in no sense discouraged, for we feel that our question is in a better position now than it has ever held before, and we have no doubt of its success when it comes before the Senate again.

Sincerely and gratefully, yours,

CARRIE CHAPMAN CATT,
President.
HELEN H. GARDENER,
Vice President.
MAUD WOOD PARK,
Congressional Chairman.

I supported the constitutional amendment to give women the right to vote. That whispered charge was just another phantasmagoria. I voted for woman suffrage because I believe in a government of the people, by the people, and last, but not least, for the people. I hope to see the day come when the people themselves will have the right at least to an advisory vote upon the question of peace or war, on the tragic issue of life and death. When that time comes I want the mothers of this country to have the right to express their judgment upon the necessity of a proposed war. This is the best way to prevent, it is the only way to democratize war. I rejoice that the recent Democratic convention in Oklahoma approved this principle.

WOMEN MUST REGISTER.

The right to vote involves the duty to vote. The women of Oklahoma must register or they can not vote. They must register this year between July 13 and July 23. I think these are the dates. The women who wish to vote in the Democratic primary must register as Democrats. Those who wish to vote in the Republican primary must register as Republicans, and so forth. One who is registered as a Republican can not vote in the Democratic primary and vice versa.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

A word about the League of Nations and I am done. I am one of those who believe in a society of nations to promote peace and prevent war. I think it would be a tragedy worse than war if nothing comes out of this war designed to minimize the causes, to multiply the substitutes, and to moderate the horrors and sorrows of war. I am anxious, however, that what we do in the name of peace will be calculated to promote peace and will not prove the highway into war. The people are asking for a fish. I would not give them a serpent. They are asking for an egg. I would not give them a scorpion. They are asking for the blessings of peace. I would not give them the calamities of war.

I have not looked upon the covenant of the League of Nations, as written, as a thing sacred. I have supposed that the President did the best he could in Europe. I have thought that the Senate ought to do the best it could in America. Thirty-seven Republican Senators—enough to defeat the treaty—signed a round robin last March declaring they would not vote for the treaty unless it was changed. I took their declaration seriously. I knew then, as we all know now, that we would have to change the treaty in order to secure its ratification. That was a fixed fact. Whatever factors in the equation were unknown, that at least was known. Whatever else was uncertain, that at least was certain. I thought, as practical men, we ought to adapt ourselves to the inevitable. I thought we ought to make the necessary changes and speed the ratification of the treaty. I wanted to restore peace between the warring nations and do what we could to restore industrial peace at home.

I voted to Americanize the treaty. I voted to make it plain that we preserved American sovereignty and independence. I voted to make it plain that we reserved the right to withdraw from the league and to preserve the Monroe doctrine and the control of domestic questions, such as foreign immigration and the like. I voted to make the terms of the treaty certain, because I think uncertainty is the womb of war. I voted to equalize the voting power between the United States and the British Empire. I could not say by my vote that the United States was a sixth-rate power. I could not say by my vote that the British Empire was six times as good or six times as great as the United States of America. Lord Grey and other English statesmen and editors now agree on this point. Should we be less American than the English? Should we be more British than the British? I stand for America first.

ARTICLE 10.

Lord Grey said that the League of Nations was a plunge into the unknown. The London Post says that the league comes not with peace, but with the sword. Should we not take care? I voted for the reservation as to article 10. There is one thing certain—perhaps the only one thing certain—about the League of Nations and that is that article 10 would involve the United States in every war that ever happens upon this planet. I am not willing to bind ourselves in advance to draft our boys and send them over the sea to fight in wars that do not concern either our rights, our interest, or our honor. I am not willing to bind ourselves in advance to draft our boys and send them over the sea to fight anybody's battles but our own. Let me repeat that I would not sacrifice the life of one Oklahoma boy, I would not break the heart of one Oklahoma mother, to decide whether Greece or Serbia should own the Sanjak of Novipazar or to help Japan hold the pilfered Province of Shantung.

AMENDMENTS AND RESERVATIONS.

I proposed one amendment to the league covenant—to give the people of every country the right to an advisory vote on war before their rulers should plunge the world into war. I offered one reservation—to preserve our traditional policy against entangling alliances. I do not agree with an aspiring Oklahoma politician, who declared in a recent speech at Muskogee that in this age of science the words of Washington against entangling alliances are becoming obsolete. Does eternal truth ever become obsolete? Senator OWEN, as you know, proposed two important reservations, and he and I on the last roll call voted for the ratifying resolution with the so-called Lodge reservations. It is unfortunate for the world, the country, and the party that our votes did not then prevail.

These are my views. This is my record. I can not surrender my principles nor stultify my conscience. If I were obliged to choose between private life with conscience and honor and public life with dishonor, I would not hesitate in my choice. I would rather "live in a house by the side of the road and be a friend to man." Whatever happens to me and to my political fortunes in the future, I am anxious that my record should be known and should be judged as it is. I believe that truth will triumph. I have an abiding faith that the sovereign people of Oklahoma are just. I have found them more than just; I have found them generous. I do not now seek or solicit generosity. I ask but justice only. Justice is sovereign of all the virtues. To be just is to be godlike.

I have the honor to subscribe myself,

Your most obedient servant, T. P. GORE.

P. S.—Please accept my thanks for reading this, and write me frankly your conclusions and suggestions.

MRS. THOMAS M'GOVERN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5348) for the relief of Mrs. Thomas McGovern. I wish to say that the bill is on the calendar and will be reached Monday, but I shall not be able to be here, and it is a claim of which I have personal knowledge. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Thomas McGovern, the sum of $5,000 for damages suffered by the death of her husband, Thomas McGovern, who was struck and fatally injured by a Government motor truck which was driven by a regularly enlisted soldier of the United States Army.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will state in explanation that it is a bill which has passed the House of Representatives, and is for the relief of the widow of Thomas McGovern, an Omaha citizen, who was killed on the 26th day of October, 1917, by an automobile driven by a sergeant of Fort Omaha. I happened to be in Omaha at the time and have some personal knowledge of the case.

The testimony showed that the soldier, who was a sergeant, driving the automobile, was on the wrong side of the road, and that he was trying to cut a corner, and ran very near the curb, even on the wrong side of the road, as he turned west to the next street. McGovern himself, as the testimony shows, was guilty of no negligence. He had barely stepped off the curb when in the misty twilight the automobile, without any light, struck him and killed him.

McGovern was a citizen of good repute in Omaha. He had been a member of the city council. His family were left in straitened circumstances. The testimony which is set forth in the House report shows substantially the facts as I have stated them. There is no question about the condition of the family, and no question that the man was driving his machine very carelessly and violating the law, and that the provision for the widow is reasonable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Is there any amendment to the bill or does it carry $5,000?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The bill is reported without amendment just as it came from the House.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not any objection to it.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KETCHIKAN (ALASKA) BONDS FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8953) to authorize the incorporated town of Ketchikan, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction and equipment of schools therein, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3472) for the relief of the owner of a drill boat, known as Drill Boat No. 3, and a dredge known as Dredge No. 9, reported favorably from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SMOOT. If we are going to take up the calendar under Rule VIII, I think we ought to begin where we left off the last time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does that mean an objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I object to taking bills up out of their order. Does the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] intend to move to take up the unfinished business?

Mr. NEW. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

DEPARTMENT OF AIR.

Mr. NEW. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, Senate bill 3348.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3348) to create a department of air, defining the powers and duties of the director thereof, providing for the organization, disposition, and administration of a United States air force, creating the United States air reserve force, and providing for the development of civil and commercial aviation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1, line 8, before the words "per annum" it is proposed to strike out "$12,000" and insert "$8,000," so as to read:

And a director of air, who shall be the head thereof, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive a salary of $8,000 per annum, etc.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fernald	McLean	Robinson
Ball	Gore	Myers	Sheppard
Borah	Gronna	Nelson	Simmons
Brandegee	Harrison	New	Smith, Ga.
Calder	Henderson	Norris	Smith, Md.
Capper	Hitchcock	Nugent	Smoot
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Spencer
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Page	Sutherland
Curtis	King	Phipps	Wadsworth
Dial	Lodge	Pittman	Warren
Dillingham	McKellar	Poindexter	Wolcott

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on account of illness. I wish that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. DIAL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] is unavoidably detained, and I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] on account of illness, and of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], due to illness in his family.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] are absent on official business of the Senate. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have been requested to announce that the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] is detained at home by illness, being confined to his bed.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] are detained from the Senate by illness.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family, and that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is absent on account of illnesss.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. As usual, call the roll the second time.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. JONES of Mexico, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. POMERENE, and Mr. TOWNSEND answered to their names when called.

Mr. HARRIS, Mr. RANSDELL, Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. HALE, Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. STERLING, Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts, Mr. WALSH of Montana, Mr. WILLIAMS, and Mr. BANKHEAD entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I should like to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], is absent on official business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1, line 8, after the words "salary of," it is proposed to strike out "$12,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$8,000."

Mr. SMOOT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the question will have to be put to the Senate. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. In order to make other salaries in the bill conform to the amendment just adopted I move, on page 2, line 12, after the words "salary of," to strike out "$6,000 and to insert "$5,000." That is the provision for the salary of the assistant director of air.

Mr. NEW. That amendment is satisfactory; and so far as I can give assent to it, I accept it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 2, line 15, the salary provided for the assistant and chief clerk is $3,500. So far as I know the highest salary paid by the Government of the United States for a similar position is $3,000 per annum. I therefore move to strike out "$3,500" and to insert "$3,000" as the salary of that official.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. BORAH obtained the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 4, line 22, after the word "graduated," I move to strike out the period, to insert a colon, and to add the proviso which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 4, line 22, after the word "graduated," it is proposed to strike out the period and insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided further, That the personnel and equipment supplied to the Post Office Department shall be under the exclusive control of the Post Office Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, that amendment is satisfactory to the Senator in charge of the bill, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. NEW. The amendment is satisfactory, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that, while we are engaged in creating a department which is to unify the air service, we are now proposing to adopt amendments to disintegrate it?

Mr. McKELLAR. No. This amendment proposes to put the personnel and equipment used by the Post Office Department entirely within the control of that department. That will be true also of the Army and the Navy, as I understand the bill.

The amendment merely proposes to apply the same rule to the Post Office Department that will be applied to the Army and the Navy. It would never do to have an aviator of the Army, while at work, under the control of the department of air. It seems to me this is a very proper provision.

Mr. BORAH. Does it make any distinction as to the Post Office Department? Does it put the Post Office Department in any different position from that of the Army and the Navy?

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, it does not; it puts them on the same plane.

Mr. BORAH. To what extent, then, does the pending bill unify the air service?

Mr. McKELLAR. In the production of aircraft and in the training of the aircraft personnel. When a transfer is made to one of the departments of aircraft and aircraft personnel, such aircraft and aircraft personnel will be wholly under the control of the department to which they are assigned; and that is necessarily so.

Mr. BORAH. And the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee proposes to place the Post Office Department in the same attitude as that of both the Army and the Navy?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; as I understand.

Mr. BORAH. Is that the understanding of the Senator in charge of the bill?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that is a mistake, Mr. President, I should like to hear from the Senator from Indiana on the subject.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is not strictly correct. The bill proposes to give to the director of air the right in case of an emergency to concentrate all of the air forces, including those assigned to the Army, those assigned to the Navy, and those assigned to the Post Office Department, or to any other department to which aircraft may be assigned. The air department is to furnish the personnel and the equipment for the Post Office Department All purchases of equipment will be made by the one head. The Post Office Department will make its requisition for equipment on the department of air just as the Army will and just as the Navy will. Those requisitions will be passed upon by one department, by one head; so that it will be possible to keep track of what is being expended in the several departments for aeronautical equipment. The training of the personnel is to be under one department so that one system may be followed; and all of the personnel will be subject to call by the head of the department of air for use in connection with the military forces in case of an emergency.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But after a requisition has been granted to the Navy Department for personnel and for equipment, and after requisition by the War Department or the Post Office Department for personnel and equipment has been honored, then the command of the men and the conduct of the equipment is under the control of the particular department making the requisition, is it not?

Mr. NEW. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think that was all that the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee proposed.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is all that I said it was.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, unfortunately I have not been able to be present on account of other business of the Senate during the discussion of this bill. I confess that I am in sympathy on general principles with the consolidation of the general air activities of the Government. The Post Office Committee are now considering the question of the continuation of the air mail service. I do not care to express an opinion upon that subject at this time, but I am satisfied, sir, that the operations of the Post Office Department in procuring and in maintaining aerial equipment and in operating that equipment compare very favorably, indeed, with the air activities of other branches of the Government; in fact, if the information which has been submitted to us is correct, I think it would be a most serious mistake, if we are to continue the air service in the Post Office Department, to embarrass it by such methods, at least, as have prevailed in the War Department and the Navy Department in reference to the construction and operation of aircraft.

If I understand the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, it is exactly what the Senator from Oregon has stated. If it contains anything else, then I do not understand it. It occurs to me, however, that if the Government is to maintain the air service in the Post Office Department it would be a distinct disadvantage, not only to that department but to the Government, to have the personnel and the equipment which has been assigned to the department controlled by any other department or bureau; it would necessarily defeat the very purposes for which the air mail service was established in the Post Office Department and, I think, would contribute largely to the expense of the service.

As Senators know, the carrying of mail by airplane is now in an experimental stage, and it is for the committee and the Senate later to determine whether or not we shall continue that experiment. I think I am warranted in stating, however, that the activities of the Post Office Department, everything considered, in the production and maintenance of aircraft show to great advantage over similar activities on the part of other departments. Therefore I should dislike very much if anything should be done by the Senate at this time, before the question is determined as to whether we are going to continue that service, which will embarrass a thorough and complete settlement of that question.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. KING. Would the Senator be willing to advise the Senate as to the sources from which the Post Office Department obtains its aircraft and also why he avers with so much positiveness—and I am not questioning the Senator's statement at all—that the activities of the Post Office Department in the handling of aircraft, in the acquisition of them, and so on, have been so far superior to the activities of other departments of the Government that have been required to acquire and utilize aircraft?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Perhaps I ought to repeat what I said before, that we are not through with this question. I am speaking now, perhaps, from partial information, and yet I have some very strong convictions upon the subject.

In answer to the Senator from Utah, I will state that the Post Office Department took over under authority of Congress certain aircraft, notably some war planes that had been used during the war, and attempted to use them. It was found necessary to reconstruct those planes. It would seem to me, from what I know now, that some of those points which were discovered by the department should have been discovered earlier in the war. The planes were strengthened at much less cost than it would take to buy new ones. It has also been found that they required even larger planes than any of those which were furnished during the war.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I would like to complete my statement.

Mr. NEW. Pardon me; I do not want to interrupt the Senator. I was simply going to suggest that I have here a statement of everything that the department has, which I will put at the Senator's disposal if it will be of assistance.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am very familiar with that, but I do not care to go into it just at this time. I want briefly to give my reasons for the statement which I made.

It was found that machines of larger capacity than those already in the War Department were necessary, stronger machines, machines capable of longer flights, and therefore men now in the service of the Government—engineers, constructing engineers, those connected with aircraft construction and operation in the War and Navy Departments—were called upon for their expert opinion. Plans were devised and new machines were contracted for, which are not yet in operation. But, without going into detail, I desire to state that the figures which were presented to us as the probable ones which would be submitted for the construction of these planes were below what the cost had been to the Government even for the smaller planes; and therefore, knowing what success has been achieved with the reconstructed war planes, I feel safe in stating that economies have been employed and business experience has been exerted in the construction and operation of these planes and their reconstruction which induced me to say that they have proceeded better, more economically, and more expeditiously to get results than has been done in the past in the Army and Navy service.

Does the Senator from Indiana wish to interrupt me now?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I simply thought it might be of some interest to the Senator in making his point there if I could place at his disposal some data which I had in my hands. I merely sought to do that when I interrupted him.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I shall be very glad to have the Senator present it. When the Post Office appropriation bill comes before the Senate I propose to go into this matter in detail; that is, if the committee decides to continue this experiment of carrying the mails by aircraft. I have simply made this statement at this time because, as I said, I have not been able to follow this bill. I have not known just exactly what has been accomplished up to date, but I did not wish anything done that would embarrass the committee or the department in dealing with this question later, because if it is true that we are going to continue this air service in the Post Office Department, then I submit without any hesitation that the authority to operate the personnel and the aircraft should be left to that department.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, as I understand, the Senator is in favor of the amendment which I have offered, which will leave to the Post Office Department the personnel and the material that have been assigned to that department?

Mr. TOWNSEND. With that understanding of it, I am certainly in favor of it.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Michigan before he takes his seat that on yesterday morning I had a conference with Dr. Bassler, who is the director of the air service of the Post Office Department. I went over this whole matter with him, and he said that with this amendment this bill would be of very great benefit to the Postal Service, and that it was entirely satisfactory to him. I also afterwards talked with Gen. Mitchell, of the Air Service, and explained this matter to him. He said that it was all right from the other standpoint, too; and I have therefore accepted this amendment. I was also informed that the Postmaster General had been informed of this proposed change, and that it met with his approval, also.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I dislike to oppose a measure in which Senators are interested as the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] seems interested in this bill, but I am compelled to do so.

In the first place, the bill creates a new department. We all know what that means in the way of governmental expenditures. It means opening up the Treasury to the establishment of a great and powerful bureau. The fact that we have decreased the salary of the head of the department from $12,000 to $8,000 is a mere trifle. It may remain that way for 30 days, and it may be changed when the appropriation bill comes in. At least, it will likely be changed by next year. Just as soon as a bureau is created, a competition begins between that bureau and all other bureaus as to how nearly they can equal each other in salaries and in expenditures.

A few days ago I read a statement by a distinguished financier of Europe who, apparently after considerable reflection, stated that in his opinion we were headed for world bankruptcy. If that catastrophe should come about, it will be, in a large measure, by reason of the fact that there never has been such extravagance in the expenditure of public money in the history of the world as has characterized that history in the last 8 or 10 years.

Unfortunately it did not begin with the war. It was a disease which had fastened itself upon governments prior to the beginning of the war. The war accentuated it, but it was not wholly responsible for it. If the war had been wholly responsible for it we could have entertained the hope that when the war was over a real reform along lines of economy in public expenditure would have taken place; but since the war closed the manifestations of extravagance in this country are just as apparent and just as great as they were during the war.

There are before the Senate now, with reference to war matters alone, increases of expenditure amounting to a billion and a half dollars a year. We have a bill upon the calendar, or introduced, which, it is estimated, will take from seven hundred million to a billion dollars to take care of universal military training. We have pending a bill which will place on the Treasury an increased burden of $59,000,000 for increased pay. We are now creating a large bureau, and the amount which this bureau will call for no man assumes to suggest or predict. We start out with an estimate of something like $98,000,000, but it is understood that that is simply the beginning, and how far it will go or to what extent it will carry us even the authors of the bill do not pretend to say.

Everybody promised that when the war was over we would adopt a policy of curtailing public expenditures, and the party of which I am a humble member made a special promise of that in the last campaign. It was one of the things upon which the election was fought. Now, I say to my friends upon this side of the Chamber that there is not the slightest evidence in this Congress that we propose to carry out that program. We have created a platform committee of 157 varieties. [Laughter.] This Congress will make the platform. This record here, as our beginning for the four years' lease of power which we are going to ask for, will be the platform, and the gifted gentlemen who are to give us the platform will not be able to convince the people against the record which will be made here. If we do not keep the promise made last fall the literary production of this prodigious committee on platform will not secure votes.

Mr. President, we ought in good faith upon both sides of the Chamber to begin to carry out the promise which we made to the people that when the war was over there should be curtailing and cutting to the bone in all these expenditures. There is nothing so discouraging and so deadening to personal initiative in the industrial world to-day as this tremendous extravagance upon the part of the Government. Men are discouraged from going into business and building up industries because they see ahead of them an unlimited grip of the Government upon whatever they may earn or whatever profits they may have at the end of their year's business.

Mr. President, the bill may have some merit along the line of unifying the aircraft service. I do not pretend to go into that. But that is a matter which can very well wait. There is no present necessity for it. We can postpone these expenditures until we know more as to the ability of the American taxpayers to take care of the budget which we must necessarily impose upon them for the next year.

I am not only opposed to the bill, Mr. President, but I am utterly opposed to the estimates which have been made by the departments for this aircraft service. It is said that the estimates amount to $160,000,000. There is no occasion for appropriating $160,000,000 for that service at this particular juncture. I therefore must oppose the measure, for the reason that it is subtly opening the door of the Treasury to the feeding of another great department.

We all know what it means to create a department here. We know that the first estimate amounts to nothing as compared to the expenditures which must inevitably follow. As the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] stated yesterday, just as soon as this department is created, it must have a home; you must find a public building and either buy it or rent it, or you must build them a home. There is no estimate here that I have seen covering any of these things which must necessarily follow the creation of this department.

In addition to that, as I read the bill, it has all the provisions which enable a department to gather to its service an infinite number of employees, an infinite number of parties who will be upon the pay roll and who will have to be taken care of when the appropriation bills come along. Perhaps this year we may hold it down to something like the estimates which have been made; but I have been here 12 years, and I have observed the creation of departments upon pittance estimates, and I have seen them leap from the original estimate to ten times the amount, and in one instance to fifteen times the amount within five years of the estimate which was made as to what would be necessary to sustain it from year to year.

We understand that this is to be a great department. We just escaped from making it an executive department, with a Member of the Cabinet at the head of it. I do not see any reason why we should not have done so. Undoubtedly, in the view of the authors of the bill, nothing less than that dignity is commensurate with the service which is expected to be performed, and if that service is to be performed along lines suggested by the able Senators, we know that we are here laying the foundation for the creation of a stupendous department which will call for all kinds of appropriations from the Treasury. I must oppose the bill, as I shall oppose every dollar of appropriation that is not indispensable. Our people have stood up under the terrific burden imposed on them in the way of taxes. It approaches a crime to add one unnecessary dollar.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am glad to hear the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] take the position he does against this bill. It does, as he said, possess the merit of being an attempt to unify the air service; but, in my opinion, under the bill it would be done in a reckless way, which not only would be bound to create a very large and expensive department of the Government, but which would be bound also to create a great deal of confusion.

It is proposed to make this department of the air practically a jack-of-all-trades. It is to do some of the military work connected with the War Department; it is to do some of the work connected with the Navy, some of the work connected with the Forest Service, and to do some of the work connected with mail routes. It is to educate aviators, grant licenses, provide for commercial aeronautics in the country, provide landing places for commercial routes and commercial airplanes. It is not limited, as in my opinion it should be, to the purposes of unifying the work connected with the air service. If it were made simply a manufacturing department, for the purpose of manufacturing airplanes, which could be levied upon by the War Department, or by the Navy Department, or by the Post Office Department, or by any other department having use for airplanes, it could serve a useful purpose, because it is in the manufacture that unification is needed. But when you contemplate the probabilities which would grow out of the bill, you can foresee that brigadier generals, colonels, majors, and other officers of the Army will be under the control of this department. The War Department also will have its aviation officers to handle its artillery; the Navy Department will have its aviation officers. So we will have three departments of the Government, instead of two departments, as we have now, managing and directing aerial defense—the military, the Navy, and this department of the air.

It is provided in the bill, as it must necessarily be provided, that the War Department may be assigned some of these officers under the air service by the grace of the director of air; but I see nothing but confusion which will grow out of the attempt to have three departments connected with war—the Navy, the Army, and this air service.

In my opinion the bill should be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, with the instruction to make such a draft of the measure as will, without interfering with the present War Department or the Navy Department or the Post Office Department, create a bureau which all three or all four of the departments of the Government that require airplanes can use.

It seems to me that this is an effort which is entirely too ambitious for a first effort, and that it is likely to prove entirely too extravagant. As the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] indicates, it is going to lead to the expenditure of millions of dollars at the present time by the Government, and aviation is too little known and too little understood to justify the paternal attention of the Government. It is not necessary in the United States. We do not at this time, and we will not in the near future, in all probability, need this as a means of defense. Certainly there is no urgency about it. There is no reason at the present time, when the country is groaning under taxes, for the Government to enter into such an extravagance.

If it were urgent, of course, I would favor the matter, even though it seems extravagant.

I indorse what the Senator from Idaho said. The measure at this time is one that does not commend itself to me, and I believe it does not commend itself to the American people. Even if its purpose were indorsed, I think the drafting of the bill is very unfortunate, bringing into conflict, as it does, as is inevitable, the Navy Department, the War Department, and the Post Office Department, at least. So I hope the Senate will defeat the bill, and that then the Senator who has shown so much zeal and commendable enterprise in working on it will redraft it so as to confine it to the legitimate purposes of unifying the manufacture of airplanes.

I see no reason why the War Department will not be able to train its own aviators or why the Navy Department will not be able to train its own aviators. But neither of those departments, perhaps, can manufacture airplanes so well as a separate department of the Government may be able to manufacture them.

I am not averse to encouraging the development of aviation, but I do not think that the American people want the Government to go into the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars for the purpose of promoting that branch of industry at the present time.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska described very accurately in his preliminary remarks what this bill is not—not what it is and what it provides for. He said, as I understood him, that it provides for the handling and management and for interference with the functions of a half a dozen or more different departments. It does not do anything of the kind. It provides for intelligent direction of one particular thing, and that is the navigation of the air, the training and the development of men to the point where they can do that successfully and safely. That is what this bill provides.

Flying is flying, whether it is done over water or over land. It is perfectly ridiculous, Mr. President, to say that nobody but a graduate of the Naval Academy at Annapolis can fly a naval machine or perform the duties of a naval aviator. It is a matter of fact that of the requisitions made by the Navy Department for new machines, $1,600,000 is for machines of the naval type and $16,000,000 for machines of the land type, showing that the very equipment they want is substantially what the Army and what these other services need.

Of course, it is the purpose of the Air Service to train flyers to navigate their airships at sea, to land on naval airdromes, to do the spotting and marking that is demanded of naval flyers, and it is perfectly absurd to say that that can not be done by the method that is to be taught in the scientific education of these men under the direction of the air department or that it can only be done at one place. That is not the case at all.

Mr. President, just a word of reply to the argument made by the Senator from Idaho. He spoke of the expense. Every consideration that applies to the consolidation of purchases among departments of a business applies to this particular case. The designs and purchases for the War Department are now made by one set of men, those for the Navy by another set of men, and those for the Post Office Department by still another, and no two committees of Congress, for instance, know what they are asking for; no two operating forces of the Army, Navy, or any other department know what the other is asking for, and under the present organization of those establishments they never will. You may talk about cooperation and coordination all you please, but it never has been successfully established among those departments, and it never will be.

Now, I want to say just one other thing: Take the members of the General Board, which has been created by the Army for the direction and coordination of this science as between the Army and the Navy. I have the very highest respect for the members who compose that board. Take Gen. Haan, for instance. He is a native of my State. He is a magnificent soldier, led the Thirty-second Division on the other side with most distinguished gallantry, and my State is proud of him, the country is proud of him, and I am proud of him. I am proud to have him as a personal friend and to pay him every tribute as a soldier that I possibly can.

I would add just a word about one other, Gen. Menoher, who is the head of the department of air. I have known Gen. Menoher for 22 years, since I had the very distinguished honor of serving in a modest capacity in the military service with him. There has been a personal friendship between us from that day to this. Gen. Menoher led a division on the other side composed in part at least of Indiana troops. He was as distinguished and entitled to just as much honor and credit as Gen. Haan. But, Mr. President, if I were going to start a naval expedition to-day I would not put in charge of it either one of those fine soldiers. I would select some one from the Navy; I would select some one who had sailed a ship and who knew something about that form of navigation.

That is exactly what ought to be done in this case. Navigation of the air is an absolutely separate and distinct science, just as navigation of the sea is different from navigation by railroad across the country. It is an entirely different thing. It does not follow that the man who is a good soldier or the man who is a good naval commander or naval constructor is at the same time a good aircraft commander or a good aircraft constructor. It is an entirely different line of business.

What the future of aeronautics, let us say military aeronautics, is to be is problematical, of course, and opinions differ. One great trouble in this country is that both the Army and the Navy insist and persist in regarding it as an auxiliary branch of the Army and Navy, and concede to it no further possibility than that. I do not agree with that at all. I am not going to make extravagant predictions as to what is going to happen in the field of aeronautics, but great things have already happened, and in my deliberate judgment far greater things are going to happen in the near future.

Talking of extravagant predictions, Lord Fisher, late commander of the British Navy, has said that aerial warfare would within a short time drive the navy from the seas, that it would make battleships obsolete. I do not know that it ever will. It may be that Lord Fisher is extravagant in his prediction, but other men scarcely less prominent, not only less prominent but at least equally so, men like Foch, and Ludendorff of the German forces, have predicted quite as great a future for military aviation as has Lord Fisher.

But one purpose of the bill is to concentrate the purchasing agency for things which the Government is just as bound to have as it is bound to have cannon and arms of any other kind. If we are going to divide the purchasing power among the War Department and Navy Department and the Post Office Department, and have them bidding against each other as the departments of the Government did bid against each other during the war which has just closed, it is going to have just the opposite effect to that described by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and is going to result in extravagance and very great expense to the Government. Every reason that applies to concentration of purchasing power in one hand, whether in private business or in public business, applies to the particular subject that is dealt with in the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I differ from some of my colleagues on this side of the Chamber and express the hope that the bill may pass. I think that since I have been in the Senate the airplane practically has been developed. I remember when I first came here many of us used to go across the river to Fort Myer to see one of the Wright planes essay flights, and if there was the slightest inclement weather or if it was at all foggy they were always afraid to go up, and as often as we went over to see the flights we invariably returned without having our curiosity gratified. So all the accomplishments in the field of aeronautics have been in the last 10 years. It is a progressive proposition. To drop it now or to have the aircraft production drift along in the channels in which it is now drifting simply means that the moneys which we have expended have been expended for naught.

If there was one thing during the war that floundered, and if there was one thing which was needed by the American Army and which it did not get, it was airplanes in sufficient quantities to be available for the American Expeditionary Force and our allies. Glancing at Gen. Pershing's report, I find that the first squadron of airplanes that went over the German lines was in August, 1918, and that consisted of 18 planes. Notwithstanding the fact that it was repeatedly stated in authoritative quarters that we had been sending airplanes over by the thousand, when the armistice was signed we had practically about 1,300 planes over there, and what were they?

There is evidence before some of the committees now that the planes which were constructed and sent over and which constituted a part of the reserve force of the American Expeditionary Force were burned because they were obsolete. They become obsolete in a very few months, or a very few years, and now, at a time when the airplane is susceptible of its highest development and susceptible of being put to the highest commercial and military and naval use, we are about to consign the whole work to oblivion.

The first appropriation which was made for airplane production was $640,000,000. That appropriation continued to be increased until over a billion dollars had been expended for airplane production, with the result that, according to Gen. Pershing's report—and I am referring to it after a very hasty reading of it—the American Expeditionary Force at the time the armistice was signed was practically dependent upon the British and the French. The amount of money that the Congress of the United States had appropriated for airplane production had been expended to no purpose, except it might be said it was to some purpose to have expended that vast sum in order to develop the airplane and to improve it and to provide for its production for commercial use.

As the war progressed the Members of the Senate will remember that there was no central and responsible agency upon whom devolved the duty of aircraft production. The Navy was pursuing its own way in production, the Army was pursuing its own way, the Signal Corps was pursuing its course, with the result that after having floundered until the war was nearly over, for the first time we created an agency, with John D. Ryan at the head of it, for the purpose of centralizing authority and responsibility, and not until after he was appointed and took the place of what would be director of aeronautics as provided for in the pending bill was there such a centralization of effort that they began to produce even the material out of which the airplanes were constructed. If the war had lasted a little while longer, from what I know about the situation, I am satisfied that there would have been some effective effort made toward aircraft production.

I differ from my distinguished friend the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and my distinguished friend the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], too, in saying that this measure does not accomplish a unification of the work. Section 9 of the bill provides that the activities of the aviation section of the War Department and the Navy Department and the Signal Corps, and of all those different bureaus which are mentioned specifically in the section, shall come under the department now sought to be created by the bill. In other words, it centralizes effort, it centralizes responsibility, it places one man at the head of the whole production, and places the whole training and the whole power of military aeronautics in charge of one man. It does not undertake to deprive the Army of the power of control of personnel when once assigned to the Army on their requisition, it does not undertake to control the personnel of the Navy when once it has been requisitioned and assigned to the Navy, nor does it undertake to control the personnel of the Post Office Department, and it ought not to undertake to control that; but it is the duty of this division to produce and encourage the production of aircraft and the training of men for any branch of the service.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I sympathize with what the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] says as to the desirability of having a single production division for all departments of the Government, but the Senator in reading the bill must see that it goes very much further than that. It provides, for instance, that the new department shall have four brigadier generals, one of whom shall be designated as chief of air service and shall have the rank of major general. It provides that the department shall take over various bureaus—of the War, Navy, Treasury, and Post Office Departments, and all that pertains to the same, known or heretofore known as the aviation section of the Signal Corps, the Division of Military Aeronautics, the Bureau of Aircraft Production, the Air Service of the Army—

the Naval Flying Corps, the Marine Corps Flying Corps.

Is it not a fact that all those provisions indicate that this department is to be an operative department as well as a manufacturing department; that it is to have military officers and enlisted men actually engaged in the work of flying; that they are to be taken away from the Army and the Navy and operated by this third department? It is that feature to which I object. If the bill could be so drawn as to centralize the great work of producing aircraft to be distributed among the various departments as they are required, that would be a different thing; but it seems to me we are creating a new executive department to operate flying machines.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will read the bill in all its parts, he will find that after these men are trained the air department will have nothing to do with them; that they are taken in charge by the Navy, by the Army, and by the other branches of the service. Why should it not be so? I call the Senator's attention to this condition: At the outset of the recent war we sent to France to be trained as aviators over 2,200 young men who were selected from the best men in the United States, from the colleges of the United States. What happened? They went over there and they stayed there, practically, until the armistice was signed, and nobody trained them, with the result that there was an absolute disheartening of the young men. Other young men, trained here, went over from America after these young fellows had been there for over a year and outranked the ones who had first gone over and who expected to become "aces" of the American Army. Why should not some central body have charge of these men and train them? Why should the Signal Corps undertake to train them? Why should the Navy undertake to train them? Why should any of the departments undertake to train them on different planes and under different rules and regulations, whereas if this proposed department is created they will train the men uniformly? They will have the same regulations and will assign them to the Navy and to the Army and will standardize production, so that the young man trained for the Army is fit to be utilized for the Navy, except that one operates a hydroplane and the other does not.

Mr. President, the purpose of this proposed legislation is to centralize the whole industry of airplane production; to centralize the training of the men and then to assign them to the particular branches of the service where they may happen to be needed. Of course it would be improper for the aircraft department to control the Post Office employees after they had once been detailed for duty with the Post Office Department, but they utilize the machinery and the planes which have been produced under the auspices of the proposed department of air. If the new department is properly managed—and I assume that it will be, or at least it ought to be—it will economize rather than increase the expenditure, because, as it is now, nearly every department has its aircraft branch. Under the pending bill all of the different air services will be taken under the central air department, and I am sure it will result in economy rather than in increased expenditure. So I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the language on page 21 of the bill, which I think is subject to correction and improvement. Section 17 of the bill provides for the enlisted strength of the air force, and the language reads:

And shall consist of master aviation mechanics, first sergeants, sergeants (first class), sergeants, chauffeurs (first class), chauffeurs, corporals, cooks, privates (first class), and privates, the number in each grade being fixed from time to time by the President.

I think, Mr. President, it would be wise to insert a period after the word "privates" in line 1, on page 21, and to strike out the remainder of the sentence, for if the number of each grade of all these noncommissioned grades is to be fixed from time to time by the President, it would be entirely possible for the department, which, of course, will influence the President to a greater or less degree, to make the enlisted personnel top-heavy in its higher grades and thus greatly increase the expenditure, whereas if a period be inserted after the word "privates" in line 1, page 21, and the remainder of the sentence is stricken out, and there is a correction of the following sentence, which prescribes the percentage of the total enlisted personnel to be appointed in the different grades, we shall have the number absolutely limited.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Section 17 indicates that the proposed new department is to have an armed force of 40,000 men, consisting of privates, sergeants, other noncommissioned officers, and officers clear up to the rank of brigadier general, does it not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does not that indicate that we are to have a third department of war? We have now a Navy Department and a War Department, and does not this create a third fighting department?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does; and if we do not do it this year we will do it next year; and if we do not do it next year we will do it the year after. It is inevitable.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. How is it going to be possible to avoid a great increase in our expenditures by such a proceeding as this?

Mr. WADSWORTH. These men are to be taken from the other departments.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In part they are, but not altogether; but if the Senator says they are to be taken from the other departments, that will simply create confusion, as it seems to me.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am perfectly willing to discuss that with the Senator, but would he mind if I first offered the amendment which I was discussing?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is already a pending amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was not aware of that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This is one of the things of which I complain in the pending bill. If the bill were confined to the important work of unification, of providing an agency for the manufacture of airplanes to be used by the other departments of the Government, it would have my support, but it does not do that. It creates practically a third department of war to be added to the Navy Department and our present War Department. The third department is to be a great manufacturing institution. It is to have the supervision of commercial aviation; it is "to foster, develop, and promote all matters pertaining to aeronautics, including the collection and dissemination of information relating thereto"; it is to "be charged with the purchase, manufacture, maintenance, and production of all aircraft for the United States"; it is to "perform all duties heretofore assigned to the War, Post Office, Navy, and Treasury Departments, or any other department of the Government, except as may be hereinafter provided, in times of peace and war, in so far as they relate to aviation," including "the supply of personnel and equipment for aerial mail routes," and so on. It is charged with "the issuance of licenses for airships, airplanes, hydroairplanes, seaplanes, balloons, dirigibles, and any and all aircraft." It is to promulgate "rules and regulations governing international, interstate, and intrastate flying." It is to have "the supervision and establishment of aerial landing fields, including the supervision of those used for private or commercial purposes." In short, Mr. President, it seems to me, in addition to being a third war department with an army of 40,000 men, it is to be a sort of a jack-of-all-trades and have functions to perform which are very vague and general.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is mistaken. It is not to be a jack-of-all-trades; it is to be devoted solely to the navigation of the air—just one trade.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is devoted solely to the navigation of air, but we also have the War Department navigating the air; we also have the Navy Department navigating the air; we have the Post Office Department navigating the air; and we have other activities of the Government navigating the air.

It seems to me that if this is to be a tie between all of the other departments, if it is to be the one thing that will bring them all into cooperation with each other, and if it is to reduce the expenditures and extravagance of the other departments, it should be confined to the manufacture of aircraft and not to the operation of an army. We already have a War Department; we have a Navy Department; both of those departments have to have aviators. Why should the proposed new department not confine itself to the manufacture of aircraft to be used by the departments that are to do the fighting and ought to do it? Why should we create a third fighting department, involving all of the expense and all of the complications and all of the competition that will inevitably develop between the two? The artillery of the Army has got to be directed by aviators; those aviators must always be in the employ of the Army and must be under the control of the Army; but here we are creating a third department which is to step in and divide with the other two the control of the fighting men of the country. I think that it is an unwise and extravagant step to take.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I will endeavor to answer the question of the Senator from Nebraska. From the military standpoint alone, the purpose of the bill is expressed in section 14, which provides:

That the air force shall be so trained as to comprise a combatant force of the United States with a view to operating either with the armed land or sea forces of the United States, or with both combined, or independently of either, as the tactical or strategical necessity may determine.

That is the military policy contained in this bill expressed as briefly as possible. There are some provisos following which authorize the President temporarily to attach units of the combatant air force to the Army, and while so attached they are under the command of the general of the Army; the President may attach units temporarily, or for as long a period as he sees fit, to the Navy, and while they are attached to the Navy they are under the command of the admiral of the Navy.

The Senator from Nebraska asks why it is necessary; why must we do it? The only reply I can give, Mr. President, is that we can not help ourselves; we have got to do it. If we do not do it to-day, we will do it to-morrow; if we do not do it two years from now, we will do it five years from now; and, judging from our experience and the history of our past, we probably will be the last people on earth to wake up to the truth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Who determines the tactical and strategical necessity for the use of the air force?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The President, just as he does to-day when he compels coordination between the Army and the Navy; he is the commander in chief. There have been innumerable instances in our military history where portions of the Navy have been placed temporarily under the command of an Army officer because the operations being attempted, while principally land operations, required a measure of naval assistance. There have been occasions when portions of the Army have been under the command of an admiral of the Navy because the operations, while primarily naval, required some land assistance.

We have already found in this war, and every other nation that engaged in it upon a large scale has found, that from time to time the air service, no matter how it is organized or by whom it is commanded, has to be assigned to the naval forces to help them perform a special function, or it has to be assigned to the land forces to help them perform a special function. Our allies were quick to see that after two or three years' experience. It is inevitable with the development of fighting in the air. The British finally organized an independent air force—just what is contemplated under this bill. How did they manage it? They grouped the major portion of their aviation service, both naval and military, in the independent air force. If they received an intimation that London was to be raided by bombing machines from Germany they threw that independent air force into the defense of the British coast and of London. If Marshal Haig needed it for special aggressive operations upon the British front, a great mass of the independent air force was assigned to Marshal Haig, which could be sent anywhere at any time at any place, all trained to act and operate together. We have nothing of the sort, but we have got to have it some day.

Senators may talk about economy; they may talk about waiting a while; but that kind of talk has gone on in this country for years and years and it has cost us in the last analysis $26,000,000,000 of national debt and thousands of wasted lives in connection with this very last war. There is no economy in it. We do not need a vast force either on land or sea or in the air, but we do need a properly organized military system.

As the Senator from Indiana has said, no man can prophesy accurately what the future of the air service will be. He who would have said six or seven years ago that in 1918 a fleet of 400 airplanes would have flown over the French lines and attacked the German's rear areas would have been called a wild dreamer, but it happened; and that, Mr. President, was the result merely of four years' development during a period of war. Is the man to-day to be charged with being a dreamer who will say that 10 years from now instead of seeing fleets of 400 machines, you will see 4,000, not only operating over the heads of troops but perhaps operating a thousand miles away from the base of the troops? Can the army commander on the ground command the machines a thousand or fifteen hundred miles away?

We do not ask in this bill for thousands and thousands of machines; we do not ask in this bill for a top-heavy air personnel; but we do ask the Congress and the people of the United States to realize that during the last few years man has learned to transport himself in a new element, utterly different from transportation on land, utterly different from transportation by water. A sailor can not fly. A soldier can not fly. Only a flyer, trained as such, will fly.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] asks why these men should be trained in a central department. Why not? Why have four or five departments all doing the same thing when by combining them you can save the overhead? Go over here to Bolling Field. There we have a flying field right in the District. What is the situation there? It is both an Army flying field and a Navy flying field, with two overheads. What is the necessity of that? Why not do the same work with one overhead and save some money?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Why not, by that same argument, create a new artillery department, so that this department might make the great guns and train the gunners and assign such as are necessary to the Navy and such as are necessary to the Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, it is a question of the difference of transportation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It seems to me it is a question of multiplying departments. To my mind, the only argument of any force that has been made here is the one that there ought to be a single source of supply of airplanes. I am in accord with the Senator from New York and the Senator from Indiana on that proposition; but when it comes to creating a third fighting department, with a force of 40,000 men, it seems to me the Senator's own argument answers itself. He has said that the President possesses the power, and has exercised it, to have portions of the Army sometimes under the control of the Navy and portions of the Navy sometimes under the control of the Army, and that can be done with the aviation services of both as well in the future as it has been done with regard to other services. Why create a third fighting department, when all you need is a manufacturing department?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I endeavored to say why I thought it should be done, and endeavored to say why I am just as certain that it will be eventually done as I am that I am standing on this floor.

The Senator has mentioned artillery, and said, "Why not divide up the artillery into different branches?" The simple reason is that artillery is transported on land, and the Army takes care of the land artillery; artillery is also transported on the water, and the Navy takes care of the water-borne artillery. The artillery of the air, or whatever the weapons used in the air may be, is to be transported in the air, and you have got to have navigators of the air in order to handle it. When man has now gone forth to conquer a new element, to live and operate in a new dimension, you can not expect the old elements to absorb it.

People may say that I am dreaming about this thing; but I am just as confident as I can be that whatever emergencies we shall meet in the future will be characterized in their first or second or third day by some great air battle, and it may be a thousand or two thousand miles off our coast; and a combatant force trained for that purpose will eventually become a part of the national defense of this country.

The Senate and the Congress and the people may not be ready for it now; they may not be ready for it to-morrow; but it is inevitable, just as it was inevitable to organize a separate Navy Department following the old department of the Government which had both the War and the Navy Departments together. The elements are so entirely different, the science and the art of flying differ so tremendously from walking on land or sailing on sea, that events themselves, and the development of the science to a still further degree, will compel us to organize a combatant force to operate and navigate in the air.

As to the number of men provided for in this bill, I believe it is quite immaterial. The principle of the thing is the thing that is important. Whether the 40,000 are too many or too few, I am not prepared to say. I have not given the study to it that the Senator from Indiana has. Whether 4,000 officers are too many or too few, I am not prepared to say; but the assertions that this is going to result in extravagance have somewhat astounded me, for some of the Senators who have made that assertion must realize the extravagance that is going on at this very hour, due almost entirely to this duplication of effort. The young men who train to be flyers in the Navy take their fundamental training just as the young men who take their training for the Army take it. Why have two overheads? Why not have one department do the training and save a number of officers and assistants and clerical help? Why have two flying fields, within 10 miles of each other, doing the same thing when one field could do it just as well as the two together?

This whole art and this whole operation must eventually be all hooked up in one great system. The bill indicates that eventually we will have flying landing stations in different parts of the country. Already some of the municipalities of the United States are writing to Washington and asking their advice as to how to locate landing fields upon their outskirts. They can not find anybody in the Government who knows anything about it. They do not know whether or not their towns are properly located in that respect. They are waiting for some agency to chart the air. The air is going to be charted for purposes of navigation just as carefully and just as scientifically as the sea is charted; and as it is charted, and as the mysteries and secrets of the currents of the air and of altitude and temperature are one by one mastered, navigation in the air will become as safe as navigation on the sea. It is inevitable that some department of the Government will take general charge and supervision of that work. It can not be avoided.

In addition to that, a great body of law must eventually be built up governing and regulating the navigation of the air; and, as the Vice President indicated yesterday when he handed down and had printed in the RECORD a letter from a distinguished lawyer, a great body of law must be built up to decide about jurisdictional questions in the air.

What are to be the rights of a man flying over another man's land? What are to be the rights of the man who owns the land, as contrasted with the rights of the men or the machines flying over it? A great body of law will have to be built up.

We might just as well open our eyes and see this thing. It is coming. We can sit here and talk economy, but we will save money if we will see it first. We are bound to see it eventually; and the trouble with us has been, through all our history, that we have seen these things officially last, and then have paid war-time prices for everything we have gotten. We wait until the emergency overtakes us; we wait until everybody else is ahead, confident that we will never have to do anything; and then, against the concept and against the prophecies of nearly all of us, some emergency does overtake us and we find ourselves with nothing, and then we pay out $1,000,000,000 for airplanes in 18 months and do not get any planes that are safe to fly in, and our own sons die by the hundreds as the result of it. That is not economy. There is nothing economical about it.

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, this bill seems to frighten a good many people, in that it is presumptuous enough to suggest that there shall be a new department in this Government, having general charge of this new and wonderful art. I can not see that it should frighten anybody. I know that the Government's money is being wasted to-day. In the Military Affairs Committee we encounter it all the time. The testimony before us, especially with respect to aviation, fairly bristles with examples of the waste of the public money in this matter of aviation; and you will never spend the taxpayer's dollar and get a dollar's worth of service in return until you put the activities of the Government in the matter of a thing of this kind under a single, businesslike control. You can not have four or five small or large governmental bodies or agencies all trying to do the same thing in the same field, with quadrupled overhead expenses, and expect the taxpayers' money to be saved.

A good deal has been said here about the estimate which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] mentioned in connection with this bill. There are no estimates accompanying this bill. That ought to be understood. The estimate to which the Senator referred was the aggregate estimate of the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Post Office Department, setting forth the amount of money that they wanted appropriated for their respective uses for aviation development in the next ensuing fiscal year. The aggregate was something like $160,000,000. A careful investigation shows that the same work could be done for $98,000,000 if it were done under a single head. This bill proposes to have that kind of work done under a single head, and in that respect it is in the interest of the taxpayer.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

Mr. KING. If this bill should be passed, can the Senator assure the Senate that some of the items embraced within the aggregate of $168,000,000 will be eliminated? As I understand, even if this bill were to pass, a large part of the $168,000,000 would still be expended by the War Department and a large part by the Navy Department; so that whereas all of the $168,000,000 might not be expended, a large part of it would be, and in addition the $98,000,000 which this bill provides for would be expended.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This bill does not provide for $98,000,000. It does not provide for a cent.

Mr. KING. Of course, the personnel of 4,000 officers and 40,000 men, and the machinery which this bill creates, of necessity would call for a very large appropriation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KING. I have been unable to see just exactly how the passage of this bill is going to eliminate all of the expenditures that are set forth in that detailed statement, the aggregate of which is $168,000,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Senator ought to remember, of course, that the commissioned and enlisted personnel for the combatant force provided in this bill is to be almost entirely taken away from the Army and the Navy as they exist to-day. It will reduce the Army and the Navy personnel by almost that amount.

Mr. KING. Can the Senator assure us that that will be done? My fear is that if we create this organization, no matter what name we give it, there will still be functioning in the War Department and in the Navy Department bureaus and divisions and agencies and instrumentalities calling for approximately the same number of officers and men that are now found in those departments, so that you are increasing the number of officials, you are creating a new department, and you are not cutting down materially the employees and the officers and the personnel now found in the military and in the naval departments of the Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have already expressed my sentiments on that point, and I do not think I would be justified in keeping the Senate in further discussion of it.

Merely suffice it to say that I and the other members of the Committee on Military Affairs have become so discouraged in the matter of governmental extravagances connected with the Army that we have been desperately trying to find some way of putting it on a business basis. Neither the Senate nor the public, I believe, comprehends the cost of the establishment, as run to-day, per soldier. It costs $1,800 a year to support a regular soldier in the Army. The Army can never be big enough to provide for the national defense on any such basis of cost as that.

Some of that great cost is due to this scattering of effort, this duplication of effort, and the employment of more men on a given job than are necessary or than would be necessary under a businesslike administration.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] a few moments ago said something about the estimates, and he undoubtedly referred to the Army reorganization bill, which has been reported by the Military Affairs Committee to the Senate, and which, I hope, will be taken up in a few days. He mentioned the estimates of from $700,000,000 to $1,000,000,000, as he said, to take care of universal military training. Taking the lower figure, which I am sure is very nearly accurate, we ought to remember that of that sum the Regular Army will consume over $500,000,000, even at the reduced figure. It is a tremendous luxury. It is a necessity, too. But our effort ought to be all the time to keep it at a minimum, and the effort of the pending bill is to take this new and potentially great service—for no man can tell the importance which it may reach in the future; no man can too wildly prophesy about it—and for once put it under a business administration, have all the research and experimentation, all the training and all the operation done by one head, instead of scattering it in the Army and in the Navy and in the Post Office Departments, in the Forestry Service, the Coast Guard, and the Marine Corps; and that is what is being done to-day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I understand the position of the Senator and the position of the committee, which has investigated this matter very carefully and, I know, spent a great deal of time trying to get at the facts of the situation, it is that the committee and the Senator believe that the passage of this bill will not only promote efficiency but that it will be also actually in the interest of economy?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Eventual economy.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It will save money to the people of the country?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; otherwise we would not have dared report it.

Mr. KING obtained the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be called from the Chamber in just a few moments, and I would like to have the amendment offered by me voted on. The Senator from Utah is about to discuss the bill, and I suppose he would have no objection to letting my amendment be voted on first.

Mr. KING. If the Senator from Indiana is agreeable, I have no objection.

Mr. NEW. That is the Post Office amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Post Office amendment. There will be no objection to it.

Mr. NEW. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the admirable address just delivered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], and the full and complete statement made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], constitute powerful arguments in favor of this measure. I confess, however, that I am experiencing some difficulty in reaching a conclusion as to the wisdom of enacting the pending measure into law. The two volumes of testimony taken by the committee contains, as I understand, conflicting views, and the experts who have testified are not always in agreement. There is dissatisfaction with the present method of handling the question of national aeronautics. The lessons of the war have not yet been fully learned or presented, and I have found the greatest divergence of views among those who have given the subject consideration.

Mr. President, there is no question but what the debacle, if that is not too strong a word, of the War Department in organizing the aircraft service and in utilizing the same as a fighting force in the recent war constitutes in and of itself a powerful argument for some change in dealing with this important subject. It is very unfortunate that the War Department did make such a wretched failure in the handling of the vast appropriations made by Congress. The results obtained were not commensurate with the expenditures made, and I have no doubt that there is a general feeling of humiliation throughout the land over the failure of the War Department to properly utilize the vast appropriations made and produce fighting planes for military service.

The fault was not with the young men. Thousands and tens of thousands of them were ready and available for any service that was required in defense of their country in connection with aerial warfare. But it seems as if there was a paralysis somewhere in the War Department. It is a tragic page that deals with the waste of more than a billion dollars expended to produce fighting planes and to build up an aerial fighting organization. The sickening experience of thousands of brave and patriotic men who sought opportunities to serve their country in the aerial branch of the Army can not be wholly forgotten in the triumphant cries that came from victorious lips when the defeat of Germany was admitted.

Congress did its duty. Early in the war it made a most liberal appropriation, and it followed that appropriation by still others, so that the aggregate was nearly a billion and a half of dollars, as I now remember. Notwithstanding these stupendous appropriations, at the close of the war there had been produced but 10,718 planes, and most of those were training planes, and were built late in the summer and fall of 1918. There were but a few service planes, and our flyers in Europe were dependent upon the allied nations for combat and pursuit machines.

There have been a number of investigations conducted for the purpose of determining where the fault was and upon whom the responsibility for failure in the aerial service rests. Judge Hughes conducted an elaborate investigation and the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate, as I remember, devoted considerable time to an inquiry as to the failure of the War Department to properly function in connection with the Air Service. I have been told that officers in the Air Service were utterly incompetent, and the evidence is incontrovertible that there was the grossest inefficiency as well as great waste and extravagance upon the part of those charged with the furnishing of fighting airplanes. It is an unpleasant task to criticize those in executive positions and those who have served in the military branch of our Government. The achievements of the Army and Navy as a whole have been so brilliant that there is a disposition—and I share that view—to make allowances for many of the mistakes that characterized the activities of the War Department. To create a great military machine and put it into operation was a stupendous undertaking. To prepare millions of men for military service and to arrange for their transportation to foreign lands, and to successfully transport more than 2,000,000 soldiers, constitute a record of which all Americans are proud.

However, we are dealing now with a specific matter. It is urged in support of this new military and naval plan that the recent war demonstrated not only the ineptitude of the War and Navy Departments in dealing with the production and utilization of aircraft as a fighting branch of the Army and Navy, but also furnished convincing proof of the incapacity of these departments to properly deal with the aircraft question. There is no doubt but what the waste and inefficiency exhibited during the war in the production of aircraft appeal powerfully for some change in the present system. I am not sure that the measure submitted by the Committee on Military Affairs will prove a panacea for the evils which have been so obvious during the war.

Unless there are to be radical changes in the War Department and in its methods of executive and administrative work, I shall vote for this measure or almost any measure that will deprive the War Department of its authority to manufacture and develop fighting aircraft.

There is now too much red tape and military inefficiency to secure proper results. The same defects in the military system as an administrative organization were demonstrated to exist with respect to the production of ordnance as were found to exist in the branch of the War Department that had to do with the production and utilization of aircraft. The officers of the Army as a class are men of high standing and ability, and yet when they came to engage in the executive and administrative work in the branches to which I have just referred, there seemed to be weakness and a serious breakdown.

I agree with the Senator from New York and the Senator from Indiana that it would be not only a blunder but an irretrievable one if provisions were not made to develop and perfect aerial warfare. The recent war demonstrated that combat planes and air machines will play an important part in all future military operations. Our Government must adopt some plan that will develop the science of aeronautics and provide an adequate number of planes for military and naval purposes. That there should be greater coordination between the departments of the Government producing and employing aircraft must be evident to all. To what extent that coordination should go will provoke discussion; but undoubtedly there should be some central organization or agency that has to do with the production of aircraft required by the various branches of the Government. Technical men can be employed in such an executive agency or organization, as well as in a number of organizations or agencies devoted to the production of aircraft. Whether this bill creates the right kind of an executive agency I am not sure. It does create additional machinery and provides for hundreds, if not thousands, of additional employees. Whether it will in the end make for efficiency and economy there may be room for controversy. But, as stated, the records of the War Department and its waste and extravagance and failure with respect to the production of aircraft constitute an argument that is difficult to successfully meet. I was about to suggest that the President has the authority, and if he does not, it could easily be given him, to utilize branches of the Army and the Navy for the purpose of developing an aeronautical program and securing the planes needed both in the War and Navy Departments as well as in other branches of the service. There must be greater cooperation in the Government service and more perfect coordination between the departments and governmental agencies or the governmental machinery will become so enormous and so topheavy that it will destroy efficiency and burden the taxpayers beyond their power of endurance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 3383.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from New York desire to make any motion or suggestion with respect to the measure which is the unfinished business?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at least until I have had a chance to make a statement.

Mr. KING. I am willing to suspend in order to permit the Senator to make the statement now.

PAY OF ARMY, NAVY, MARINE CORPS, ETC.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3383) to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Public Health Service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the bill just laid before the Senate as the unfinished business, as Senators know, is what is known as the Army and Navy pay bill. On a prior occasion the Senate finished the consideration of all the committee amendments but one, and also adopted at least two other amendments which were offered from the floor. The Senate has finished consideration of all but one amendment, and that is found at the bottom of page 1, and in effect, as recommended by the committee, changes the bill so that the enlisted strength of all these services, instead of receiving 50 per cent increase in pay, shall receive a 20 per cent increase in pay, and, furthermore, that that increase shall not apply to the lowest grades in the service—privates in the Army and apprentice seamen in the Navy and corresponding grades in the other services. I think it my duty to-day before the Senate the figures in connection with the pending amendment, which I ask Senators to regard with all seriousness.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator is going to take up that question, I think we should have a quorum. There are only half a dozen Senators present now, and it is a vital question as to whether we are going to disagree to the committee amendment or not. I think, if the Senator is going to proceed, I shall suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Gerry	McKellar	Sheppard
Brandegee	Gronna	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Calder	Hale	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Capper	Harris	New	Smoot
Chamberlain	Harrison	Norris	Spencer
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Sutherland
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Wadsworth
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Page	Warren
Dillingham	King	Phelan
Fernald	Lenroot	Pomerene

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] is confined to his home by illness.

I also desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], who is detained on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Clerk will call the roll of the absentees.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. HENDERSON, Mr. LODGE, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. RANSDELL, and Mr. STANLEY answered to their names when called.

Mr. McLEAN, Mr. MOSES, and Mr. WILLIAMS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. STERLING and Mr. BORAH entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, when the absence of a quorum was suggested by the Senator from Utah I was about to lay before the Senate some figures which have an important bearing upon the committee amendment to the Army and Navy pay bill, which is the only committee amendment left for consideration.

It will be noted that the committee amendment provides for a 20 per cent increase in the pay of enlisted men, with the exception of the enlisted men of the lowest grade in each of the services. That is the effect of the proviso. If the committee amendment is defeated and the bill restored to its original form, calling for a 50 per cent increase in pay to all enlisted men in all the services, it will add to the bill $30,000,000 for the Army alone, something like $25,000,000 for the Navy, and comparatively small sums for the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, and the Public Health Service. The bill would carry in that event, instead of $59,000,000, something like $114,000,000 or $116,000,000. I think the Senate should understand what the change in percentage amounts to when it is applied to such a large body of men.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from New York a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Has the Senator from New York the figures at hand which would show the total amount which would be involved should we increase the pay of the enlisted personnel from 20 per cent to 31 per cent, as it is proposed to do in the case of the officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have the figures for the Army, but I have not accurate figures for the Navy. The Navy, however, will run in about the same proportion. I was going to take that very matter up, because the other day when this bill was being debated proposals were made for making the increase greater than 20 per cent.

An increase of 20 per cent in the pay of enlisted men in the Army alone, except the privates, involves the expenditure of $11,102,000. That is the way the bill now reads, so far as the Army is concerned. If the 20 per cent increase of pay were extended to an amount sufficient to include the privates in the Army as well as of the other enlisted men of the Army, it would involve an expenditure of $18,565,000 for the enlisted men of the Army alone; in other words, an increase of $7,463,000 on the Army side. The Navy would probably involve an increase of approximately $5,000,000 more. It is safe to say if we include the privates and the apprentice seamen under the provisions for a 20 per cent increase the total amount due to that increase would be in the neighborhood of $13,000,000. If the increase were raised to 30 per cent instead of 20 per cent, and the privates were left out, it would cost for the enlisted personnel of the Army alone $17,687,000, as contrasted with $11,000,000 which would be spent under the terms of the bill, showing an increase of $6,585,000. If the privates were added, and they, too, were given a 30 per cent increase, the cost of the bill for the enlisted strength of the Army alone would be $28,881,000, an increase over the bill so far as the Army alone is concerned of $17,779,000.

So it will be seen, Mr. President, that we are dealing in very large figures. My statement may answer in part a question which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] put to me the other day as to why I, who had introduced the pending bill originally giving 50 per cent straight increase of pay to all enlisted men in the Army, in the Navy, in the Marine Corps, in the Coast Guard, and in the Public Health Service, had consented to an amendment. If I had not consented to an amendment of this sort the bill would carry $116,000,000 instead of $59,000,000. While, of course, I like to see all men well paid in all the services, I and other members of the Military Affairs Committee simply could not bring ourselves to the conclusion that the Treasury of the United States would stand the drain. So it was the intent of the committee in amending the bill to give the increases in pay to those persons in the service who needed the increase most—that I am sure the bill does—and to keep it as low as possible in the matter of that increase; but even with that, with the utmost care, we must spend under this bill as it is amended by the committee $59,000,000 a year.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, for information I should like to ask the Senator from New York whether the bill as reported by the committee increases the compensation allowed to privates who are receiving $30 or $33 a month?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It increases the compensation of privates who are now receiving $33 per month, but not of privates who are receiving less than $33.

Mr. KING. What proportion of the personnel of the Army, under the reorganization bill, will be found receiving less than $33 a month?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Forty-nine per cent of the enlisted strength of the Army will be found in that class.

Mr. KING. They will receive less than $33 a month?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; they are privates. The next higher grade is composed of privates of the first class.

Mr. KING. And they receive $33 a month?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They receive $33 a month. Then come the corporals who receive $36.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from New York whether he thinks there ought to be that distinction between the privates and the privates of the first class?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I discussed that the other day, Mr. President, but I shall be glad to do so again if the Senate has the patience to hear me.

Mr. KING. I regret that I did not hear the explanation of the Senator from New York at that time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As we go up the scale of the enlisted personnel of the Army, as well as of the Navy, it will be found that the expenses of the men increase, because as they grow older and reach higher grades and the noncommissioned officer grades many of these men marry. The married men can not support their families on the present pay. The private, however, is almost invariably a bachelor; he is also almost invariably a young man. He is paid $30 a month, approximately a dollar a day. The Government feeds him and clothes him; gives him his medical care and his dental care; gives him vocational training free of charge; transports him whenever he has to go anywhere on duty; supplies him with organized recreational activities in the camp, and with libraries and reading rooms. The $30 is pure spending money. I forget the regulations down to the last detail; it may be that out of the $30 a month the private pays his laundry bill, but as to that I am not certain. At any rate the $30 may be very fairly said to constitute pocket money, which is largely used for the purchase of tobacco and other luxuries and entertainments in which the soldier desires to indulge.

Mr. BORAH. He must be able to indulge in a great many luxuries on $30 a month.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from New York permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KING. We recently increased the compensation allowed privates from $15 a month to $30 a month. At the time that increase was made there was no corresponding increase made—indeed, none, as I recall—for those men in the Army above the grade of private.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is mistaken in one respect. In 1917 we raised the pay of the private 100 per cent; we raised the pay of corporals, sergeants, and the upper grades of the noncommissioned personnel percentages less than 100 per cent, but still the increase was quite considerable. Those percentages of increase varied all the way from thirty-odd per cent up to eighty-odd per cent.

Mr. KING. But no increase was made in the pay of officers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No increase was made in the compensation of officers. The officers have not had their pay increased since 1908.

Mr. KING. Was there any material increase in 1908?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I forget how much it amounted to. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] probably remembers that.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there was a considerable increase, especially in the lower ranks. For instance, the pay of second lieutenants was increased from $1,400 to $1,700, of first lieutenants from $1,700 to $2,000, of captains from $1,800 and $2 000 to $2,400—and when a man reaches the grade of captain that is when naturally he would be expected to have a family. Prior to that time the pay of captains, mounted, was $2,000, but they were required to furnish their own horses, and for captains, not mounted, it was $1,800. As a consequence there was constant vexation, so that the pay was made the same for all alike, the Government furnishing horses in the case of a mounted officer, with the privilege, if the officer furnished his own horse, of receiving $150 a year extra. As to the upper grades, major generals and other general officers and field officers, their salaries were not raised more than $500 a year. That is the only increase that has been made in the pay of Army officers within the memory of anyone here.

Of course, the pay of privates and noncommissioned officers was raised at the same time the pay of the officers was raised—the privates beginning from $13 to $15 a month, with larger increases to a very large proportion of the enlisted men. Subsequently, as the Senator from New York has said, the pay of privates was doubled, and then there was 20 per cent added to all that for service abroad.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, there is another element of the pay of enlisted personnel which ought not to be forgotten. A private soldier upon enlistment receives $30 per month, but if he qualifies as a marksman he receives $2 a month more; if he qualifies as a sharpshooter, he gets $3 a month more; and if he qualifies as an expert rifleman, he gets $5 a month more. Of course, when a soldier receives the designation of "expert rifleman" it means that he is a very fine shot. Quite a number qualify as sharpshooters and a large number qualify as marksmen. So there are other elements in the pay than that recited in the bare fact that a private gets $30 a month.

The Senator asked about the discrimination between privates, first class, and other privates. If we wipe out discrimination and give to them all the 20 per cent increase, it will add approximately $13,000,000 or $14,000,000 to this bill.

The Senator from Wyoming a moment ago mentioned the pay of officers and general officers. I found a little item, Mr. President, which I think is somewhat eloquent in this connection, printed in the Washington Post of January 28. It is an inconspicuous little item; probably very few people would notice it, and in this hurried life we lead, if they did notice it, they would pass it by without attempting to comprehend its significance. It reads as follows:

NEW YORK, January 27.

Maj. Gen. Thomas H. Barry, who died in Washington on December 30, left personal property valued at $5,000 and no real estate, according to his will, which was filed here to-day, after 46 years of service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I presume the Senator from New York does not intend to displace the aircraft bill, which is now under consideration.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The pay bill is the unfinished business and is now under consideration. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] has an amendment to offer, and I thought we might clear that up before we discussed what disposition we shall make of this bill for the afternoon or of the aeronautical bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if it is in order at this time, I offer an amendment, to be inserted as a new section, after section 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator desires the committee amendments to be passed over temporarily.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section in the bill, to be known as section 5, and to read as follows:

That in lieu of compensation now prescribed by law, commissioned officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey shall receive the same pay and allowances as are now or may hereafter be prescribed for officers of the Navy with whom they hold relative rank as prescribed in the act of May 22, 1917, entitled "An act to temporarily increase the commissioned and warrant and enlisted strength of the Navy and Marine Corps, and for other purposes," including longevity, which shall be based on the total service in the Coast and Geodetic Survey and Army and Navy; and all laws relating to the retirement of commissioned officers of the Navy shall hereafter apply to commissioned officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the service of the commissioned personnel in the Coast and Geodetic Survey is of a highly technical nature. The men who hold commissions in this service are men of technical education, graduates of such institutions as the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. It is the only commissioned service in the Government whose pay has not been put upon the same basis as the pay of the Army and the Navy. The pay of these men is now less than the present pay of the officers of the Army and the Navy. We have heard in the discussion of this bill of the importance and necessity, if we are to treat these men decently, of increasing the present pay of the Army and Navy; so there is much more reason for increasing the pay of the Coast and Geodetic Survey commissioned personnel, because it is lower than the existing pay of the Army and Navy.

I am informed that this service confronts a crisis on account of inadequate pay. The men are resigning in large numbers. I am told that about 70 per cent of the officers have filed their resignations with the superintendent of the survey, and that they have not been accepted, but are withheld temporarily in the hope that relief of this kind will be forthcoming.

This work is of the utmost importance. It is the charting and mapping of the navigable waters of the world, particularly those on our own coasts, and on other coasts where the interests of the United States require accurate knowledge as to the character of the waters. Without the continuance of this service and its maintenance upon an efficient basis it will be absolutely impossible to keep up to an efficient standard the information that is absolutely necessary, not only for the Navy but for the merchant marine of the United States. My information is that this increase, if it is made, will amount to about $41,000 for the six months ending June 30, 1920; and my further information is that by reason of the resignation of officers in this service and the necessity of employing special agents to carry on this work, even that part of it which was absolutely necessary, an extra expense of some $300,000 was incurred in 1919 over what the cost of the survey would have been if the regular force had been maintained by the payment of adequate salaries. It seems to me that a mere statement of the case is sufficient to justify the incorporation of this amendment in the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I should like to ask him a question. What is the number now in this department of the Government or arm of the service, or whatever it may be properly called?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have not the information as to all grades. There are 29 commissions in the entering grade of this service. That grade ranks with second lieutenant in the Army, and those who hold it receive a salary of $1,000 per annum.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator if it is not true that the men who receive that munificent salary of $1,000 a year are men who must have graduated from technical schools—engineering schools?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is true; and in addition to that they must pass a special physical and mental examination. My information is that the training required of these men is superior to that which is required for obtaining a commission in the Army or the Navy.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I understand, these men perform the duties of engineers.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They perform the duty of surveying the navigable waters of our coasts and of charting them, making marine charts of these waters.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator say that they are classified as officers, and that they have grades of preferment, and so forth, running from lieutenant on up?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They have. That is correct.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know what is the highest grade and under whose authority they act?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They act under the authority of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the highest grade is equivalent to that of captain in the Navy.

Mr. KING. They are not subject to the military and the naval departments of the United States, as I understand?

Mr. POINDEXTER. During the war they were incorporated in the Navy.

Mr. KING. Just the same as the Coast Guard; but, as I understand, this is a civilian branch of the service.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is not altogether a civilian branch of the service. It is military in its organization, and these men hold military rank and grade.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, they are commissioned by the President of the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They hold commissions, as I stated in the beginning of the presentation of this amendment, and it is the only commissioned service which has not been put upon the same basis as the Army and the Navy as to pay. They hold rank and obtain their commissions in the same way as the commissioned personnel of the Army and the Navy.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think it is the proper course to pursue to square these engineers, if I may be permitted that expression, with the officers of the Army and the Navy, who give their lives to military or naval work, are called to all parts of the world—particularly the naval officers in times of peace—are subject to military and naval discipline and control, and practically make a life work of it? Does the Senator think we ought to take these engineers, grade them by the standards which apply in the Army and in the Navy, and fit them into the various niches which military and naval discipline and rules and regulation prescribe?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to the policy which has been adopted in that regard. That is an established policy. There is not any material distinction, so far as the relation of this service to the Army and the Navy is concerned, between it and the Coast Guard. The Coast Guard is organized upon a military basis, and its officers hold commissions from the President, but it serves under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Coast and Geodetic Survey, in time of peace, serves under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce; but both the Coast Guard and the Coast and Geodetic Survey during the war were incorporated with the Navy, and subject to military orders. It is not so much the fact that these men hold military commissions that entitles them to increased pay, although that evidently is an adequate reason for putting them upon the same basis as other branches of the Government service which are similarly organized, but it is the fact that they are engaged in the performance not only of an arduous and a dangerous work but of a work which requires an elaborate education, a highly technical training, and that sort of physical and mental fitness and alertness which is required of the officers in the Army and the Navy. Furthermore, these men are selected from the graduates of the best technical schools in the country, and, after passing a special examination, are started into the service of the Coast and Geodetic Survey on a salary of $1,000 a year, when car repairers, for instance, are paid several times that amount. I saw a photographic copy of a report of the account of two weeks of a wrecking crew, which was called to the attention of the conference committee on the railroad bill on yesterday, where it appears that car repairers in the wrecking crew get more than $5,000 a year.

Mr. KING. The Senator might mention that the cook in that particular wrecking crew perhaps got more than that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. KING. That is what is paid to the employees of the railroads by the present administration, apparently.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think, in view of that general tendency of the times—although, in my judgment, that is quite extreme—and in view of what we are perfectly familiar with as to the absolute necessity of more pay than this for the support of a family, it is perfectly obvious that $1,000 a year for lieutenants in the Coast and Geodetic Survey is inadequate.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator advise me—I ask for information—whether or not the officers in that branch of the service now have the benefits of retirement and retirement pay, the same as naval and military officers?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; they have not.

Mr. KING. And this amendment of the Senator would give that to them?

Mr. POINDEXTER. This amendment would give them the benefit of retirement, on the same pay and conditions, after service for the same period of time, and at the same age.

Mr. KING. Then the Senator's amendment changes existing law and elevates them into a pensionable status?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; that is true.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall object to the adoption of this amendment in that form. I think it is unfair, if the Senator will pardon me, to take advantage of this exigency to change existing law and to give those men in the Geodetic Survey a pensionable status and retirement privileges, when they do not now possess them. As I understood the Senator in the beginning, this was a sort of a harmless, innocuous amendment, that only asked for about forty-odd thousand dollars a year in addition to the present expenditure.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Forty-one thousand dollars for the six months ending June 30.

Mr. KING. Yes; $41,000 for six months. Yet, from the inquiry I just propounded, it seems that you are changing existing law not only with respect to compensation and fitting them into the same grooves and niches occupied by naval officers and Army officers with respect to pay and allowances; but, in addition, the proposition is to change existing law and to give them retirement pay and privileges. That is a matter, I think, for the Senate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I hope the Senator will not object. Of course, I do not understand that there is any objection that can be maintained against this amendment because it changes existing law, because the whole bill changes existing law, and that is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. KING. If I could object to the amendment, I would do so, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Personally, Mr. President, I am in favor not only of retirement privileges upon a certain amount of pay for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, but for the entire civil service of the Government, and I am in favor of it on the basis of economy. There would be great improvement observed if we had a properly defined and established civil-service pension system in the Government service, in the quality of the service, in enabling the Government to dispense with men on the active list who are past the age of really efficient work, and yet who are not, as a matter of fact, discharged because of the sympathy which is felt for them, and because of the indecency of turning them out in their old age after 30 or 40 or 50 and in some cases 60 years' continuous service for the Government, because of the lack of a civil-service pension. I believe that the establishment of such a pension policy would be in the interests of economy as well as of justice to the Government employees. So the fact that this amendment contains a clause extending to the Coast and Geodetic Survey the same benefits of retirement that are enjoyed by the Coast Guard and all the other commissioned services of the Government is no basis for objection to it, in my opinion; on the contrary, I think that it is a recommendation.

Mr. KING. As I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], it seeks to increase the compensation of one branch of the Government service and at the same time elevate the personnel from a nonpensionable to a pensionable or retirement status. The idea seems to be prevalent that now is the time to make assaults upon the United States Treasury. Uncle Sam is staggering beneath stupendous burdens—he is faced with a huge bond issue—but, nevertheless, his bowed back must be bent still lower with the increasing demands for Federal appropriations. And from many directions come demands for pensions and retirement benefits and various forms of governmental largesses.

I recently heard of the action of an old and hard-headed American farmer who was appealed to by his son to aid in abating the supposed opposition of a Senator to a measure which aimed at pensioning Government employees. The son enjoyed a position with the United States which called for no great exertion and about seven hours of service per day.

There were 30 days' vacation allowed and 30 days' sick leave provided. The compensation was more than $2,400 per annum.

The father replied that he had worked 12 to 16 hours a day for more than 30 years. He had enjoyed no vacations or sick leaves. His earnings were less than the salary of his son. He had no pension and no promise of one.

He further replied that when the Government employees worked as hard as he did, and when he received a pension, then he might consider the propriety of urging that his son be pensioned. Of course, the view of this toiler and builder is old-fashioned. It was the view of those who builded this great Nation and made it the richest and most powerful one the world has ever seen. This American hero belongs to the type from which the leaders of this Republic sprang. He exemplifies the spirit of individualism and independence which has been the sure and safe guide of the American people.

But we are now departing from the faith of the fathers, from the strong, assertive, and independent spirit which developed this mighty people and builded this puissant Nation. We are to become exotics, mere hothouse plants, dependents, and weaklings, greedily looking for gifts and contributions from governments. We are developing a bureaucracy; we are becoming a nation of officeholders. Contemporaneous with the development of this condition, we are enlarging the powers and activities of the Federal Government. A large officeholding class inevitably breaks down limitations upon governments. The erosion of constitutional restrictions leads to consolidation and autocracy. The paternalistic tendencies of the Federal Government are apparent to the most superficial students, and the regret is that so few raise their voices against an evil which in the end must modify and indeed change the very fundamentals of this Republic.

Mr. President, I may be old-fashioned, but I believe in this Republic. I revere the Constitution of the United States and would preserve it in letter and in spirit. I would have the people virile and independent. I would have as little legislation as possible and permit the free development of the individual units constituting the State.

The people will love their Government and die for their country if it does not rob them of those virtues which belong to a strong and progressive people.

We are developing a spirit of dependence upon the Government, so that in all parts of the land there is a feeling that the Federal Government must play the part of a father. It must furnish work for the people and discharge the duties and responsibilities which should rest upon the individuals and upon the States.

We must have pensions and retirement bills and constant aid from the Federal Treasury, and an increasingly benevolent and tyrannous paternalism to assume control over our lives and conduct. It is quite likely that the hard-headed farmer did not entertain the modern view at all. He is probably a "back number" and wholly unaware of the new-fangled ideas which are so popular and controlling in these epochal times.

The idea seems to be that we must have two classes of people in the United States—the taxpayer; the farmer, bowed down with toil; and the hard-working civilian, upon whose shoulders shall rest the burdens of the Government; and the vast army of governmental employees, whose numbers will constantly increase and whose labors are to be constantly lightened, and who will have pensions after a few years of service.

We are to have two classes of people, apparently, Mr. President, in a short time in the United States, those who draw pensions and those who have to pay the pensions and have to pay the expenses of the Government.

It may be that that is the right sort of a government to have. It may be that we ought to have a bureaucracy instead of a republican representative form of government. It may be that the Government should take over the railroads and the telegraphs and the telephones and all the public utilities and engage in all sorts of socialistic undertakings and enterprises and have millions of men upon the pay rolls who will soon obtain pensions or who under the system will obtain pension from the Government.

It would seem that there are those who believe that our fathers made a mistake in the form of government established by them and that we should spend our best efforts to batter it down and follow the new school of social uplifters and political charlatans who cry with such loud voices in the temples and upon the highways.

Speaking for myself, I am for this Republic. I believe in preserving it and in fighting these dangerous and deadly isms which so craftily and in such pleasant form are preached by the false prophets who fill the land.

In the Senate we are strengthening the view that the Federal Government is omnipotent and has no limitations upon its powers. We are encouraging the growth of the feeling that the Government owes the people a living and should provide offices and pensions for an ever-increasing army.

We spend much of our time in creating offices and then a large part of the rest of the time in providing compensation for those who are in office.

I do not think, Mr. President, that the interests of the people and the interests of the Republic are best served by too much legislation of this character.

Here is an innocent amendment offered by my good friend from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. I did not know—I confess my ignorance—that the Coast and Geodetic Survey had generals, and I suppose admirals and vice admirals, and commodores, and captains, and all down the list of naval or military officers. Of course, if a man is in the Government service very long he must have a title, and if none exists we must create one. If a man is a civil engineer or makes a survey upon land or water we must invest him with a title; he should be made a captain, or a commodore, or an admiral, or perhaps he should have a military title; and, of course, having been given this rank, he must have the rank and pay of the admiral in the Navy or the general in the Army, and this, of course, must be followed by retirement and the pay and allowances and pension of the rank. We must set up a standard and then fit everything to that standard. This beautiful system of uniformity seems to be an obsession with us. We must standardize everything, stereotype legislation.

Now, we have naval officers and military officers. If there is the remotest resemblance between military service and some branch of the Government, we must invest the employees in that branch of the Government with the titles that we find in the military service, and if some men are engineers or perform any work analogous to that performed by men in the Army, we must attach them to the military branch of the Government and bestow titles upon them of the same character as those provided by law for those in the military arm of the Government service.

Of course, the theory is, when you automatically raise the compensation of the officers of the Army or Navy, then we must increase the compensation, the salaries, the retirement pay, the allowances, the emoluments, the perquisites, the honors, and the prestige of those who are in other branches of service, but which by some power of imagination is presumed to bear some faint resemblance to the military arm of the Government. After a while, Mr. President, I would not be surprised if, in the Bureau of Mines or in the Agricultural Department, the theory will be advanced that there is some relationship between the Bureau of Mines and the military branch of the service, for the reason that during the recent war some of the chemists and some of the mining men in the bureau rendered service which aided in winning the war, and was connected in a way with the military branch; and we will have generals and major generals and captains, and all sorts of military officers in the Bureau of Mines. Then, when there is a raise in the compensation of the Army officers, there will be a corresponding increase for the generals, and colonels, and majors, and captains, and so on, in the Bureau of Mines.

And perhaps some farseeing man will find some relation between the Agricultural Department and the Army or the Navy. Why not? The Agricultural Department, it is claimed, and I think the claim is true, rendered very efficient service during the war.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator can make his last statement more positive if he desires. Some of the best chemists that we have, of course, are in the Agricultural Department. During the war they were engaged directly, very properly and patriotically, in the development of shells, and so forth, and indirectly in the food proposition, which, of course, as the Senator knows, had a very material and necessary part in the winning of the war.

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator, Mr. President. The suggestion which he makes is very pertinent and, I think, constitutes an argument in favor of putting that branch of the service in some situation with relation to the military or naval branch of the Government so that there may be such coordination as to entitle the officials of the department to be given titles and grades and pensions.

Why not? The thousands of men in the Agricultural Department rendered splendid service during the war in a chemical way, in the production of food supplies for the American troops and for our allies across the seas. Why not make them generals and captains and lieutenants, and why not give them the same titles and the same pay and emoluments as we give surveyors and map makers and rodmen and those found in the Coast and Geodetic Survey?

Mr. President, we have had a bill under consideration to-day that possesses admirable features, the aeronautic bill, a bill which I believe will be passed, with some modifications, sooner or later. It provides for the coordination of the activities of the Government engaged in the production of aircraft and in its utilization. Men will be employed in flying and the carrying of the mail. Men will be employed by the Treasury Department in detecting smuggling and other violations of the law. Some will be employed in looking after the forests of the Government. In a way it is quasi-military service for the Government. We will soon have a plan here to make captains and generals and lieutenants, and so on, of all of the men who are engaged in these activities of the Government.

Why should we show discrimination? While we are so generous with the people's money, and while it involves only the passage of a law to create a lot of titles and offices, why not bestow them more generously and with less discriminating care? Let us give them to the men in the various departments of the Government. If the surveyor becomes an admiral or a general, why not have the chemist or the expert in the employ of the Government who aids in the production of foodstuffs? If titles and retirements and pensions are to be granted to so many, let us go a little further.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume, on the same line, we could just as well make captains, majors, and colonels of the brakemen, conductors, and switchmen on the railroads.

Mr. KING. I can see no limit if we embark upon the scheme. Why not? Where are we going to draw the line? The railroads are indispensable to the welfare and prosperity of the people, and if they are properly operated there must be an integration of all of the activities, a proper cooperation, and united control. Why not make the manager of the railroads a general, and then bestow titles all the way down, and then when we raise the compensation of the men in the Army or in the Navy, automatically it would apply to the generals and other officers in various other departments of the Government?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, it would take a long time and a good many raises before we ever got the Army pay up to the basis of railroad pay. A locomotive engineer gets more than a colonel to-day.

Mr. NORRIS. We might make the locomotive engineer a general instead of a colonel.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We would have to do so on the face of the returns.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not know what prompted the remark of my distinguished friend the Senator from New York. I certainly was not complaining about the compensation of officers of the Army or asserting that they were getting too much or too little. I have made no comment with respect to that matter. If the Senator intended it as a mere humorous remark, evidently it found its mark in the galleries. If he intended it as a criticism of my position, he is entitled to all the comfort he may extract from the same.

But, Mr. President, I will not be diverted by the humorous remark of the Senator from New York. I come back to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. He comes with this innocent amendment: "Oh, this is just adding $41,000 for six months to the pay of members of the Coast and Geodetic Survey."

Upon peering beneath the surface of the amendment we find that it has broader implications than that. It is to change the existing law, it is to take those employees out of the nonpensionable and nonretirement class and to put them into a pensionable and a retirement class.

Mr. President, I like a fair fight, and I like legislation to come upon the floor of the Senate standing or falling upon its merits, just like the measure which the Senator from New York has presented for consideration and the measure which is under the control of the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW]. I do not like these amendments that come in for consideration, harmless upon their face, and yet perhaps containing a very serious joker.

I am making no criticism now of my distinguished friend the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], but the amendment ought not to pass in its present form. If it be just and fair that these men in the Coast and Geodetic Survey should receive compensation in excess of that now given to them, I would be glad to vote for it; but I want to consider the question on its merits. If it is important that they shall be elevated to a pensionable status and placed in the same category with admirals and other officers of the Navy and have all the benefit of retirement, and so forth, I want an opportunity to have that matter fully discussed and presented. In the first place, I want a committee to examine into the matter. That is what committees are for, that they may consider legislation, particularly legislation which changes existing laws, which have been on the statute books perhaps for two or three decades or for a hundred years. If these men should have been placed in the same category with admirals and officers of the Navy, why has it not been done before? Why has there not been a bill introduced in the House or in the Senate for the purpose of giving them those benefits? Why, under the guise of an amendment meant to increase their compensation, are we to be called upon to give them a different status from that which they now occupy?

I hope my distinguished friend will not press the amendment now. I know that if it is a fair proposition the Committee on Military Affairs, if that is the committee which should consider it, will consider it fairly and impartially. I do not always agree with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. WADSWORTH], and yet it gives me pleasure to say that he is one of the ablest Senators in this body and brings to the consideration of the great questions that come before his committee an intelligence and a patriotism that earn for him not only the gratitude of the Members of the Senate but the gratitude of the American people.

I am sure that if the proposition which is offered by the Senator from Washington has merit, and if he will refer it to the Committee on Military Affairs, it will be dealt with promptly and fairly. I beg of my friend not to press his amendment now. I shall have to ask for a quorum if he does so, and I shall then perhaps have to make further explanations to the Senators who come in. This may lead to discussion more or less protracted. If the Senator presses it, I shall call for a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Harris	Page	Spencer
Borah	Harrison	Phelan	Stanley
Brandegee	Henderson	Phipps	Sterling
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Sutherland
Dial	King	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Moses	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.
Gerry	New	Shields	Warren
Gronna	Norris	Smith, Md.	Williams
Hale	Overman	Smoot

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CALDER, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. NELSON, Mr. NUGENT, Mr. RANSDELL, and Mr. SMITH of Georgia answered to their names when called.

Mr. FERNALD entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] on account of illness.

Mr. NUGENT. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] on account of illness in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 31, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 30, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

With unbounded faith and confidence in Thee, our Heavenly Father, as a God hearing and a God answering prayer, we pray with all the fervor of our soul for new inspiration and light to guide us in the duties of this a new day. Crown our efforts with the well-being of our beloved country. If we seek happiness, it shall vanish away. If we seek opportunity to do good, happiness will come in the doing.

This world is in the making, and we are called upon to lend a hand and lay hold of the opportunities to develop perfection in the world and in ourselves. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an editorial from this morning's Washington Post on school-teachers' salaries and schools.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an editorial from this morning's Post on the subject of schools. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to say that this editorial is a very able editorial on the importance of building up our school system at this time in this country. It is very short, and it will take very little space in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I think it is of very great interest to the people of the country at this time when we are teaching the importance of education, in a Government like ours, where the people must rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12046, the deficiency appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the deficiency bill. As many as are in favor of the motion will say aye.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is not an automatic call.

The SPEAKER. A division had been had.

Mr. WALSH. A division had not been had. The House was not dividing. The Chair put the question only as to the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. Yes; the Chair called for the affirmative side.

Mr. WALSH. The House was not dividing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that the House would have to divide by a rising vote. The Chair is inclined to think that it is an automatic call. The Chair will decide that a quorum failed to vote on the question.

Mr. WALSH. But, Mr. Speaker, can the Chair make that decision when only one side has voted on a question?

The SPEAKER. Had not the Chair put both sides?

Mr. WALSH. The Chair had not. The Chair merely said that those who were in favor of the motion would say aye.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that where the Chair has put the question in the affirmative certainly the House divides. That has been the ruling of the Chair all along this session.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, I think the gentleman is mistaken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is disposed to think that the gentleman from Massachusetts is technically correct. The rule says whenever a quorum fails to vote on any question that there shall be an automatic call.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the House undoubtedly was dividing, and it seems to me that that precipitates an automatic call.

The SPEAKER. A quorum had not failed to vote necessarily when but one side had been put.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But the House undoubtedly was dividing.

Mr. BLANTON. It is very evident that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It does not make any substantial difference, of course, but we should not establish bad precedents.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that the rule provides that where the House has divided and an objection is made to the vote because there is no quorum present, an automatic call of the House ensues. While usually that is not stated, still objection can not be made to the vote until the vote has been taken. In this case undoubtedly the Speaker put only the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The rule does not say anything about dividing, although that is the phrase used. The rule says whenever a quorum fails to vote on any question and a quorum is not present. The Chair thinks that under that, technically, he would have to decide that a vote had been taken and that a quorum did not vote. If the point of no quorum is made before the vote is taken, strictly the Chair could not decide that a quorum had not voted. The Chair therefore rules that this is not an automatic call.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anthony	Fess	Knutson	Rowan
Ayres	Fuller, Mass.	Kraus	Sanders, Ind.
Black	Gard	Kreider	Sanders, La.
Blackmon	Garland	Larsen	Sanford
Booher	Garrett	Lehlbach	Scully

Edmonds	Kennedy, R. I.	Porter	Whaley
Ellsworth	Kettner	Reavis	Winslow
Emerson	Kiess	Robsion, Ky.	Woodyard
Ferris	King	Romjue

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

URGENT DEFICIENCIES.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12046.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12046, the second deficiency bill, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12046, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, we had just concluded a paragraph to which I had reserved a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned, or rather when we arose on yesterday, we had just reached and concluded line 17, page 4, to which paragraph I reserved a point of order. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question or two in reference to this item. Apparently——

Mr. GOOD. Page 4?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Page 4. Apparently this is neither conjectural nor an actual deficiency. It relates to a flat appropriation for general expenses.

Mr. GOOD. The situation with regard to that item is that the amount carried in the bill is enough to pay the present force employed by the Interstate Commerce Commission until the 30th of June, and in addition to that $25,000 that the commission estimates will be necessary to be expended by reason of the return of the roads to private control and because of pending legislation. There is a deficiency. There is not enough money appropriated to pay the expenses of the employees in the Interstate Commerce Commission for the balance of the year. Now, it does carry $25,000 which the commission felt would or might be necessary for the rest of the year. There is an actual deficiency, however.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Well now, is it proposed by this amount to increase anybody's salary?

Mr. GOOD. Not at all.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I want to find out whether if a department wants to increase somebody's salary——

Mr. GOOD. No; it is not proposed, so far as the committee could ascertain, to increase anyone's salary. It is only to make provision for the payment of salaries that they have been paying for the past and are paying now.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Well, does the committee take the attitude that if the department wants to increase somebody's salary and has not got the money to do it, then it is a conjectural deficiency? Is that held to be a deficiency?

Mr. GOOD. Of course the gentleman knows that the appropriation for years for the Interstate Commerce Commission has been in a lump sum; that it was not appropriated so much for one class and so much for clerks of another class, but it is all in a lump sum. The commissioners have always had rather a wide latitude in regard to the fixing of salaries, but my understanding is that that is not proposed out of this appropriation to grant increases, and no increases have been granted that have made this increase necessary, so far as I know.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a moment to permit me to ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do.

Mr. SNELL. Had they put on an additional force?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I renew the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Some additional force was put on some time ago.

Mr. SNELL. Then this is in anticipation of the roads returning to private ownership and operation?

Mr. GOOD. Of course, it is in anticipation of their keeping their present force, and $25,000 of it is in anticipation of the work that may be thrown on the commission because of their resuming their full duties under the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Valuation of property of carriers: To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to carry out the objects of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof," by providing for a valuation of the several classes of property of carriers subject thereto and securing information concerning their stocks, bonds, and other securities, approved March 1, 1913, including per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, $500,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. How does the Interstate Commerce Commission figure this out as a deficiency? They had an appropriation of $2,500,000, as I understand it.

Mr. GOOD. They had an appropriation of $2,500,000. It is and has been the plan of the Interstate Commerce Commission to complete the work of valuing railroad properties as soon as possible. When the war was on they consented to the discharge of some of the men who were doing field work and did not prosecute the work as vigorously as they had done before. Previously they had an appropriation of about $3,500,000 a year. Now, after the signing of the armistice they took up the work of putting on more field men, returning their men to the work, and have actually expended for the first six months $1,700,000, leaving a balance of the appropriation of $790,000. It was the opinion of Judge Prouty that with $500,000 they could carry on the work that they are now carrying on with the present or a reduced force, which is contemplated, to the 30th of June. This would give them $1,190,000 for the balance of the year. They spent for the first six months $1,710,000.

Mr. WALSH. Was any testimony taken as to what they would require after the 30th of June?

Mr. GOOD. A great part of the field work will be done by the 30th of June. They plan to have this work all completed by the end of the fiscal year 1921.

Mr. WALSH. How much did they ask for as a deficiency?

Mr. GOOD. They asked for just what we gave them. It seemed to the committee that they made a complete case. They spent $1,710,000 for the first half of the year and will have $1,190,000 for the remaining months of the year, but that is because some of the men are being discharged because the field work is completed. It seemed to the committee the work ought to be completed as soon as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

For miscellaneous expenses, including maintenance and repair of a motor-propelled passenger vehicle, to be used only for official purposes; automobile mail wagons, including exchange of same; street car fare, not exceeding $150; and other items not included in the foregoing, $10,000.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. JUUL. I move to strike out the last word of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. JUUL. I would like to know if we can not at some time or other come to the point where the departmental heads may be treated the same as Congressmen are?

Now, Mr. Chairman, here is an item of $10,000 for motor-propelled passenger vehicles. Now, I happened to attend a meeting of one of the appropriating committees some time ago. There were 21 members of that committee, and all of the 21 members came to the committee meeting on foot, or they came in the street cars and paid their fares. But outside of the House Office Building was standing a motor-propelled vehicle, with a soldier sitting inside of it, and it stood there waiting while the committee meeting was going on. And I want to know if it is not time for this Congress to start in on a different tack? Can not the gentlemen from these various departments ride in the street cars the same as Congressmen do; and, if they do not want to ride on the street cars, can not they pay $4 an hour as you and I do when we go down into the southwestern section of the city to visit the departments? I think these bills are filled up until they are choked with motor-propelled vehicles. If we are going to economize, let us start right in now. [Applause.] Is there a Congressmen to-day who can come in here and ask for a motor-propelled vehicle when he has got to visit the departments? Here was an officer of the United States visiting the committee, to be questioned on a matter of appropriations, and there comes a car labeled "For official use only." Do you get any cars to ride in when you go to meetings? Why should they have them? I am absolutely and unalterably opposed to this waste of the Nation's money, and I hope there will be enough courageous gentlemen upon this floor to help stop this burning up of gasoline and this furnishing of cars for men that sit inside in committee meetings for hours, with a flunky sitting outside for hours waiting for them to come out. Let them use the street cars and get acquainted with the weird and wonderful street car system we have in this town the same as we do. I had hoped that the gentlemen who had this matter in charge would have seen to it that every departmental gentleman that does not like street cars would hire his own car. For one I am in favor of striking out every item that sends a lot of men riding around here in automobiles for which the Nation has to pay, driven by men paid out of the Public Treasury.

Let me ask, Is it an official use of a United States motor-propelled vehicle to have it stand outside the Willard Hotel for hours? What official business is being transacted in there? Is it necessary to have a motor-propelled vehicle standing outside any appropriating committee or some other committee while some military gentleman is in there telling you the necessity for the appropriations? Why should this continue to go on? Let us reduce the consumption of gasoline and the price will come down, and the farmers can use it for the tractors out in the fields. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the trouble with the argument of the gentleman from Illinois is that he simply grabs at one phrase in an appropriation item that is for the entire contingent expenses of a whole department. All the automobiles that are cared for out of this appropriation, aside from the Secretary's automobile, are two motor trucks. The big part of this appropriation is to pay telephone expenses. Under the law and under the rates established by the Postmaster General, this department pays 2 cents for every interdepartmental call. That is the rate that has been fixed, and this year it takes $7,500 just to pay the interdepartmental calls of the State Department. This is for their whole telephone service. Last year the contingent expense of the State Department was $20,000. The appropriation for this year was $12,000. Last year they had a regular appropriation of $10,000 and a deficiency appropriation for $10,000. Now, they are paying this year, as I say, for these interdepartmental calls, $7,500, and the department is paying approximately $3,000 for long-distance calls. I suppose the gentleman from Illinois would have this department throw out the telephones, and when some Member of Congress wanted to call upon the State Department for a constituent he would have to go down there, or the Secretary of State would have to come up and see him. I presume he would have us discontinue the use of telephones for long-distance calls and would have the Secretary of State go over to New York and transact the business he has there every day. I have no brief for the department. We went into this matter very carefully, and the amount expended for gasoline is a mere bagatelle. This appropriation is for the contingent expenses of one of the great departments of the Government, and I submit that $20,000, with a department as big as the Department of State, under the present high costs of everything, is not an excessive amount.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Will this be sufficient to run them to the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. GOOD. They asked for $12,000, and the committee went into the matter very carefully, and we thought that by the practice of economy they could get along and would get along with $10,000.

Mr. GARNER. But does the gentleman from Iowa honestly believe that economy will be practiced to such an extent that we shall not be called upon to give another deficiency before the end of the year?

Mr. GOOD. I hope so.

Mr. GARNER. I asked you about your belief, not your hope.

Mr. GOOD. That depends. If they practice economy, they can get along, and get along well, within the appropriation.

Mr. GARNER. Then, as I understand the gentleman, if they do not practice economy, we shall likely be called upon to make another appropriation for this purpose. If they do not practice economy, why not tell them that they have got all the money they will get? If that had been done, they would not have need of this appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. I am willing to say to them that they will not get another deficiency for this year, if that will help. If by telling them that they must practice economy will induce the practice of economy, I am willing to make the statement as strong as the English language will permit.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I realize that there is probably not a gentleman on the floor of this House who desires to be more economical than the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. But I want to tell you, gentlemen, I have seen those words "motor-propelled vehicles" in bills until I am sick of them.

Mr. GOOD. Let me say to the gentleman this: That it is necessary under the ruling of the comptroller to place those words in the contingent expense items. Otherwise they could not purchase gasoline or oil for the motor trucks.

Mr. JUUL. I do not want them to purchase gasoline for motor vehicles. Let every official of a department go and hire or buy an automobile for himself if he wants to ride in one. If they will not do that, let them do as Congressmen do, ride on the street cars or walk.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUUL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Why do you not make a point of order against it and strike it out instead of simply lip speaking?

Mr. JUUL. I will tell the gentleman. The item is mixed up with a lot of other items that I have no grudge against, but I have a grudge against all items for motor-propelled vehicles for official purposes.

Mr. GOOD. The automobile privilege is abused by many departments, particularly the War Department, and I am willing to cooperate with the gentleman to correct this abuse.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, over $10,000 of this appropriation is due to telephone service, and therefore only a very small amount is due to expenditures for gasoline. So far as the motor cars are concerned, they have two trucks, one Ford runabout, and the Secretary's own car. Manifestly no great amount of gasoline is used for that purpose. The Congress furnishes a car to the Speaker of this House, I believe, and provides for its maintenance, and provides in this very language for the maintenance of the car of the Secretary of State and also for the other members of the Cabinet. Now, if we are going to provide a car, manifestly we ought to provide the small amount of gasoline necessary to operate it.

As to the telephone calls, the Department of State is not responsible for the price paid. The price is fixed by the General Supply Committee, which is composed of representatives of each department that contract for the service. If they did not have that interdepartmental service, the time consumed in going from department to department would cost a great deal more than the slight cost of the telephone, and therefore, while we may share the ideas of the gentleman from Illinois as to a number of items for motor cars, certainly as to this particular item it is the part of wisdom to let it remain in the bill.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman speaks of the Speaker having a car. I will ask the gentleman if the Democrats did not oppose having a car for the Speaker?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not know as to that.

Mr. GARNER. I remember that they took that position, and many of them took the position when the Democratic Speaker came in that a car should not be provided for him, and a number thought he should not use the car when it was provided, and I was one of those.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GOOD. Pending that, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in six minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in six minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion the argument just made by the chairman of this committee [Mr. GOOD] in response to the point made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL] was not responsive to the point raised by him. The gentleman from Iowa speaks of telephone charges and other matters of necessary expense. The gentleman from Illinois is not talking about that, but he is trying to call the attention of the House to an abuse which has become almost universal among the departments in this city. I agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] that this House ought not to appropriate for the purchase, repair, and operation of automobiles for the Speaker and for Cabinet officers. Why, gentlemen know that when we want to see a Cabinet officer we have to go to his place of business—to his office. We have to go at a certain hour, too, or you will find him out at lunch. It is hard to locate one of them. It is also hard to locate a chief clerk. They are at lunch if you go there at 11.30 o'clock, and they are frequently at lunch when you return at 2 o'clock or 3 o'clock. They eat too much. [Laughter.] If they would cease devoting so much of their time to devouring lunches, they would help to solve the problem of high cost of living in this Nation. [Laughter.]

But again, I want to ask if the expense of maintaining that motor-propelled passenger vehicle is so trivial, would the gentleman have any objection to striking that provision from the bill? If it amounts to nothing, let us take it out; but if it amounts to something, let us stand up like men and take the responsibility for our action. Will the gentleman accept an amendment striking out the words—a motor-propelled passenger vehicle, to be used only for official purposes—

So that it will read—including maintenance and repair of automobile mail wagons?

Mr. GOOD. No; I will not.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman will not agree to that?

Mr. GOOD. I will not.

Mr. RUCKER. Then it does seem to me that the gentleman's argument is hardly sincere. If it is such a trivial expense, why include it here? Let me call attention to the fact that in connection with this automobile business we must also furnish a chauffeur, and a shame that has grown up by reason of this improper appropriation has been witnessed by every man on this floor. During the recent war we saw men who were drafted and taken from home to help fight the battles of this Republic, who were detailed to drive automobiles for men who were not their superiors except in rank. [Applause.] I never voted to drag the boys from home in my district to bring them to Washington to sit in a machine at the street curb waiting for some titled man to step from a building, and then open the door for him, put him in, cover him up with a laprobe, and take him where he wanted to go. It is an outrage to do it, it is an abuse of authority, and this House is primarily responsible for these conditions by making it possible for these gentlemen to operate Government-owned machines. I am opposed to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, we have gone into this matter in the past with regard to automobiles for Cabinet members and for the Speaker of the House. It is due to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] to say that while he was the Speaker of this House, so far as I know, he never asked the Committee on Appropriations for a dollar for an automobile; but it is to the credit of the House that it recognized the fact that he was one of the great officials of this Government, and that he and his family, because of the great duties that devolved upon him and upon them, should have an automobile at Government expense, and we gave it to him. [Applause.] And I thought this question was behind us.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I am in favor of every Cabinet officer having an automobile and having it taken care of at Government expense. It is the only decent thing to do, and the amount we would save in depriving these officials of Government automobiles is a mere bagatelle. The fact is that by doing so a real saving will be effected, for we provide for the transaction of business along business lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. RUCKER. I move to strike out, in line 7, page 5, the words "a motor-propelled passenger vehicle to be used only for official purposes."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RUCKER: Page 5, line 7, after the word "of," strike out "a motor-propelled passenger vehicle to be used only for official purposes."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question being taken; on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 9, noes 65.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOREIGN INTERCOURSE.

For the salary of an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Finland, at the rate of $10,000 per annum from February 1 to June 30, 1920, inclusive, $4,166.66.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph that it is not a deficiency, and it should properly come in some other appropriation bill than this, if in any. It shows on its face that it is not a deficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] on the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, just a statement in regard to the facts. We have no minister to Finland. Practically all other countries have already appointed and accredited ministers to Finland. The Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill that has just passed the House carries such a provision for the next fiscal year. It was the opinion of the Secretary of State that the United States would be greatly hampered if we did not immediately have a minister in that country. It is now a republic. I realize the fact that because the office has not been established in some prior Diplomatic bill this appropriation is not in order. It is subject to a point of order; but in justice to what we thought was due the Government of the United States, to our manufacturers, and our people, whose interests would be advanced by having this minister appointed now, we carried the provision in the bill. I admit that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is it not true that Finland is perhaps the most central point for obtaining information as to Russia and the other contiguous disturbed sections of Europe?

Mr. GOOD. Unquestionably, that is true.

Mr. SNELL. Is it not a fact that we need an American minister there to look after the interests of Americans who are there?

Mr. GOOD. Unquestionably.

Mr. SNELL. We are doing it to protect our own people.

Mr. GOOD. Certainly. It would not have been put in there for any other purpose.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Is it not clear that we will have a minister to Finland after the 1st of February?

Mr. GOOD. We will not have a minister there unless we appropriate the money.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If you appropriate the money you will have him?

Mr. GOOD. That is quite likely.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. And you will need this money to pay him?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Here is an urgent need?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Is not that a conjectural or anticipatory deficiency?

Mr. GOOD. No; it is not a deficiency, because as yet the position has not been created.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I understand; but it is perfectly clear that they will need this money.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Supplementing the inquiry heretofore propounded by the gentleman, is not Finland the very best place through which contact with Russia may be consummated and from which information as to Russian conditions may be obtained?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly. It was a part of Russia until the Republic was set up there in 1917.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And we have no accredited diplomatic agent in Russia now?

Mr. GOOD. We have a commissioner, but not a minister.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We have no diplomatic agent on Russian territory, have we?

Mr. GOOD. I think he does perform a diplomatic function, but he is not of the rank of a minister.

Mr. MONTAGUE. He is not an ambassador or minister?

Mr. GOOD. No; he is not.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is not Gov. Francis still ambassador to Russia?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have never seen any account of his resigning.

Mr. GOOD. I think he is not in Russia now.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; I know he is not in Russia now, any more than Mr. Fletcher is in Mexico.

Mr. GARNER. Have not they a custom by which they evade the law—which says that a diplomatic representative can not remain away from his post of duty longer than a certain length of time—by bringing them here and assigning them to duty here, where their duty in certain instances is simply to be here and draw their salaries?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It was said that Ambassador Fletcher was here to consult with the administration authorities about the condition of affairs down in Mexico. I want to ask a question. Is not Finland a part of Russia?

Mr. GOOD. No; it is a Republic.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How did it come to be a Republic?

Mr. GOOD. They set up a separate form of government in 1917, and it has been recognized by all the powers as an independent Republic.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did the United States ever formally recognize the Republic of Finland?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; we have recognized Finland as a Republic, and have appointed a diplomatic representative there, a commissioner, and Finland has sent a minister to the United States, and he has been accepted by us.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The New York Times says that we are going to recognize the soviet government of Russia. Suppose we do, will not they go down there and take this Republic by the neck and pull it back into Russia? [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. I think this might prevent anything of that kind. If we can help Finland by sending a minister there, we should certainly do so.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman how many people live in Finland.

Mr. GOOD. Three million five hundred thousand.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is one of the oldest countries in Europe.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; formerly a part of Russia.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. This great emergency was known to the Committee on Foreign Relations at the time they framed the Diplomatic and Consular bill, was it not?

Mr. GOOD. The last one?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; the one we have just passed.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If it was such an urgent matter, of such great importance, why did not that committee have this item in that bill?

Mr. GOOD. It would have been subject to a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. It would have been no more subject to a point of order in that bill than it is in this bill.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman understands that the Diplomatic and Consular bill which we have just passed does not become effective until July 1 next.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but it could have been made effective at once.

Mr. GOOD. The Department of State chose to ask for a deficiency in the regular way, and it would have been subject to a point of order on either bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose this anarchistic, bolshevistic, soviet Government of Russia should divide the country up into various republics containing not over 3,500,000 people, like Finland is, would the gentleman insist that an emergency arose whereby we should provide a minister for each one of those republics?

Mr. GOOD. That would depend upon whether we recognized the soviet governments and accepted their ministers. If we did, we would be almost compelled under the laws of civilized nations to send a minister there. That is international law and the rule of comity between nations requires it, and I do not think we should abrogate it.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman from Iowa think it will behoove us to keep as far as possible from the Lenin and Trotski powers now controlling Russia?

Mr. GOOD. I do not think that has anything to do with this matter.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I understand the gentleman to say that the Department of State preferred to ask for this as a deficiency "in the regular way," and yet I understand the gentleman to say that this is neither a conjectural nor an actual deficiency.

Mr. GOOD. Unquestionably that is true.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then it is not "in the regular way"?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What the gentleman from Iowa said was that the Department of State preferred to ask for it in the deficiency bill instead of having it put in the Diplomatic and Consular bill, where a provision making it immediately available would have made it subject to a point of order. I want to say that the Republic of Finland stands as a bulwark against the Bolshevism of Russia. It has been recognized by nearly all the great Governments—Great Britain, France, Norway, Denmark, Italy, and every great power, also the United States. We have there a commissioner, but we should have a minister. A minister will aid in promoting the commerce of this country, and no point of order should be made against it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, and I insist on it. It is clearly not a deficiency item, and is so admitted by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. GOOD. That point of order I do not think would lie against this item. There may be a point of order that would lie against it, but that is not it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not germane to this bill or any item in it; that it is not authorized by law and is not a deficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on the ground alone that it is not authorized by law.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the quota of the United States as an adhering member of the International Railway Congress for the year ending April 15, 1920, $400.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this item. Is there any authority of law for these things? If the gentleman from Iowa says that there is, I will not bother him to look it up.

Mr. GOOD. This matter is all provided for by treaty and our legal obligations are fixed by that treaty. We are members of the International Railway Association.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Why was it that the Committee on Foreign Affairs did not carry this item in the regular way?

Mr. GOOD. The House bill carries the items, but the Senate bill did not carry them, and they went out in conference. They did not go out because they were not provided for by the treaty. It was recognized, but the items went out, as I understand it, because there was a feeling that we should not be members of this International Railway Council. We have been members for years, and under the treaty we must give one year's notice of our desire to withdraw. We have never served that notice and we have never paid our obligation. The Interstate Commerce Commission says that this is the only source of reliable information that is very valuable to them, to aid them in assembling figures with regard to the railways of the world outside of the United States, and they want the United States to continue as a member; but this is to pay the debts for the years that we have been members and have been receiving information as adhering members.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I want to take advantage of this situation to again call attention to the fact—and I shall continue to do so—that where people do not get an appropriation from one committee they go to another committee. I will illustrate it in this instance. These items the gentleman says were in the last bill as it passed the House. They were stricken out in the Senate, and in conference the House conferees yielded to the Senate on that amendment striking them out. These people now go to a different committee, which is the Appropriations Committee, and this identical bill will go to a different committee in the Senate, and there will be different conferees, and thereby these people will get a law from Congress that they could not get in the orderly way. This may have been in line with the gentleman's procedure last summer when he was undertaking to create the impression that he was trying to economize, but he is taking it back now, just as he will take it back, as well as a good many other things, next December, which he is trying to economize on now.

Mr. GOOD. This is for prior years, and so far as I am concerned, it does not make any difference what a committee of the Senate does. If there is the legal obligation on the part of the United States, and that is presented to a committee of the House, as a general rule that committee has recommended that that obligation be discharged by making the appropriation. Here is a legal obligation. How in the name of common sense any committee can stand up for a minute and say that we ought not to make an appropriation to pay our debts, I do not understand. We should be the last Nation to repudiate our debts.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has been a Member of this House about the same length of time that I have. I know that the Committee on Foreign Affairs has abrogated two treaties since I have been a Member of this House by declining to make appropriations. Do I understand the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to say that if the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House should decline to make an appropriation, although it was authorized by a treaty, that that committee, having sat upon the subject and decided not to make an appropriation, if that fact was brought to his attention, he would bring it in here in the form of a deficiency?

Mr. GOOD. If any committee of the House refuses to make an appropriation to discharge a legal and just obligation of the Government, where the Government has received the benefits that that obligation created, I believe the Committee on Appropriations are true enough in their Americanism to bring in a deficiency to pay the Government's debts when the matter properly comes before it.

Mr. GARNER. This is the first time that the Committee on Appropriations or its chairman has ever taken that position. Mr. Fitzgerald did not take that position. Mr. Fitzgerald took the position that when a matter was legitimately presented to a committee having original jurisdiction and that committee decided it was not wise to appropriate for it, he would not hear its advocates to consider a proposition to make it a deficiency.

Mr. GOOD. I think the gentleman, when he says this is the first time the Committee on Appropriations has taken the position—but be that as it may, so long as I am chairman of that committee I will never stand for the Government repudiating a single debt, not a dollar of its just obligations, no matter what the other committees may do. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. And no one else wants to do that, but I do not think the gentleman from Iowa will presume that other committees of this House are less virtuous than he is or less patriotic.

Mr. GOOD. I have made no such assumption.

Mr. GARNER. And if they decline to do a thing their judgment ought to be equally as good as his and they ought to be considered just as patriotic. Although I am not a member of any committee on appropriations, I protest against the Committee on Appropriations of this House undertaking to usurp the powers of the other appropriating committees where they have considered an original item and decline to appropriate for it.

Mr. GOOD. We have not done that.

Mr. GARNER. I would do this: I would constitute the Appropriations Committee the only appropriating committee in the House, and in that way take away the jurisdiction of the other appropriating committees.

Mr. GOOD. No committee of the House has ever declined to appropriate for this service. The Foreign Affairs Committee reported out the appropriation. It was the committee of the Senate that declined to appropriate for it. The matter was brought to our attention, and I am sure there is not a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House who would not say amen to the action of the Committee on Appropriations in reporting out this appropriation to pay a just and legal obligation of the Government.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I simply want to say to the gentleman that members of the Foreign Affairs Committee told me that the representative of the State Department informed that committee of the fact that he had submitted this estimate to the Appropriations Committee, and that that was why they did not consider putting it in their bill which they have reported. That is what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] informs me.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to corroborate what the gentleman has said and to remind him that for many years the Committee on Foreign Affairs has uniformly reported out this little item of $400, and it was carried in the bill which passed the House within a week.

Mr. GARNER. Why was it the Foreign Affairs Committee yielded on these items to the amendment of the Senate?

Mr. ROGERS. I was not a conferee, and I can not answer the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia insist on his point of order?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I did not make the point of order. I reserved the point of order, and I withdraw the reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For subscription of the United States as an adhering member of the International Prison Commission and the expenses of a commissioner, including preparation of reports for 1920, $2,550.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that section.

Mr. GOOD. That is in the same condition. That commission was established a good many years ago, and it was initiated by the Government of the United States in 1871. We have been members of that commission ever since, but there seems to have been no appropriation for this current year.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What committee has been appropriating for this commission heretofore?

Mr. GOOD. That is carried in the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. How is it that the Committee on Appropriations takes jurisdiction of these diplomatic and consular matters? This is certainly not a deficiency.

Mr. GOOD. I am not sure that the House last year carried this item in the bill, but it is clearly a deficiency; it has not been appropriated for and we owe the obligation.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. A deficiency arises when an appropriation is made which turns out to be insufficient or which is wasted by the executive functionaries charged with its expenditure. This is an appropriation proper to be made by the committee having jurisdiction. This is a plain case of usurpation of jurisdiction by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, I think not. The amount in this case is so many francs per million people of population. Now, that is all provided for in the treaty. We created this International Prison Commission. This commission was created at our instigation and we have been adhering members of it all along, and we have paid every year our part of the expense of the work of this commission. Now, our part for this current year is $2,550. That is fixed by the treaty. We can not cut it down. There is a deficiency there because no money has been appropriated for fulfilling our obligation.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Does the gentleman realize that he is stating a principle which, if lived up to, would allow the Committee on Appropriations to take over the jurisdiction of every other committee of this House?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, I think not.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If any other committee fails to make an appropriation, leaves it out temporarily, for instance, why the Committee on Appropriations through its deficiency subcommittee might undertake to say, "We must take care of the United States, these other committees are not doing so, hence we will make the necessary appropriation."

Mr. GOOD. No; if we appropriated $550 for the discharge of this debt when it took $2,550 to discharge it, that would be a deficiency and——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will say if we appropriate anything——

Mr. GOOD. So, therefore, there is a deficiency now of $2,550, because that was the amount of our obligation, and no part of it has been appropriated.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The original appropriation belongs to this Committee on Foreign Affairs, and that committee has failed to function, but there is no conjectural, or actual deficiency, or anything of the kind. Looking through the precedents—and I have had occasion to do that recently—I find very elaborate rulings on the subject of holding committees within their respective jurisdiction. A very large part of one volume of Hinds' Precedents deals with the jurisdiction of the committees. These committees should be held down to their jurisdiction and appropriate activities.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order, but later on shall insist upon having some of these usurpations stricken from the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia withdraws the reservation of the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

For stationery, including tags, labels, and index cards printed in course of manufacture, for the Treasury Department and its several bureaus and offices, $200,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order in order to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a question. I notice that of this $200,000 a part of it is to pay for tags. I just want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact, which I mentioned once before some time ago on the floor, that the Director of the United States Employment Service spent about $65,000 for a certain kind of useless tags or buttons which you put on the lapel of your coat and which have never been used, and they either have been thrown away or are still piled up down in the Department of Labor. None of this $200,000 is to go for that kind of tags, is it?

Mr. GOOD. No; none of this goes for anything of that kind, although there is a waste of money under this appropriation. The attention of the committee was called to an abuse with regard to the sending out of Liberty bonds. I hold here a very heavy manila envelope, which is about 12 inches square, which has six large gobs of wax upon it. This is a sample of the envelope used to send a little Liberty bond about one-fourth of the size or half the size of that envelope to the banks and subscribers all over the country. By actual weight, if that was sent as first-class mail, the evidence alone and wax would cost 6 cents. Of course, it was an unbusinesslike way of sending out Liberty bonds. The wax performs no service. Now, the department asks for $300,000, and we called attention to some of the facts in this connection before the committee, and we have cut out $100,000 of the estimates, and we served notice upon them that they must make an effort to practice some of the homely virtues of economy that business men all over this Nation are forced to adopt. They have already discontinued the use of the wax. I do not know how long they will continue the use of this big, heavy manila envelope when an envelope half the size or one-fourth the size, weighing one-eighth the amount, would carry it just as safely to its destination.

Mr. BLANTON. The chairman will also remember that the Secretary asked the Congress to allow him $10,000,000 to float the first Liberty loan, and that Congress saw fit to cut that half in two, and then after giving him only $5,000,000, one-half of what he asked for, without spending all of that, he had the first Liberty loan oversubscribed nearly double.

Does not the chairman think we could cut this $200,000 item in this particular section in half and still give plenty of money for the several little matters proposed in this appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. I think we have cut him to the quick on this appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. Would not the chairman be willing to accept that amendment?

Mr. GOOD. I would not, because in cutting it $100,000, in view of their present balances and the amount they have expended, I think we have cut as much as the circumstances will permit. I think we have, however, through the hearings, served notice that they must economize and cut out useless expenditures. And they have already abolished the use of this wax, which they have been buying by the ton.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman notices that it is for tags, labels, and index cards, $200,000.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; but this is for the whole contingent expenses of the Treasury Department.

Mr. BLANTON. Are you not willing to teach them a little economy down there as well as in other departments?

Mr. GOOD. We are. We are cutting $100,000 from this estimate.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take advantage of this to ask the committee's attention to the budget system, so that something may be in the RECORD that will drift over to the other end of the Capitol.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has the floor on the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. GARNER. I will reserve it again, then.

If we had a budget committee, this abuse of discretion that has been called attention to, using this heavy manila envelope and wax the gentleman speaks of, could not have possibly happened. And all we appropriate for it now is $100,000. In other words, all he has saved in this item would have been originally saved if we had had a budget system such as has been proposed.

Mr. GOOD. Undoubtedly the budget system will bring about great economies.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$200,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McFADDEN: Page 6, line 7, strike out "$200,000" and insert "$100,000."

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman how much of this appropriation for stationery is assigned to the bureau of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. GOOD. I can not say how much was assigned, but they do not expend very much. For the fiscal year 1919 the Comptroller of the Currency expended $770.77.

Mr. BLANTON. Most of that was probably because of communications to the gentleman who now has the floor.

Mr. McFADDEN. I want to say to the chairman in that connection that the Comptroller of the Currency must use a greater amount of stationery than that, because, as a matter of fact, during the past year he has sent out bulletin after bulletin challenging Members of Congress and criticizing them and boosting his own department. My thought in offering this amendment was to get information. My idea is that there must have been a good many thousands of dollars for stationery provided for the comptroller, because during the whole year, and especially during this month, he has sent out a letter or bulletin, criticizing a Member of Congress, to all of the national banks in the country; and he is frequently in the habit of sending out letters or bulletins and press notices, praising his own administration, to the banks of the country; and it seems to me that a great and useless waste of paper is taking place. Therefore I have offered this amendment to see whether or not some correction can not be made in this particular.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I will state to the gentleman that the matter of stationery in the Treasury Department is provided for under a general fund and that it is distributed through the stationery division to the various offices and bureaus of the department. To ascertain the exact cost of the amount of stationery that each officer or bureau of the department uses, you would have to go to the stationery division and get a statement of the amount advanced on requisition to that particular office or bureau.

Mr. McFADDEN. Does the gentleman concur in my judgment that this $770 does not cover the entire expense of the bureau?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I will say that it is comparatively small when you look at the immense amount of correspondence that that department is compelled to carry on.

Mr. McFADDEN. During the month of January John Skelton Williams had printed on the official letterhead of the Treasury Department, addressed to the officers and directors of national banks, 12 closely typewritten pages embodying an attack on a Member of Congress who, in the discharge of his duties as a Member of Congress, saw fit to criticize his administration as Comptroller of the Currency. This letter was addressed to the officers and directors of national banks, and would indicate from its phraseology that it had been sent to all the national banks in the United States, which is simply a rehash of former utterances which long since had been made a matter of public record. This letter was printed on paper evidently furnished the Treasury Department from appropriations made by Congress. The typewriting and mimeographing had also been compiled on Government machines, probably by persons engaged in the Government service. The envelope bears the imprint of the Comptroller of the Currency, Washington, and was probably addressed by some one in the Government employ. The special letters coming under my observation bear 6 cents in postage stamps. There is nothing to indicate who paid this postage. Much of the correspondence contained in this letter has been mailed to bankers and others throughout the United States during the past year in Government franked envelopes, in strict violation of the law, and it would seem to me right and proper that an officer of the Government who abuses or who has abused the franking privilege of this Government to the extent that this man has should be deprived by Congress of the right to continue further the use of this Government franking privilege for his own personal use and aggrandizement.

This matter is particularly pertinent at this time because of the present status in office of John Skelton Williams. Three times the President of the United States has seen fit to nominate him to the vacancy existing in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency and three times has the Senate of the United States refused to confirm his appointment. Any ordinary man under similar circumstances would have sense enough to relieve the President of the future embarrassment of continuing this appointment, but this gentleman evidently prefers to cling to the pay roll of the Government in the same manner that he has continued to travel upon free passes over the railroads of the United States, which passes he received when Director of Purchases and Finance of the Railroad Administration, and notwithstanding the fact he resigned this position about one year ago he continues to cling to the free transportation. Now that I have brought this matter to the attention of the Appropriations Committee, I trust that they will see to it in the future that the appropriations for stationery, at least during this great national crisis caused by the shortage of paper, will be discontinued so far as this department is concerned.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of boxes, book rests, chairs, chair cane, chair covers, desks, bookcases, clocks, cloth for covering desks, cushions, leather for covering chairs and sofas, locks, lumber, screens, tables, typewriters, including the exchange of same, wardrobe cabinets, washstands, water coolers and stands, and for replacing other worn and unserviceable articles, $3,000.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question or two.

A number of years ago in the city of New York we found in various departments of the city government various purchasing departments or bureaus purchasing supplies for the use of the city. We found, for instance, in the matter of brooms, a commodity, of course, used by all the departments all through our city government, that in one department those brooms cost, I remember, $1.25, and in another 75 cents—the same identical brooms. The difference in the cost of those brooms was due to a lack of system in asking for bids. Our city at once got busy, and we have now concentrated all the purchasing of supplies in one purchasing department, with the result that we have saved the city of New York thousands and thousands of dollars. I imagine that in this item and in other items of these various departments we will probably find that a specific item, like brooms, will be purchased by one department for one amount and by another department for another amount, and I am wondering if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in his effort for economy, has taken into consideration the possibility and the feasibility and the advisability of having some definite system by which these supplies can be purchased or by which contracts can be submitted?

Mr. GOOD. They have that system now. All the supplies are purchased through one central supply committee, and all of the departments go to that committee and get their supplies and pay for them to that committee out of their appropriations.

Mr. HICKS. I am very glad that has been done, Mr. Chairman.

Here is another point I would like to ask the chairman about. It is this item which covers typewriters. Now, of course, we have in the Government storehouses probably thousands of typewriters that were used during the war, and, of course, we have thousands of office desks and office chairs. Now, I understand there is some contract or some understanding or agreement made by this Government with the manufacturers of typewriters by which the Government must return those typewriters to the companies manufacturing them, and are forbidden to sell them to the consumers or the public. Now, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee just the nature of that, if he is aware of it?

Mr. GOOD. I did not quite catch the full import of the gentleman's question.

Mr. HICKS. We have had in our Committee on Naval Affairs an item pending of this kind—so much for typewriters—and when we made inquiry we found that there is a special contract between the Government and the manufacturers of typewriters by which these second-hand Government typewriters can not be sold to the private consumer. They must all be returned to the manufacturers.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] will yield, I may say that the hearings show that instead of doing that the General Supply Committee has a contract for repairing the machines. They have them repaired under a contract. They had one estimate submitted for $29, and instead of that they have been trying to cut it down to $11.

Mr. HICKS. Would it be possible for the gentleman from South Carolina to go to a department of the Government, knowing that there are thousands of these typewriters on hand and not in use, and purchase one of these typewriters from the Government direct, or would he have to go and deal with the manufacturer?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have no information other than that supplied by the representatives of the departments in the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations. Their statement is that they are not now purchasing. Mr. Myers, of the Treasury Department, said this:

> The Government is practically purchasing no typewriters. We are purchasing them from bureaus that went out of existence since the war.
> Those machines have been turned over to a contractor to be repaired, and as they have a demand from a department for a machine they issue that machine.

Mr. HICKS. My inquiry goes to the sale of these machines to the general public.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I say I do not know as to that, but I think it would be exceedingly unwise for the Government to sell them when there is such a demand for them from the departments.

Mr. HICKS. There must be many thousands more than what the Government can use.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the departments, through the General Supply Committee, make contracts annually for supplies, such as typewriters. They also provide in the contract that the machine that has become badly worn may be turned in at a stated price in part payment for a new machine, or it may be repaired at a stipulated price.

These contracts are made annually and regularly through that channel. No department can sell such property to the public except under the terms prescribed by the law, which would be for a turning in by notice on publication and sale by auction. The funds then would go back into miscellaneous receipts, so that there is no margin here under the ordinary course of procedure for a diversion of any of this property to any channel if the parties in charge of the contracts and of the bureau follow the regulations and the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> For washing and hemming towels, purchase of awnings and fixtures, window shades and fixtures, alcohol, benzine, turpentine, varnish, baskets, belting, bellows, bowls, brooms, buckets, brushes, canvas, crash, cloth, chamois skins, cotton waste, door and window fasteners, dusters; flower-garden, street, and engine hose; lace leather, lye, nails, oils, plants, picks, pitchers, powders, stencil plates, hand stamps and repairs of same, spittoons, soap, matches, match safes, sponges, tacks, traps, thermometers, toilet paper, tools, towels, towel racks, tumblers, wire, zinc, and for blacksmithing, repairs of machinery, removal of rubbish, sharpening tools, street car fares not exceeding $250, advertising for proposals, and for sales at public auction in the District of Columbia of condemned property belonging to the Treasury Department, payment of auctioneer fees, and purchase of other absolutely necessary articles, $3,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserves a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to some of these items mentioned in this paragraph. Take, for instance, "chamois skins." What use on God's earth has the Treasury Department for chamois skins?

Mr. GOOD. I suppose they are doing the same thing with them that they have been doing for a good many years. That is the language that has heretofore been used. I do not know if any chamois skins are now actually purchased or not.

Mr. BLANTON. The only use I ever have had for a chamois skin is to wash off my machine.

Mr. GOOD. I suppose it is used for cleaning windows and the metal fasteners and fixtures.

Mr. BLANTON. And "flower gardens" are mentioned also.

Mr. GOOD. Well, there is a very beautiful flower garden down around the Treasury Department, put there at public expense. Does the gentleman want to remove it?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; but they have enough highly paid flunkeys down there already to take care of that flower garden without having a special appropriation for it.

Mr. GOOD. The increased deficiency is caused by the increased cost of washing and hemming towels, and things of that sort. But the gentleman can point out the unbusinesslike methods in the department without hurting my feelings in the least.

Mr. BLANTON. And "thermometers." Does not the gentleman think that all of these items are a little overdone in all these departments?

Mr. GOOD. Possibly so. I did not buy them. But the gentleman will understand that we cut this item $1,000.

Mr. BLANTON. If there are certain items in here that they can get along without, when we are facing a $3,000,000,000 deficit, ought we not to strike them out—every article that they can get along without?

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I see an item here for "street hose." While the gentleman from Texas is interrogating the chairman of the committee, will he not ask about that item?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman certainly is not too modest or bashful to propound his own questions. [Laughter.]

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman was asking questions about these various things, and I thought I would give him an opportunity to ask a question about that.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not the kind of hose that the gentleman has in mind.

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation of the point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> For purchase of labor-saving machines and supplies for same, including the purchase and exchange of registering accountants, numbering machines, and other machines of a similar character, including time stamps for stamping date of receipt of official mail and telegrams, and repairs thereto, and purchase of supplies for photographic copying machines, $7,500.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is reserved.

Mr. BLANTON. This paragraph partly provides for the purchase of labor-saving machines. I want to ask the chairman if he is aware of the fact that in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing we have labor-saving machines not in use, which have been bought with the money of the people at great expense to this Government, and which if used would save labor to a substantial extent, and which can not be used because of the one fact that the labor unions in charge of that department will not permit this Government to use them? It is a case of the servants being more powerful than the master. Does the chairman know anything about that?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know to what extent that abuse exists.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman ever heard of it?

Mr. GOOD. I have heard something of it.

Mr. BLANTON. If it exists, is it not time for this Government to teach these employees that they can not run this Government?

Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentleman will take that up with the Secretary of the Treasury. There is where the saving must be effected. The Secretary of the Treasury is the man that spends the money. He is responsible for the expenditures under this appropriation. I am not claiming his appropriation has been expended with economy. I doubt it; but for some reason he needs more money. But these machines that we are providing for here are not machines for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing at all. They are to take the place of some old machines that are worn out. They tried to exchange one of their old machines for one of these "millionaire machines" that they are going to buy—that is the title of the machine—a great labor-saving device to be used in the mints, but were unable to do so.

Mr. BLANTON. Have they gotten permission from the unions to do that?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know about that.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to give the chairman of the committee a concrete case. The wife of a Member of this Congress, who represents a district not so very far from Washington, had occasion not long ago to visit the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in company with some other ladies. They were being shown through, and one of the employees showed a certain number of other employees working on certain matters of business, and then called attention to a little machine and said, "Now, there is a machine that could take the place of all of those employees, but we do not use it." This Congressman's wife asked why it was not used, and the employee said, "Why, these employees here will not permit it to be used. Their union opposes it because it would take the place of so many laborers employed in this building."

I want to say that if that is permitted longer to exist in this Government it is an insolent outrage on common decency, and if I occupied the position occupied by the chairman of this great Republican Appropriations Committee I would make it my business to see that that was corrected.

Mr. GOOD. We have no "Republican Appropriations Committee."

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, well, it is a Republican Appropriations Committee after all.

Mr. GOOD. It is an American committee.

Mr. BLANTON. It is controlled by the Republican steering committee.

Mr. GOOD. No; it is not controlled by any other committee.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DENISON. What would the gentleman from Texas do if he was President, or if he was the head of that bureau?

Mr. BLANTON. I would clean it up from top to bottom, and I would run it like I thought it ought to be run, labor unions to the contrary notwithstanding; and, if any union attempted to perform my duties and run the department for me, I would let them understand who was running that department.

Mr. DENISON. Then the gentleman is apparently of the opinion that the head of this bureau is not doing his public duty?

Mr. BLANTON. If he is prevented from using labor-saving machines by orders of unions, he is lying down, just like this Congress lies down and passes the buck, and the gentleman knows it as well as I do.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I rise only to say that I have no information as to what the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is now doing as to these so-called labor-saving machines, but when he was last before the Committee on Appropriations he stated that he was using these machines, and the present director is very much in favor of using every one of these so-called labor-saving machines.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman from South Carolina, while he is on his feet, give me some information?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will if I can.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. How is this a deficiency?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The chairman of the committee can inform the gentleman about that.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then I will ask the chairman of the committee.

Mr. GOOD. This is a deficiency because there is not money enough in the appropriation to purchase the things that are necessary to be purchased. They have an appropriation for this year of $7,500. Last year they had an appropriation of $10,000 and a deficiency appropriation of $10,000. When the chief clerk was before us there was an unexpended balance of only $466.18 for the rest of the year. The machines are wearing out. Supplies must be purchased all the time. They must have other machines to do this work or they must take on additional force. Now, they have found that these labor-saving devices do effect a saving to the Government in dollars and cents, just as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has stated.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Some committee has made an appropriation under this head heretofore?

Mr. GOOD. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill carries this item.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Now, this particular functionary or bureau wants to go out on a new line and get some more machines?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is what this is for—labor-saving machines and supplies for the same.

Mr. BLANTON. For the purchase.

Mr. GOOD. They are desiring to purchase machines to take the place of old machines that are worn out, and in some places they are purchasing machines of an improved type to take the place of the worn-out machines, which are of an older and less efficient type than the new ones which they desire to purchase.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. I think they ought to use the ones they have before we give them new ones.

Mr. GOOD. What is the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. That this is not a deficiency; that it is merely to purchase something new; to provide additional supplies; and I think we ought to use the machines that we have before we buy new ones.

Mr. GOOD. The same point of order has already been ruled on. There is an actual deficiency here.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not authorized by law.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. In what bill did the gentleman say this was carried?

Mr. GOOD. In the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That was passed only recently, was it not?

Mr. GOOD. It became a law in March, 1919, for this fiscal year.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. For what year is this appropriation intended to apply?

Mr. GOOD. This is for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. For the balance of this year?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Was it developed before the Committee on Appropriations that this department can not function until the end of the year without this money?

Mr. GOOD. That is what they say.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That their work will break down?

Mr. GOOD. They say they must have these machines, and they have only $466.18 balance on hand.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Are these labor-saving machines some entirely new machines?

Mr. GOOD. Some of them will be entirely new machines.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It is a new venture, then—a new policy on the part of this department?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no; it is not a new venture at all. The machines are new in the sense that they have not been used, and some of them will be new in the sense that they will be improvements over the machines which are now being used, that are worn out and will have to be discarded and replaced.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. This is a replacement of existing machines by other machines of the same character?

Mr. GOOD. They are mostly for the auditor's office, and the gentleman knows that of all the executive offices that have been overworked because of the war the auditor's office has suffered severely.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Is this Mr. Kram's office?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is, most of it, in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If it is in Mr. Kram's office in the Post Office Department, I know that is a very efficient department.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me to answer the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can only give the gentleman the information which was given by the representative of the department before the committee, that this money is to be used for type, ink, multigraph copies, broken parts, and miscellaneous expenses incident to the operation of the machines. It seems that it is to maintain the machines, and a deficiency has been incurred in that fund, leaving them a balance of only $466.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order against the paragraph on the ground that it is not a deficiency.

Mr. BLANTON. And not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did not make that one of his grounds originally.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, Mr. Chairman; but probably the Chairman did not catch it.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Iowa cite the Chair to the authority for the appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. The general provision of the law creating the department, providing its duties, how they shall function, carries with it incidentally the power to provide things necessary to carry on the work.

Mr. BLANTON. But not to buy every newfangled labor-saving machine that it may, and then not use it because the employees will not let it.

Mr. GOOD. Is it possible that we have a statute creating the great Treasury Department in this country and that when a typewriter breaks down or they want a new ribbon they can not buy it without coming to Congress?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that this is not a deficiency and that it is not authorized by law. The Chair has called upon the chairman of the committee to produce the law, and the chairman of the committee has not been able to put his hand upon it. The Chair is constrained to believe, however, that the fundamental law establishing this department must have been broad enough to authorize the purchase of the necessities for the proper conduct of the business. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order based on that ground.

Next let us consider the point that this is not a deficiency item. In the legislative appropriation bill for 1920 there is a provision substantially, if not exactly, in the same language carried in this bill. It carries $7,500 in amount. It appears that an estimate has been made by the department stating that the appropriation is insufficient and that an additional amount is necessary to carry the department through the remainder of the current fiscal year. The Chair is of the opinion that this constitutes a deficiency in the parliamentary sense as used in this House, and therefore overrules the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

For compensation to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, of such temporary employees (nonapportioned) as may be necessary to audit the accounts and vouchers of the bureaus and offices of the Treasury Department, $25,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is not a deficiency and that it is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the committee, cite the Chair to the law authorizing this provision?

Mr. GOOD. Section 169 of the Revised Statutes provides:

Each head of a department is authorized to employ in his department such number of clerks of the several classes recognized by law, and such messengers, assistant messengers, copyists, watchmen, laborers, and other employees, and at such rates of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year.

This language is the same language that was carried in the appropriation for this fiscal year wherein $25,000 was appropriated. They have asked for $35,000, and the committee gave them what it thought would be necessary for the Secretary of the Treasury to have this work done.

Mr. BLANTON. This item seeks to permit the Secretary of the Treasury to fix the compensation.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he read the statute in regard to clerks "apportioned for" and this is for clerks "not apportioned for." There is a vital difference.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman must have misunderstood me. The statute says "appropriated for."

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I understood the gentleman to say "apportioned for."

Mr. GOOD. If I so read it, it was misreading of the statute. The statute reads as follows:

Each head of a department is authorized to employ in his department such number of clerks of the several classes recognized by law, and such messengers, assistant messengers, copyists, watchmen, laborers, and other employees, and at such rates of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman, does that apply to clerks in audit; in other words, does the Auditor of the Treasury Department under that section employ clerks so competent that they can audit accounts of bureaus, and so forth?

Mr. GOOD. The Secretary of the Treasury is the head of the Treasury Department and the Auditor of the Treasury Department is under the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I understand.

Mr. GOOD. All his force comes within the provisions of the law.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Does the gentleman understand that the force in that section would be an expert force and come under the civil service?

Mr. GOOD. They are all civil service employees except the auditor. This does not provide for the salary of the auditor; that is carried in the legislative bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman cite us to the law that delegates the right of Congress to fix the compensation of the employees of the Secretary of the Treasury? That is what this paragraph seeks to do—to delegate one function of Congress to the Secretary of the Treasury in fixing the compensation of employees.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Section 169 of the Revised Statutes provides:

Each head of a department is authorized to employ in his department such number of clerks of the several classes recognized by law, and such messengers, assistant messengers, copyists, watchmen, laborers, and other employees, and at such rates of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year.

A case in point was raised in the House on March 23, 1906. The legislative appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and Mr. Hardwick, of Georgia, made a point of order that there was no law to authorize the proposed appropriation for one telephone switchboard operator in the Department of State. After debate the Chairman of the committee, Mr. Hopkins, of Illinois, held that "a telephone switchboard operator may be fairly classed as a sort of laborer, skilled laborer, within the spirit of the statute."

The Chair is of opinion that this case is covered by the law and that the appropriation is authorized by section 169 of the statutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, right there, will the Chair permit me to call his attention to the fact that this is for temporary employees, and is not for permanent employees, classified by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The statute does not say permanent or temporary, but "such other employees as may be appropriated for by Congress from time to time."

Mr. BLANTON. These are temporary employees, nonapportioned.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it, if it applies to this point of order.

Mr. BAER. It does not.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman will refrain.

Mr. BAER. It applies to all these points of order which are continually being made, delaying this bill. I wanted to know if they are going to continue to keep them up all day long?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not propound a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair, having examined the statute in the case, and the precedents, believes that this appropriation is authorized by law, and that it is a deficiency. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Would the Chair kindly permit me to reserve an exception?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I just want to reserve an exception.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand what that term means as applied to the proceedings of this House. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay and allowances prescribed by law for commissioned officers, cadets and cadet engineers, warrant officers, petty officers, and other enlisted men, active and retired, temporary and substitute surfmen, and one civilian instructor, $1,000,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. Does this carry any increase in salaries?

Mr. GOOD. As the gentleman knows, the Coast Guard have been recently returned to the Treasury Department and they are now receiving additional compensation.

Mr. BLANTON. Unauthorized by law?

Mr. GOOD. No; it is authorized by law, but it is an additional compensation over the compensation received before the war. It is a war-time compensation that is recognized by statute.

Mr. BLANTON. Is this increase embraced in the million-dollar appropriation authorized by law?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, I think everything that is in this bill with regard to the Coast Guard, at least this provision, is authorized by law.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the chairman state that he knows that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The paragraph itself states "for pay and allowances prescribed by law."

Mr. BLANTON. And it carries no increases?

Mr. GOOD. No; and the disbursing officer could not pay out a dollar of this appropriation unless it was authorized by law. He could not increase the pay.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Enforcement of the "national prohibition act": For the employment of additional officers, traveling and other necessary miscellaneous expenses to guard intoxicating liquors in bonded and other warehouses, and prevent violations of the "national prohibition act," $1,000,000.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if we have passed any legislation providing for the guarding of intoxicating liquors?

Mr. GOOD. We have passed some legislation at this session of Congress authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to enforce the so-called Volstead Act, and it is under that provision of law that they are asking for this money, and the guarding of the liquor is one of the methods by which the law will be enforced.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is a far stretch of the imagination to say that you are enforcing the law by guarding intoxicating liquors. We have passed many penal statutes, but this seems to be the only one for the enforcement of which we are appropriating money. I make the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If you do not guard it, might not citizens from Massachusetts get some of it?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I do not know that the appetite of the Massachusetts man is quite as keen for it as is the appetite of the gentleman's constituents in Texas. They seem to get it anyway.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, we drink buttermilk down there.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, section 2 of the Volstead Act provides:

SEC. 2. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, his assistants, agents, and inspectors shall investigate and report violations of this act to the United States attorney for the district in which committed, who is hereby charged with the duty of prosecuting the offenders, subject to the direction of the Attorney General, as in the case of other offenses against the laws of the United States; and such Commissioner of Internal Revenue, his assistants, agents, and inspectors may swear out warrants before United States commissioners or other officers or courts authorized to issue the same for the apprehension of such offenders, and may, subject to the control of the said United States attorney, conduct the prosecution at the committing trial for the purpose of having the offenders held for the action of a grand jury.

This million dollars is for the enforcement of the national prohibition act. It can not be expended for any purpose other than for the enforcement of the very act that section 2 of the Volstead law provides should be enforced by the Internal Revenue Commissioner. He estimated $2,000,000 to enforce that act in addition to the $2,000,000 carried in the act, but the committee felt that a considerably less sum than that would be adequate, especially in view of the fact that there must be some additional legislation if the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall hold under the present law he has not sufficient authority to force the owners of the liquor to concentrate it in a few warehouses. There are 350 bonded warehouses, 300 distillery warehouses, and about 26 special warehouses, besides a few others.

It is obvious that this liquor ought to be concentrated in a few warehouses, where it can be guarded without great expense. If we throw open these bonded warehouses and let everybody go there and get what liquor they want, does the gentleman think that would be the enforcement of the law that was contemplated?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, that is not the question at all. Just as soon as you pass some legislation authorizing the concentration of these intoxicating liquors in certain bonded warehouses I will vote for any appropriation to enforce it, but I respectfully submit to the Chair that as yet we have passed no legislation authorizing the guarding of intoxicating liquors.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have taken the trouble to look up the question, and good authority holds that the commissioner does have the power to compel this liquor to be concentrated in a less number of warehouses.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Once more I suggest to the gentleman and to the Chair that this is giving authority, and that they do not now have authority.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the national prohibition act was passed for the purpose among other things of preventing the sale and consumption of liquor. It is well known, of course, that there are millions of gallons of liquor stored in various warehouses all over the country. Now, it seems to me that it can be fairly argued that the law gives to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who is charged with the enforcement of the national prohibition act, the right to employ guards to guard that liquor in these various warehouses and prevent its being taken from the warehouses for the purpose of being consumed and sold, possibly, in violation of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman answer the Chair a question? If the gentleman's contention is correct that he would have ample power to do this, then why is it placed in the bill at all?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know just why the language was specifically written in the bill. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that it was really unnecessary to write it in the bill, because, as I construe it, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue would have the right to employ guards or take any other step that is necessary to prevent the sale of whisky or the taking of whisky from these bonded warehouses without his permit, because otherwise it can only be taken away from the bonded warehouses for the purpose of violating the national prohibition act. If guards are necessary to keep it from being taken away from the warehouses, then clearly the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, it seems to me, has the right to employ guards, and I think it is clearly authorized under the law.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I will yield.

Mr. DEWALT. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from Tennessee. Does he think that this provision has only in contemplation the guarding of liquors in storage in bonded warehouses?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, that is the main purpose, I take it, of this particular appropriation, although it says for the employment of additional officers, traveling and other necessary miscellaneous expenses.

Mr. DEWALT. If that is the main purpose, let us read the provision, and I call the attention of the Chair to the reading of the provision: "Enforcement of the 'national prohibition act.'" Then comes a colon. "For the employment of additional officers, traveling and other necessary expenses to guard intoxicating liquors in bonded and other warehouses, and prevent violations of the 'national prohibition act.'" Evidently by a legal construction of this phraseology it would have two purposes: First, to guard the liquors in bonded warehouses to prevent the removal thereof, and, secondly, prevent violation of the national prohibition act. Clearly two purposes are expressed. Now, if that be the intendment of this provision, then we have this anomalous situation, that this $1,000,000 may be in whole or in part appropriated and expended on the guarding of liquors in bonded warehouses, or under the provisions of this phraseology it may be totally or in part expended to prevent violations of the prohibition act. Now, is there a dual authority here in the Federal court with reference to a violation of the prohibition act, the Volstead Act, and also authority resting with the Internal-Revenue Department? I say yes, that is true, according to the tenor of the Volstead Act, but if this is intended solely for the guarding of liquors in bonded warehouses and to prevent the removal thereof, then it should be expressed possibly in these terms: "And other necessary miscellaneous expenses to guard intoxicating liquors in bonded and other warehouses and prevent violation of the removal of liquors from such bonded warehouses or illegal use thereof." Then it would confine it to the purpose intended by this act or by this phraseology. But if you leave it as it is now, then the whole million dollars might be appropriated entirely for the enforcement of the provisions of the Volstead Act other than the guarding of this liquor in these warehouses.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I agree with the gentleman that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue would have the discretion to use the million dollars for any purpose which he thought necessary to prevent violation of the national prohibition act.

Mr. DEWALT. Other than the removal.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Other than the removal of liquor in bonded warehouses, but the appropriation is made for the purpose of enabling the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to employ guards, and I think, as the gentleman says, that under its phraseology he would clearly have the right to use it in any way he may think necessary to prevent a violation of the national prohibition act.

Mr. DEWALT. And that was possibly in the mind of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Let me suggest, if the gentleman will pardon me, granting the contention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that would not go to the point of order, but only to the exercise of discretion by the department.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was just about to make that remark to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT]. Now, it is my contention, in addition, that liquor can not be taken out of the bonded warehouses unless it is taken out by permit from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as provided by law. Those who remove liquor from the bonded warehouses without permission of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue do so illegally, and they do so for the purpose of violating the national prohibition act. Why, is it not a fair construction to say that under the national prohibition act Congress has authority to give to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue an appropriation to employ guards to prevent the violation of that act by the removal of whisky from bonded warehouses?

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have not the floor.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I have the floor, and I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. I agree with the gentleman that the commissioner would have jurisdiction in bonded warehouses, but this provision and appropriation does not only provide for the employment of guards in the bonded warehouses but also provides for them in other warehouses. Wherein has the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or anyone any right or any authority or any jurisdiction to designate or appoint guards for private warehouses? There is nothing here that would preclude or prevent the Commissioner of Internal Revenue from appointing thousands of guards for all kinds of warehouses. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has only jurisdiction in the Government bonded warehouses, and nowhere else. He has no jurisdiction in any private warehouses. Consequently, the point of order that has been made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] should be sustained.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask some one of these gentlemen on the committee for what purpose are these liquors to be guarded? What are they going to do with them? Why are we going to spend a million dollars to guard intoxicating liquors, and for how long, and for what reason, and for what purpose? What is the Government going to do with it?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There are several reasons for this. First, the Government has a taxable interest in it; and, in the second place, under the national prohibition act the Government is going to spend millions of dollars for the enforcement of the law, hunting down those who are violating the law. Manifestly we ought to guard the warehouses, the sources from which the liquor is taken that is sold in violation of the law. It is unwise to spend millions of dollars to go around the country and arrest men for selling liquor and not make any effort to enforce the law by preventing it from getting out of the warehouses.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Is it clearly in evidence that the warehouses are not now guarded?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There is one civil-service employee at a warehouse, who is, of course, unable to guard a warehouse during the 24 hours of the day. As a result, nearly every day one of these warehouses is broken into and whisky taken from it. Now, as a matter of fact, this is what happens: The distiller is called upon to pay the taxes even if the liquor is stolen. I doubt seriously whether the Government can make him pay that tax if the question is taken to the courts. The Government claims it can. I seriously doubt when the Government has control of a man's property and he can not get to it himself, and we fail to guard it, we can make him pay $6.40 a gallon tax on liquor which is stolen. We have two reasons for guarding it, namely, to protect property in which we have an interest to the extent of the tax; and, second—and this is the principal reason—to prevent it being taken from the warehouses and having it sold in violation of the law.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact that all that applies to the bonded warehouses controlled by the Government, and that the Government has no jurisdiction over any private warehouse?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Over warehouses that are under control of the Government.

Mr. SABATH. Those are bonded warehouses.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes. There are different kinds of warehouses. These are all designated as bonded warehouses. They make a distinction between distillery warehouses and general bonded warehouses. I know the gentleman is aware of that, coming from the State of Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. We have not many bonded warehouses in the State of Illinois, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They make some distinction between the warehouses of the distillers and warehouses centrally located, which are not called distillers' warehouses. There are in all about 800 warehouses under the control of the Government.

Mr. SABATH. They are under the jurisdiction of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The act of October 28, 1919, known as the national prohibition act, contains ample provision for its enforcement. In sections 2, 3, and 6 of Title III of that act there are numerous provisions in regard to warehouses for storage and distribution of alcohol to be used for other than beverage purposes. Under the general provisions of section 13 and following sections of Title III the commissioner has power to issue regulations respecting the establishment, bonding, and operation of industrial alcohol plants, denaturing plants, and bonded warehouses authorized therein, and the distribution, sale, export, and use of the alcohol that may be necessary, and so on. Under section 38 of Title II of that act the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Attorney General of the United States are respectively authorized to appoint and employ assistants, experts, clerks, and other employees, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, to enforce this act. It is therefore very clear that there is ample law for enforcing the prohibition act and that an appropriation for enforcing the act is in order.

This paragraph, however, in the bill introduces phraseology which is not contained in any part of the act, so far as the Chair is able to ascertain. Whether or not the law as it now stands authorizes the appointment of guards the Chair is unable to state offhand. Whether or not the commissioner would be amply justified under the law as it stands to employ all the guards he wishes to employ the Chair does not know and is not now called upon to decide. It seems to the Chair that it may be fairly contended that the introduction here of this new language providing explicitly for the employment of guards introduces new legislation. In fact, there would seem to be no other adequate reason for the new language. If it accomplishes this purpose it is subject to a point of order.

The Chair therefore sustains the point of order of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOOD: Page 10, after line 12, insert:
"Enforcement of the national prohibition act: For the necessary expenses in preventing violation of the national prohibition act, $1,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question or two.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, this is in addition to the $2,000,000 appropriation that was made here in the last appropriation bill. Am I right?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. When did these gentlemen assume jurisdiction? When did that office go into effect? If I am not mistaken, was it not on January 16? Is not that true?

Mr. GOOD. The national prohibition act became effective January 16.

Mr. SABATH. Prior to that this new organization had no jurisdiction?

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman means under the war-time prohibition provisions of that act?

Mr. SABATH. No. This new prohibition organization under the prohibition act went into effect January 16. Is not that correct? The old organization in the Internal-Revenue Bureau up to January 16 had jurisdiction in all these matters relative to the collection of taxes and the enforcement of the war-time prohibition act.

Mr. GOOD. The national prohibition act itself carried $2,100,000 for the enforcement of the act, and it placed upon the Attorney General and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the duty of enforcing that act.

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. One hundred thousand dollars of that went to the Department of Justice, and the remainder went to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. SABATH. Yes, sir.

Mr. GOOD. Now, as to how much of the $2,000,000 was expended, if any, under the war-time prohibition provided for in that act I am not advised.

Mr. SABATH. Was the appropriation available for the enforcement of the war-time prohibition? Was it not available only for the enforcement of the national prohibition act?

Mr. GOOD. It specifically states that it is available for the enforcement of the provisions of the act.

Mr. SABATH. When was this commissioner appointed who now has jurisdiction? When did he assume jurisdiction?

Mr. GOOD. Do you mean the Commissioner of Internal Revenue?

Mr. SABATH. No; the enforcement commissioner.

Mr. GOOD. January 16, as I am advised.

Mr. SABATH. Was any evidence given as to how much money was expended prior to January 16; and if so, by whom, and for what purposes? Is there any evidence at all?

Mr. GOOD. They have been expending a certain amount of money, and a good deal of money, in preparing their organization to enforce the law. Just how much they have expended this committee is not advised. The matter is one where, by the very nature of things, it is going to be difficult to say how much will be required to enforce the act.

Mr. SABATH. I will be brief. What I desire to know is this: How much has already been expended by this new organization out of the $2,000,000?

Mr. GOOD. I do not believe I can give the gentleman that information.

Mr. SABATH. Then, on what do you base your recommendation?

Mr. BLANTON. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SABATH. This is the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is proceeding in order.

Mr. BLANTON. On what?

The CHAIRMAN. On the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. BLANTON. He did not ask to be recognized in opposition to it.

Mr. GOOD. The item carried is on the estimate of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. He estimated that the total expense of enforcing this law for the balance of this year, including the guarding of the liquor, would be $2,000,000, in addition to the $2,000,000 appropriated. The guarding of the liquor he considers one of the important methods by which the law can be enforced, and that without guarding the liquor it can not be enforced.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for another five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. They asked for $2,000,000 additional, giving them $4,000,000. The committee reported out $1,000,000. They have a force already organized that will take up all of their $2,000,000 carried by the act without providing anything for the guarding of this liquor, and thefts are being committed every day in the removal of liquor from bonded and other warehouses.

Mr. SABATH. I do not object to the expenditure of a reasonable amount, or any amount that will be required to enforce this act; but I do not believe that even if you appropriate this additional $1,000,000 that is asked for, and then an additional $10,000,000, you will be able to enforce this legislation, this prohibition law.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SABATH. In a minute. And for that reason I believe we ought to know about how much it will take, in the estimation of these gentlemen, at least this year, in attempting to enforce this legislation.

Now, there are some gentlemen who will jump up almost any moment on the floor—sometimes ten or twenty-five times during a day—objecting to the expenditure of 15 cents, or $15, trying to shout "economy!" I do not believe in false economy, although I am a believer in real economy. I believe that this is only a beginning. Within a short space of time there will be a demand for an additional million, or two or five million, and I am satisfied that no matter how many millions you appropriate, you will not be able to enforce this prohibition act, because the people of this country, the people of America, are against this unjustifiable prohibition act, and for that reason I believe that we should consider, and consider well, before we start to vote out million after million to enforce such a law, which is against——

Mr. BLANTON. Against the Constitution!

Mr. SABATH. Yes, sir; against the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman offered an amendment to reduce the amount?

Mr. SABATH. I have not. I am against any amount until more information is furnished me as to how much has already been expended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. The chairman stated, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], that it is impossible at this time to estimate how much it will take to enforce this law. At least that is the answer I understood him to give. Is that correct? That is, the officials of the department have been unable to estimate the amount?

Mr. GOOD. I do not understand that any man can tell what it will cost to enforce the prohibition law.

Mr. IGOE. Has the committee allowed the department the amount requested by them?

Mr. GOOD. No. The department asked for $2,000,000 as deficiency, and the committee recommended $1,000,000.

Mr. IGOE. Why did the committee take that position?

Mr. GOOD. If a guard was provided for each warehouse all the time, with the appropriation already made, carried in the act, together with the $1,000,000, they would have enough money to guard all the warehouses in which spirits are stored. Now, if we are going to guard each warehouse with a military company or regiment, that is a different proposition.

The committee also had in mind that some action must be taken soon with regard to concentrating this liquor into a few warehouses instead of being scattered, as it is now, in about 800 warehouses. We must remember that if this liquor is withdrawn for scientific or medical purposes, the person who withdraws it pays a tax of $2.40 a gallon to the Government; but if the liquor is stolen, then the owner must pay the Government a tax of $6.40 a gallon. Now, the Government has a dual interest in this liquor. It is first to see that the tax is paid, and next to enforce the law and to see that the liquor is not used in violation of the law.

Mr. IGOE. The reason I asked the question was this: I noticed the statement in the press the other day that the Anti-Saloon League was raising $25,000,000 from the people of the United States to see that this law was properly enforced; and it seems to me that it is the duty of the Government, through its officers and officials, to enforce the law and not rely upon private concerns or private individuals. Now, why should it be necessary for a concern to raise $25,000,000, when this Government ought to be able to provide the funds and the agents in sufficient amount and number to enforce the law properly?

Mr. GOOD. Of course, I can not answer that.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman permit me to answer the question?

Mr. IGOE. No; I do not yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I can answer the question.

Mr. IGOE. I want to ask another question. The gentleman said something about having the military to enforce the law. The gentleman does not think we have reached that point yet, does he?

Mr. GOOD. No; I certainly do not.

Mr. IGOE. At least not at this time.

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman speaks of concentrating these liquors. Under what process of law could we concentrate private property?

Mr. GOOD. I am told that under the statutes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has power to require the concentration of the liquor.

Mr. GARNER. Could he require a man to take his liquor out of a warehouse and transport it 200 miles? In other words, under what provision of the statute could a man be required to do that?

Mr. GOOD. The general law, with regard to bonded warehouses, I understand, is broad enough. I do not have the law before me. I looked it up the other day in connection with some other Members of the House, and it was the general opinion that there was authority for the concentration of the liquor in the bonded warehouses. I will say to the gentleman that it might be necessary for the Government to pay the expense of the transportation incident to that concentration. I am not so sure about that, but rather think such might be the case. We may need additional legislation.

Mr. GARNER. I will ask the gentleman to put that statute in the RECORD this afternoon, or at some time, so that the Ways and Means Committee can have it, for we have under consideration the question of legislation regarding this bonded warehouse liquor, and so forth; and so far as anyone on the Ways and Means Committee has any information or even suggestion, there is no power in the present law by which the Internal Revenue Department can take charge of private property and move it from one county to another, or from one State to another, without the consent of the owner. Of course, if that statute exists already, we would like to know it. I merely ask the gentleman to put that law into the RECORD.

Mr. GOOD. The attention of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] was called to this large estimate for a deficiency and to the fact that if there was not already authority to concentrate this liquor in a few warehouses Congress ought to enact some law granting that authority, because $8,000,000 a year to enforce this law is, it seems to me, an unreasonable charge upon the Government, and that is what it means if these estimates are reliable. So the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] brought the statute. I do not know that I can put my hand upon it now. He pointed out to me that in his opinion the Internal Revenue Department had pretty broad powers, and the reading of it convinced him that the department has the power to concentrate the liquor in the bonded warehouses. The gentleman can get the reference to that statute from the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. GARNER. Let me say to the gentleman that I fully agree with him that there ought to be legislation on this subject, and I think it is the duty of this Congress before we adjourn to have some far-reaching legislation with reference to the liquors that are now on hand in this country. I think myself to take $6,000,000 a year, and that is what the Internal Revenue Department has asked for——

Mr. GOOD. No; $8,000,000.

Mr. GARNER. I did not know it was as much as that—to take $8,000,000 a year for the purpose of enforcing this statute is to my mind the most ridiculous proposition that has ever been submitted to Congress, although if we may judge by the activity of the Anti-Saloon League, from the newspaper reports, there are a great many people in this country, and very good people, too, who believe that the efforts that the Government might put forth, even with $8,000,000, will not be sufficient, and they are going to supplement it with $25,000,000 with which to enforce this law.

Mr. WALSH. Would it not be a good idea to turn this liquor over to the Anti-Saloon League?

Mr. GARNER. It ought to be turned over to somebody, so as to relieve the Government of this expense.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word. I take it that most of the $1,000,000 proposed by this amendment will be used, if appropriated, for guarding liquor in bonded warehouses. The truth is the man who owns liquor in a bonded warehouse is between the devil and the deep sea. He can not sell it for beverage purposes, he can not withdraw it for beverage purposes, he can not destroy it without paying the Government tax upon it. If somebody steals it from him, he is required to pay the beverage tax upon it. He can not make use of it in any way whatever except to let it remain in his warehouse at his risk, not the risk of the Government. This is under the action of the prohibition law and under the action or nonaction of Congress. Eventually there must be some disposition by Congress of this liquor. I doubt whether the Internal Revenue Office has the power, against the protest of the distillers, to move this liquor from one warehouse to another; but, as a rule, there will be no protest, because in this particular case the proposition is that the Government, forbidding the owner of the liquor to do anything with it at all except to pay the tax on it if he loses it and not permitting him to use it, not permitting him to destroy it, he will not object if the Government attempts to guard him from loss by seeing that nobody steals his whisky.

As long as the Government takes the position that it does, of the dog in the manger, on the subject—and I am not criticizing the Government for taking that position up to the present time—as long as it takes the position of the dog in the manger, it ought at least to guard the manger from theft. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I want to add this to what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois. The situation is this: We have 69,000,000 gallons of liquor, according to the last estimate of the department, in bonded warehouses. There are 400 bonded warehouses, 350 distillery warehouses, 26 general warehouses, and 28 special warehouses. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue can effect a concentration of this whisky in a few warehouses in only one way, and that is by refusing to guard warehouses except those designated by him, and thus bring pressure to bear upon the owners to move the whisky into certain warehouses. The difficulty is that in a great many cases this whisky has been sold, and the owner, the man who holds the certificate, can not be found. If it was owned by one individual, that individual would certainly do what the gentleman from Illinois has suggested—immediately transfer the whisky to a warehouse designated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The distillers have had a conference with the commissioner, and I know that in that conference they expressed an entire willingness to move it, and a great many not only expressed willingness to move it but to make the owner of the whisky pay the expenses of transporting it to the warehouse designated by the commissioner where their property might be protected. But while this would accomplish the removal of the greater part of it, in many instances it is impossible to locate the holder of the warehouse certificate, and if any portion remained in a warehouse it would require guarding.

Now, if we grant this appropriation the commissioner can be depended upon to do all in his power to bring about a concentration of the whisky in order to reduce expense and guard it and reduce the danger of its being stolen. Congress must take some action to arrive at a final solution of it, but until that is done the interest of the distiller and the interest of the Government demand that the Government take care of it. The distiller himself gives a bond to the Government insuring the Government against loss by withdrawal of the liquor. If it is stolen, the Government will seek to recover on the bond.

The appropriation will provide for about 2,000 men. Now we only have 400 men. With the 2,400 men they will have 3 men for each warehouse, so that there will be three shifts and a watchman for each hour of the 24. With all that precaution some of it may be stolen, but in a great measure it will afford sufficient protection. The way that liquor is now stolen trucks come up to the warehouse. A man can not carry away a barrel of whisky in his vest pocket. He must have an automobile to transport it. When they break into a warehouse they steal 8 or 10 barrels of liquor, upon which the Government loses the tax, while the distiller loses his property. I think in the interest of enforcing this law, and in the interest of justice to these people, this appropriation should be made.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in six minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in six minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the Congress that passed this prohibition law also passed an act for the enforcement of the law, and it is simply child's play, it seems to me, for this lawmaking body to hesitate about providing the means for a proper enforcement. This matter covered in this item is only a method of enforcement, and that is all. The disposition of the liquor in the warehouses will somehow be provided for later, but I am not discussing that now.

This is the thing I want to emphasize. The eyes of the world are on the United States of America, the first great Government of the people, by the people, and for the people that has put a beneficent law like this by orderly constitutional process on the statute books of the Nation. We owe it to ourselves for subjective reasons and objective reasons that we shall leave no stone unturned to properly enforce this law. [Applause.]

We must do it subjectively, because, I tell you—and every man in the United States who travels over the country knows it—that the same forces that sought to prevent the enactment of the prohibition law are now banded together with a vicious determination that is positively hideous trying to keep the law from being enforced.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPSHAW. As soon as I say this: I was about to say, as I said to a crowd of men not long ago about another measure which they said they would not obey if it were passed, that it makes a poor impression on Congress, which represents the American flag, to say: "If you pass this law, we will not obey it." A law passed in a country like ours must be obeyed until it is repealed by orderly governmental process. And so I say, as an American citizen, in all good humor, even if I could divorce myself from my well-known dry proclivities, it does not make a good impression on the country, now that this law has been passed, for any Member of this body to stand in this presence and say that we can not enforce the law that we have passed. Such a statement on the part of any Member of this lawmaking, law-abiding body, tends to encourage lawbreakers all over America.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPSHAW. Not until I get through. Now, some Member wanted to know why the Anti-Saloon League is raising $25,000,000 to enforce the law. I happen to know a good deal about the inner workings of that patriotic body. It so happens that it was the coordinating force of patriotic men who drew together the scattered friends of prohibition and who have done the job so well that they have brought national prohibition long before its most sanguine friends dreamed it could be done. And now they want to help their country that they have helped to redeem to enforce this wholesome law in order to preserve our youth, to preserve our self-respect—yes, and the respect of the onlooking world. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPSHAW. No; the gentleman will excuse me, but I must get this out. I want to give the information asked for, and here it is: It is plain as can be that it is going to cost the Government heavily to enforce this law, and if these patriotic men and women who have contributed to the support of the Anti-Saloon League wish voluntarily, unselfishly, to give their money, two-thirds of which is to be used for the Americanization of millions of foreigners who oppose prohibition and also for the enforcement of the law at home, and one-third of which is to carry the benefits of prohibition to the nations of the earth which are reaching out their pleading hands to us, then we ought in God's name to crown their unselfish efforts with praise instead of criticizing them on the floor of this House. The truth is, everybody knows that their efforts have been effective and that is why the foes of prohibition oppose their efforts now.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPSHAW. Yes.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. I just want to make this statement: I have heard more prohibition people say that they would not obey the law than I have heard it said by those who are opposed to prohibition.

Mr. UPSHAW. I answer the gentleman that it is curious that the very gentlemen, my good friends and colleagues, who on the floor of this House fought the enactment of this law are now the ones who oppose any measure to rightly enforce this law. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GRIFFIN and Mr. SABATH) there were—ayes 47, noes 18.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-eight Members present.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BEGG and Mr. GALLIVAN were appointed to act as tellers.

The committee again divided and reported—ayes 4, noes 98.

So the committee refused to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. One hundred and two Members have voted, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 75, noes 24.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. Ninety-nine Members voted. The Chair did not vote, but his presence makes 100, a quorum.

So the Good amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the estate of Charles L. Freer, deceased, late of Detroit, Mich., the amount of income tax paid by him on profit on the sale, in 1915, of 12,095 shares of Parke, Davis & Co.'s stock, $1,000,000 of the proceeds from the sale of said stock having been given to the Smithsonian Institution for the erection of a building to house the art collections presented to the Nation by Mr. Freer under deed of gift dated May 5, 1906, and the remainder having been paid by Mr. Freer for the purchase of additional objects which have been added to the collections and presented to the Nation by him, $13,252.21.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is not a deficiency and is not authorized by law.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point of order for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this is an unusual item in any bill. Mr. Charles L. Freer, of Detroit, through the course of his life made an extensive and a very expensive collection of beautiful paintings and objects of art which were presented to the National Museum. Subsequently he presented $1,000,000 for the construction of an art building in which to house his collection. It appears that the million dollars raised, which was presented, was raised by the sale of some stock in the firm of Parke, Davis & Co., of Detroit. I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I am hearing every word the gentleman says.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know, but I like to have undivided attention.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois always gets that from every Member of this House whenever he takes the floor to speak.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is very nice of the gentleman to say that. There was a slight profit upon the sale of this Parke, Davis & Co. stock, upon which an income tax was due. Congress passed an act specifically providing in terms that this tax should not be collected from Mr. Freer, referring to this transaction. I do not recall in what bill that was enacted.

Mr. GOOD. It was in the sundry civil appropriation act.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I did not expect to take the floor on this matter, and did not particularly inform myself. Congress did specifically legislate providing that this tax should not be paid by Mr. Freer. However, I presume before he knew the act was passed, and, for aught I know, before the act was passed, he made his return and paid the tax. Under ordinary conditions the Government would have refunded this money as being paid improperly. It would be like the collection of income tax from some other source, where the Government constantly makes refunds, under the general law, where the person has paid too much income tax, or collects the balance where he has not paid enough. In this case he had paid the tax. Congress had provided, as I have said, that he should not pay the tax, but because of technicalities, difficulties, I take it, in the way, the department has ruled that it can not refund this tax without further special act of Congress.

Congress having accepted this money, and having specifically provided that the profit tax should not be collected on the profit which was made by the sale of these bonds in order to turn the money over to the Government, it seems to me that we are reneging if, having taken the money, we now refuse to pay it back. That is all there is to it. If Mr. Freer had not paid the tax promptly, he would not have had to pay it at all. He paid the tax without being notified that Congress had remitted it; and now, as we have taken the money, under the circumstances it looks only fair to pay it back.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman from Illinois believe that there ought to be some limitation to the items which continually go into deficiency appropriation bills?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think this is a proper item in a deficiency bill, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from Illinois thinks that, I will withdraw the reservation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think it is a proper item in a deficiency bill. If it is anything, it is a deficiency.

Mr. BEE. I understand that the $13,000 is in the Treasury of the United States and that the United States will involve itself in no loss by its being paid back.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas withdraws his reservation.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the fact that an act of Congress was passed refunding this amount to the heirs of Mr. Freer. In an interview I had with an official of the Treasury Department I was informed that during the year 1918 $12,000,000 was paid into the Treasury on account of excessive taxation; in other words, illegal collections. Running back for a period of three or four years, perhaps there are millions of dollars now in the Treasury belonging to taxpayers. I was also advised the only way to refund the overpayments is by an appropriation in a deficiency bill. Has the chairman of the committee information as to when the Secretary of the Treasury will authorize the appropriations to repay the taxpayers from whom taxes were illegally collected?

Mr. GOOD. Well, there is an indefinite appropriation. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue under the law is authorized to refund taxes which have been illegally collected, and the commissioner is doing that; but this provision is necessary because in this case the tax was not illegally collected, but the tax was legally collected, and after it had been collected in the act of June 12, 1917, Congress directed a cancellation of the tax. Now, the authority to cancel the tax did not convey authority to remit the money already collected, so this is simply necessary now in order to correct the tangle into which we got at that time. If the act of June 12 had directed the return of the money collected, that would have been an end of it, but Congress acted on the assumption that the tax had not been paid and authorized the cancellation of it, whereas the tax had been collected, and it now requires an act authorizing the Secretary or the commissioner to refund it.

Mr. WATSON. I understand that; but in opposition to the gentleman's statement that the United States Treasury is authorized to refund an amount that has been illegally collected, I have a notice from the Treasury Department stating that in regard to the excess income taxes paid in 1916——

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes.

Mr. WATSON. The notice states that—refunding taxes illegally collected, hereafter to be made, when an appropriation is made——

Mr. GOOD. That is true; that is, for a tax collected more than three years ago it requires an appropriation, but when the tax is illegally collected, and the person from whom it was collected makes demands for its return because it was illegally exacted within three years from the time he paid it, then the commissioner is authorized under the law now to refund.

Mr. WATSON. Do I understand the money must remain in the Treasury three years before——

Mr. GOOD. No; he can make his demand the next day after he has paid it, or at any time within three years, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized to refund it; but if he does not make his demand until more than three years after he has paid it, then it requires an act of Congress.

Mr. WATSON. I am familiar with the statute, Mr. Chairman; but my contention is this, that the Auditor for the Treasury Department should notify the taxpayer of the illegal collection within the three fiscal years in order to avoid a special appropriation, which always causes delay. This procedure, I claim, is not fair or just to the taxpayer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS.

For payment to John M. Francis in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the relief of John M. Francis," approved December 30, 1919, $181.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is not a deficiency.

Mr. GOOD. It is not subject to the point of order. It is a special act of Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, it could be a special act of Congress, Mr. Chairman, and yet be properly provided for in other appropriation bills. Certainly it is not a deficiency item.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I think the gentleman will see he is mistaken. Here was a special act of Congress which ordinarily provides for the appropriation itself. When we pass a private bill to pay a certain sum of money we ordinarily make the appropriation in the act itself. But sometimes we do not, through indavertence. Now, in this case there was no appropriation made by the act itself, and under the general law which forbids the payment of money out of the Treasury without an appropriation, the Secretary of the Treasury is not authorized to pay the $181 which we have already provided should be paid. But we did not provide for it. Now, this is a deficiency item for the very reason it is now due under a special act of Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the distinguished gentleman from Illinois if a deficiency item proper is not a matter of expenditure that has already been incurred by some department of the Government——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not at all.

Mr. BLANTON. That it is an expenditure of money that has already been made and not money——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not at all. If so, we could not pass a deficiency bill which would wind up with the year. A deficiency item is an item to be expended during the present fiscal year.

Mr. BLANTON. For instance, what are known as the Sevier heirs have a claim 110 years old against this Government amounting to over $100,000,000. Suppose, perchance, they should get that claim through the Claims Committee and have it passed by Congress authorizing the payment to them of over $100,000,000; would that come in a deficiency bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If it was not in the original bill passed making an appropriation it would be in order on the first deficiency bill, because it was due. As soon as we pass an act providing money shall be paid, it is due. It is a deficiency item this year; and if not this year, next year.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman thinks this is a deficiency item?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think there is any doubt about it being a deficiency item. I am not interested in it in any way. I just noticed it.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Morgan City, La., post office: For completion (site), $1,800.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the chairman of the committee about that item. What is it for and what are the facts connected with it?

Mr. GOOD. This is authorized under the act of March 4, 1913. The authorization for the site was $6,000. Congress has already appropriated $4,200, but the Supervising Architect advises the committee that it will require the full amount of the authorization to pay for the site which has been selected—$6,000—and hence there is a deficiency of $1,800, and the department is anxious to complete the transaction, but can not complete it with this deficiency existing in the appropriation.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. This does not exceed the authorization?

Mr. GOOD. No, sir. The amount carried in the bill, together with the previous appropriation, is the exact sum authorized.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I simply wanted the matter explained, because it has been determined that we would not have any public-building bill at all.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, I would like to ask him in regard to the item immediately following that. It might save time to give us an explanation of that, too. I refer to the Philadelphia item.

Mr. GOOD. The Treasury Department has a general appropriation for this year of $800,000 for the repair of buildings. The value of the buildings on which these repairs are made runs into hundreds of millions of dollars. It embraces practically all the public buildings under the Treasury Department—about 1,200 in number. That appropriation is allotted, and the usual expense of repair can not be made out of it. It never has been a very large appropriation, but it takes care of the normal expenditure. The roof to the Mint Building in Philadelphia has been on there for some twenty-odd years. It was laid in cement in such a way that the slate has commenced to slide, and they are constantly stopping up the roof with tar and cement, using buckets to catch the water that is coming through the roof of the building. They estimated for $25,000, but the committee discovered that in that building they also proposed to expend $5,000 for pointing up the masonry. We gave them what we thought was necessary to put that roof in proper condition, because there is a decay going on, and a consequent loss in having the moisture coming through the walls.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Then this does not cover in any way an extension? It is purely for repair?

Mr. GOOD. Purely a repair item, that would not be taken care of out of the annual appropriation.

Mr. GARNER. As I understand, this is somewhat of a precedent in deficiency bills.

Mr. GOOD. No. It has been done every year, practically.

Mr. GARNER. In other words, then, the lump-sum appropriations for taking care of public buildings allocated to the Treasury is estimated for the public buildings in that year, and in the meantime if the situation arises where an appropriation should be made for the repair of a particular building, and your committee concludes it is in the interest of conservation of that building, you will consider the question of putting it in a deficiency bill? I wanted to get that right, so that each Member of Congress would know that he would have the right to approach your committee on the subject.

Mr. GOOD. The last deficiency bill, as I recollect it, carried an item of $100,000 to repair a part of one of the wings of the penitentiary at Fort Leavenworth that had been destroyed by fire after the regular appropriation bill had passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Philadelphia, Pa., Mint Building: For new roof, $20,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in order to get a ruling by the Chair, I make the point of order. It is not a deficiency and is not provided for by law.

The CHAIRMAN. As explained by the chairman of the committee, the Chair is ready to rule that it is a deficiency and in order in this bill. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CRAGO, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 10701. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Whiteville Lumber Co., Goldsboro, N. C., to construct a bridge across the Waccamaw River at or near Old Dock, county of Columbus, N. C.;

H. R. 8953. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Ketchikan, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction and equipment of schools therein, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 5348. An act for the relief of Mrs. Thomas McGovern.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 9065. An act to amend sections 3, 8, 10, 12, 20, and 21 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Relief of contractors: Toward the amount necessary for the payment of claims of contractors, etc., arising under the act entitled "An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes," approved August 25, 1919, $500,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make partial payments of any claim payable under said act, and to make payment of any and all loss and expense (exclusive of profits) incurred by a contractor or subcontractor in fulfilling his contract or subcontract with the Treasury Department in excess of the amount which such contractor or subcontractor may receive under the terms of his contract or subcontract if such loss and expense were, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, due to war conditions.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Some time ago, under similar law, although involving a great deal more money, this House was subjected to a three days' debate on a political resolution that did not get anywhere after it was debated for that length of time. It called for no action of the House whatever; and I wanted to ask the chairman whether or not, after this lump-sum appropriation is spent, are we going to have another three days' debate hereafter on the subject of proper expenditure under this act as was done under the other one?

Mr. GOOD. I am not a prophet. I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Is this a deficiency item?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; it is a deficiency item.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it authorized by law?

Mr. GOOD. The payment of these subcontractors is authorized by the act approved——

Mr. BLANTON. I mean this amount. With respect to this amount that we are attempting to appropriate.

Mr. GOOD. There is no limit put on the amount. The Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to settle with these contractors and pay the loss they sustained because of their work on Government contracts made after April 6, 1917, where their loss was due to war conditions. Of course, if it was due to bad management, they could not recover.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I will make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that it is not a deficiency and is not authorized by law.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman confine his point of order to the proviso? The other part is clearly not subject to a point of order. The proviso is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, the whole paragraph is subject to a point of order if a part of it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. GOOD. I concede that it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on the entire paragraph.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOOD: Page 11, after line 12, insert: "Relief of contractors: Toward the amount necessary for the payment of claims of contractors, etc., arising under the act entitled 'An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other buildings at work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes,' approved August 25, 1919, $500,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have overlooked a matter. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], a member of the Committee on Appropriations, is very much interested in this item, and I have an agreement with him to the effect that when the item should be reached, if any objection were made to it, I would ask that it be passed over until his return. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the matter be passed over without prejudice, with the point of order pending, until the return of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No point of order was made against the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. I know; but the gentleman from Illinois was very much interested in the proviso, and so, to keep faith with him, I would like to have the matter go over until to-morrow.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does that include the proviso?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I have asked that it may all go over until to-morrow, with the point of order pending.

Mr. BLANTON. With the point of order reserved?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the proceedings be vacated so as to leave the paragraph in with the proviso and a point of order pending until to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

For medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for war-risk insurance patients and other beneficiaries of the Public Health Service, including necessary personnel, regular and reserve commissioned officers of the Public Health Service, clerical help in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, maintenance, equipment, leases, fuel, lights, water, printing, freight, transportation and travel, maintenance and operation of passenger motor vehicles, and reasonable burial expenses (not exceeding $100 for any patient dying in hospital), $4,000,000: Provided, That hereafter officers of the Public Health Service may purchase subsistence supplies and articles of serviceable property for the use of themselves and their families from the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps at the same price as is charged officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make regulations governing the disposal of articles produced by patients in the course of their curative treatment, either by allowing the patient to retain same or by selling the articles and depositing the money received to the credit of the appropriation from which the materials for making the articles were purchased.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. Will the chairman of the committee agree to accept an amendment striking out "passenger motor vehicles," contained in this paragraph, in line 11?

Mr. GOOD. I am sure that if the gentleman will stop to think a moment he will not want to do that. A great many of these passenger-carrying vehicles are performing a very necessary use, such as ambulance services. Others are passenger-carrying vehicles that are used by the doctors and officers in the service. The other day I was in Chicago, and the doctor in the service there took me out to a hospital. He has two or three hospitals under his charge, and they are miles apart. He uses a machine to go from one to the other.

Mr. BLANTON. These two new buildings, or, rather, additions that have been added to this Public Health Service building, right across from the House Office Building—are they part of this Public Health Service?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; they are.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the gentleman happen to notice those two buildings in the course of construction and the great amount of money that was absolutely wasted in such building? If this department wastes as much money on passenger vehicles as it did on these annexes, we ought to call a halt.

Mr. GOOD. No; I did not. But as to passenger-carrying vehicles that are used in this service, and they have a good many, let me say we have authorized the Secretary of War to turn over to the hospital service a great many of these passenger-carrying vehicles, and they are authorized by law. They are authorized to use them, and they are using them at hospitals. I think, to some extent, they are very necessary.

Mr. BLANTON. How much of this $1,000,000 is to relieve the influenza situation?

Mr. GOOD. None. In a general way we have an appropriation, an epidemic fund of $400,000 that is available for any epidemic, including the influenza epidemic.

Mr. BLANTON. But does not the gentleman think that there are certain interests now that are trying to take advantage of the present influenza epidemic?

Mr. GOOD. Of course, persons who are the beneficiaries of the Public Health Service can be treated in the hospitals, even though they have influenza.

Mr. BLANTON. For instance, we have a bill before the House, introduced by a Member of Congress, who during this day has said that he is against the Constitution—at least, as to one provision—to suspend the Volstead Act for three months on account of the influenza epidemic, and so with various other matters that have no more pertinency.

Mr. GOOD. So far as the use of automobiles is concerned, I am willing to cooperate with the gentleman from Texas to prevent the misuse of automobiles in the service; but I think that to strike this out might very seriously cripple the hospital service, where they have about 7,000 of our discharged soldiers, and the doctors are compelled to use automobiles in taking the soldiers from one place to another and in visiting the hospitals themselves.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the reservation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I renew the reservation of the point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] renews the reservation of the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I was wondering in regard to the proviso. Supposing that hereafter the Public Health Service officials shall be able to purchase Army and Navy supplies on the same basis with the Army and Navy officers, I wonder whether, if we do this for the Public Health Service, we can refuse to do it for any other service in the Government. For instance, if we make the break and provide for other services outside of the military service—and it is a great abuse in the military service—is there any limit on what we will be asked to do in the way of furnishing all sorts of supplies at wholesale prices?

Mr. GOOD. I have here an amendment that I was requested to introduce, and I propose to offer it, and it would practically add another service—that is, the Coast Guard. The Coast Guard have had this privilege during the war, and it has recently been taken from them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Coast Guard had this privilege while they were in the war.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; while they were under the Secretary of the Navy. Now, it does mean a great deal to these men. They put in a list of articles which they are able to buy from the Army and Navy stores with the price to show the saving. Take, for instance, Gillette blades. We go down to the store and buy them——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I wish the gentleman would use some illustration with which I am familiar. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. I happened to notice that. The cut-rate stores sell Gillette blades for 85 cents a dozen. The regular price is $1 a dozen, but at the Army and Navy stores the price is 30 cents a dozen. Now, I have not compared the prices of all these articles, but here are men in the Public Health Service who were formerly officers in the Army. They were entitled to this privilege while they were officers in the Military Establishment. They became accustomed to it, and it was a great saving to them. Now they are asking for an increase in pay. It seemed to us if we could give them some provision of this kind that would to some extent reduce their cost of living—and they say it will make a very material difference—it might obviate the necessity of a general increase all along the line in the pay of these officers and employees.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Every officer in the Army wants every privilege of pay or otherwise which anyone in the Navy has. Everyone in the Navy wants the same thing that anyone in the Army has. Every officer in the Coast Guard Service wants the same privilege that officers in the Army and Navy have. Every officer in the Public Health Service wants the same privilege that any of the others have, and if we pass a law relating to any officers of any one of these services and do not pass it as to the others we get requests immediately from the heads of the other departments suggesting that their departments are being discriminated against.

Now, nominally we furnish articles to Army and Navy officers at 10 per cent above their cost. In fact, we furnish them at less than their cost, because they never charge up all the items which go to fix the cost. During the war they maintained one of the most expensive establishments in one of the most expensive localities in this city for the purpose of furnishing a chance to Army and Navy officers to buy things at less than cost. Well, I sympathize with the Army and the Navy. I also sympathize with the clerks in Washington and with the laborers in Washington. The Government does not undertake anywhere, and it ought not to undertake, to do collective bargaining for all of its employees. Under the system of pay that we have in the Army and the Navy not a soul on earth knows how much an Army or Navy officer gets. They do not know themselves, directly or indirectly, and I question the desirability of extending this privilege. I do not think it will have anything to do with the pay they will ask for.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Is there any amendment or reservation of order pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has reserved a point of order.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I would like to know whether any part of this $4,000,000 is intended to be used to pay doctors scattered all over the country, supposed to be looking after soldiers. What I have particularly in mind is the fact that in West Virginia there are said to be about 40 doctors on the pay roll of the public health department, and in the capital of that State there are six doctors on the pay roll. Two of them are being paid $200 a month and the other four $100 a month. They are supposed to be looking after the wounded soldiers, and yet it is said there are only five wounded soldiers in that city. I desire to know whether any part of this $4,000,000 is to be used for paying the salaries of these doctors?

Mr. GOOD. The $4,000,000 is a lump sum and can be expended in any way the service determines the expenditure is necessary in the treatment of the beneficiaries of the Public Health Service. The case which the gentleman refers to was inquired into at the hearings. Dr. Stimson has put in the record, which will be found on page 837 of the hearings, and extending over several pages, a statement in regard to it. I will not read it, but he gives the work that these doctors are doing. As the gentleman from West Virginia has stated, there are four of these doctors in Charleston, W. Va., who are employed in this way. There is no provision that will prevent the employment of physicians in other places. I do not know how it can well be prevented unless the law with regard to the Public Health Service is entirely rewritten defining—and I think it ought to be more clearly defined—what the duties of the Public Health Service are. I think the Public Health Service is extending its power and influence far beyond what was the intention of Congress when the act creating the service was passed.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Does not the gentleman think right now that we should have some limitation on the expenditures of the $4,000,000?

Mr. GOOD. I will ask the gentleman from Delaware to write the limitation.

Mr. LAYTON. I am not on the committee.

Mr. GOOD. But the gentleman is a Member of Congress, and an able and very valuable Member. It is an easier thing to suggest a limitation than it is to write one without crippling the service. Here are 7,000 men, discharged soldiers, who are entitled to treatment under the law. Are you going to say that they shall not have more than one physician in a State or more than one physician in a county? There are counties where they do not need any, and possibly there are counties in large centers of population, like Cook County, Ill., or the city of New York, where they need a great many. How are you going to make the limitation? It is easier to suggest a limitation than it is to write it. I have been trying for some time to think of some way of limiting the activities of the Public Health Service so as not to permit them to do things not authorized by law. The only thing that I can think of—and I propose to suggest it to the Comptroller of the Treasury—is that the accounts be thoroughly itemized, so that no expense can be incurred that is not authorized by law until we have the law rewritten. I will say to my friend from Delaware that I do not see how the committee can limit it without perhaps doing great injury to the service.

Mr. LAYTON. The situation to-day, then, is, according to the gentleman from West Virginia, who states an extreme case, that in that place and other places in this country we may have doctors on the roll at $200 a month while there is not a single patient there. There is not a Member of this House that does not want to make ample provision for wounded soldiers.

Mr. GOOD. I will say that Dr. Stimson makes quite a case for Dr. Davis.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me to make a statement?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. For the purpose of setting the House straight in regard to the statement made by the gentleman from West Virginia, I want to say that these physicians are not all located there for the purpose of looking after patients in the local hospital. Dr. Davis is a district supervisor, with a district of three or four States, and his duties are to examine all applicants under the war-risk act. The statement was made to the committee that he has examined several hundred or more men who are entitled to the benefits of the war-risk act. Some men are not entitled to the benefits and some are. Dr. Davis is the district supervisor. He has associated with him another doctor.

Mr. LAYTON. If the gentleman's statement is correct, I withdraw what I have said.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. This is not the case described by the gentleman; it is the case of six doctors in Charleston, two drawing a salary of $200 a month each and four drawing a salary of $100 a month each, with only five wounded soldiers in that community. That is the fact about it.

Mr. GOOD. I will say that Dr. Stimpson gave us this information with regard to the work of Dr. Davis.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I will say that I wrote the department asking how many doctors the department had in West Virginia, and they sent me a list of 10, and I subsequently found they had 40 on the list. That applies to only one State—West Virginia.

Mr. GOOD. I am not willing to defend any unjustifiable act of the Public Health Service. In the past I have indulged in some criticism of this service, and I think it is subject still to considerable criticism. I will say, however, that Dr. Stimpson made a very good case in regard to this specific physician. He said, with reference to Dr. Davis, that the total number of cases examined in Dr. Davis's office as past assistant surgeon were 203; that the total number of cases treated in the office were 22; total number of treatments given to claimants, 63; number of cases sent to the hospital for further examination and treatment, 49; number of claimants reporting for examination, 203; number of claimants authorized to report who have not as yet reported, 77.

That was the work of September 1 to December 26 last.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. But he is talking about the Dr. Davis located in Washington. There are two doctors by the name of Davis.

We are warned from every direction to cut down these terrible appropriations. There are lots of good, patriotic doctors in West Virginia who would take delight in serving a few wounded soldiers without charge.

Mr. GOOD. Then there was Dr. Dillon. Is Dr. Dillon located there?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I am not sure that he is on the list.

Mr. GOOD. The location of Dr. Davis is given as Charleston. Dr. Dillon's location is given as Charleston. Dr. George A. McQueen's is given as Charleston, and Dr. Hugh Nicholson's is given as Charleston; those are the ones given by Dr. Stimpson as coming from Charleston.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. On page 839 the name of every physician in the State with his address is given.

Mr. GOOD. That is what I was reading from.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This is an authorized statement from the Public Health Service. If the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ] has the names of other physicians who are on the roll, and whose names do not appear on the list, I wish he would give them to us, as it would put us in a position to take the matter up with the Public Health Service in an intelligent way. In response to a question to put in the RECORD the names of the physicians in the State of West Virginia and their addresses, he has given them, and also the work done by these men in each month, in detail. We have an itemized statement here, and if the statement is untrue, and the gentleman can show it, I know the House would be glad, certainly the members of the committee would be glad, to know it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Reverting to the argument and statement made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in respect to giving authority to the officers of the Public Health Service to purchase subsistence supplies and articles from the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps at the same price charged officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, did a system of that kind heretofore exist whereby the members of the Public Health Service were entitled to that benefit?

Mr. GOOD. No. The gentleman will recall that the act of March 3, 1919, very much enlarged the activities of the Public Health Service. By that act all of the discharged soldiers were turned over for treatment to the Public Health Service, except those that are in vocational training, who receive treatment there. Those who are sick or wounded and require medical aid are cared for by the Public Health Service. Before that the service was very small. I have forgotten the number of employees they now have, but my recollection is that something over 6,000 persons are employed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is not that rather an argument against the inauguration of this benefit to them?

Mr. GOOD. I think not. A good many of these doctors were officers in the Army.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will permit me, the gentleman by his course now is certainly inviting a further increase of this. He has announced that he has another amendment to give this benefit to the members of the Coast Guard Service. I do not see how in equity and good conscience we can bestow this benefit on these two classes and then oppose bestowing it on every Government employee in the United States. I do not see how the gentleman can argue against extending it still further to other classes, if he is going to arbitrarily bestow it on the officers of the Public Health Service.

Mr. GOOD. I was impressed with the argument that here are a great number of officers who were in the Army for more than a year, some of them for more than two years, who had had the benefits under the law and were permitted to go to the Army stores and purchase articles practically at cost. The Coast Guard Service during the war was under the Navy, and the officers and men in that service were entitled to go to the Navy stores and buy all their necessaries. All at once they are turned back, without changing their salaries, and they are deprived of the benefits that they enjoyed before. My position has been that if the officers of the Army and Navy are entitled to this benefit, then there can be no reason why the officers and men in the Public Health Service and the Coast Guard Service are not entitled to it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know how many hundred thousand officers there were in the Army during the war, but there were about 4,600,000 men in the Army and Navy. Nearly all of these men have been turned back to civil life. They have been turned back adrift. A good many of them have employment and a good many have not. None of those men will be entitled to the privileges afforded under the provisions of the bill or the amendment that is proposed. There is quite as much reason why that privilege, which they had while in the Army, should be extended now that they are in civil life as there is that it should be extended to these men who were on the pay roll and who have left the Army. The other men are not on the pay roll at all and may not be on anybody's pay roll. Simply because they are now out of the Army, adrift, and are not cared for in the Government service, being paid out of the Treasury, they must not be considered, while it is argued that men who are on the pay roll but who are also out of the Army are entitled to this privilege. I think it can not be justified unless you extend it to every man who has ever at any time under any circumstances worn the uniform.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Are wounded soldiers under the treatment of the Public Health Service accorded this privilege?

Mr. GOOD. No; because they are not the beneficiaries of the Public Health Service until after they are discharged, and a discharged soldier is not entitled to this privilege.

Mr. MILLER. Then a wounded soldier under the treatment of this same Public Health Service is not afforded this privilege, nor are the men in the Public Health Service afforded the privilege, as the men in the Army and Navy are, and this provision limits it exclusively to officers and their families. Does the gentleman think that is right? Why not give it to the men?

Mr. GOOD. Most of the employees are officers. They are commissioned, I think.

Mr. MILLER. But there are nurses by the hundreds and by the thousand, both men and women. Under what rule does the gentleman distinguish the men in the Public Health Service who are not entitled to this privilege from the men in the Army and the Navy who are?

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman now is arguing for still further increase?

Mr. MILLER. I am not arguing either way. I am asking the chairman on what rule he bases this.

Mr. GOOD I do not know whether the system is good or bad.

Mr. MILLER. I think the whole system is bad.

Mr. GOOD. If it is bad, the whole thing ought to be repealed; and perhaps if we put enough on it it will force its repeal. If it is good for one service that enjoys its privilege, why not extend the privilege to similar classes?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the first proviso in the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. This is clearly subject to the point of order, the word "hereafter" making it permanent law. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 18, by striking out the word "further."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 18, after the word "Provided," strike out the word "further."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to continue in effect the provisions of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines," approved March 3, 1919, $500,000, to be expended at the following hospitals and in not to exceed the following amounts, respectively: Alexandria, La., $25,000; Deming, N. Mex., $20,000; Houston, Tex., $10,000; Perryville, Md., $75,000; Greenville, S. C., $75,000; Cape May, N. J., $10,000; Hoboken Pa., $10,000; Dansville, N. Y., $10,000; St. Louis, Mo., $5,000; New Haven, Conn., $25,000; West Roxbury, Mass., $50,000; Helena, Mont., $100,000; Boise, Idaho, $75,000; East Norfolk, Mass., $10,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 24, after the figures "$10,000," insert: "Provided further, That the sum of $20,000 of the appropriation of $150,000 contained in section 6 of the above-named act is made available for such repair work and remodeling as may be necessary to adapt the hospital at Corpus Christi, Tex., to the needs of the Public Health Service."

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I shall offer a brief word of explanation of this amendment. In the act of March 3, 1919, $150,000 was appropriated for the purchase of a public-health hospital at Corpus Christi, Tex. While the matter of its purchase was pending and the question of title was being examined, and before title passed, a storm occurred at Corpus Christi, on the 14th of September, 1919, and damaged this property to a considerable extent. Subsequently the title was approved and the money was paid over, the Treasury Department deducting $20,000 from the purchase price paid to the owners for the purpose of making certain necessary repairs to put the hospital back in its original condition, upon the theory that the Government was not responsible for an act of God which caused the damage. By a mistake, the request of the Treasury Department for the use and authorization of the $20,000 went to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and did not reach this committee in time. The purpose of this amendment is to authorize the use of $20,000 already appropriated to make the hospital serviceable for the purpose for which it was intended, and I will say to the committee that I have discussed the matter with the chairman of the committee [Mr. GOOD] and the gentleman who had charge on this side, and that the amendment is acceptable to them.

Mr. GOOD. The matter was pending, as I understand it, before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds——

Mr. BEE. By mistake.

Mr. GOOD. And I agree with the gentleman that the money ought to be made available to repair this hospital, otherwise the hospital purchased at Government expense can not be used.

Mr. BEE. And I will say it is standing there idle and without any use whatever, and with this expenditure it becomes available and will be used as soon as repaired from the injury due to the storm.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. The point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation of the point of order comes too late. The amendment has been debated.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Well, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late to make the point of order. Does the gentleman wish to discuss the amendment?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. The gentleman from Texas said that this proposed appropriation was pending before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds——

Mr. BEE. By an error. I will say, if the gentleman will permit, the Secretary of the Treasury wrote a letter to the Speaker of the House explaining the situation in reference to this hospital, and by some error that communication instead of going to the committee of the gentleman from Iowa went to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, where it had no business and which had nothing to do with it, and that is the reason it is not in the bill and it is now necessary to put it in as an amendment.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Well, I will say, Mr. Chairman, that the objection that I was about to make is that the appropriation is not or has not appeared before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I do not see the chairman of the committee here or any other member of the committee so far as I can observe, and I felt it my duty to the committee and the House to state that the proposal has not been submitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The communication may have gone to the chairman of the committee. I will not attempt to gainsay that, but it does seem to me, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that in view of the fact that we have appropriated $150,000 for this hospital at Corpus Christi, we ought not now at a moment's notice to ask the House to agree to another expenditure of $20,000——

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. BEE. The gentleman is absolutely in error in this matter. We are not asking to appropriate any additional sum; $150,000 was appropriated for the purchase of this property, and before the title passed the storm came on and damaged the property, and the Treasury Department required the owners of the property, before they paid the money over to permit them to deduct $20,000 from the purchase price in order that the Government might put the property back in condition. There is not a cent asked for more than the $150,000. It does not ask another additional amount whatever; it simply authorizes the use of the money already appropriated.

Mr. GRIFFIN. We have already appropriated $150,000. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think the Treasury of the United States is empowered under the terms of the original appropriation to make the outlay of $150,000? That is, the gentleman from Texas says that $130,000 has been paid for the property and that there is $20,000 in the Treasury unexpended. Now, the Treasury Department already has the authority to expend $150,000, and it does not seem to me it is necessary for any further extension of authority.

Mr. BEE. If the gentleman will permit, the Surgeon General writes to the Secretary of the Treasury and calls his attention to this fact, as follows:

Pursuant to the authority granted, an agreement for the sale and purchase of General Hospital No. 15, at Corpus Christi, Tex., was entered into, but pending consummation thereof the property was damaged by a storm. Thereafter the price was reduced to $120,000, and the property is now being transferred to the Treasury Department. It is therefore essential that the difference of $20,000 between the purchase price and the amount appropriated be made available for repairs to the hospital.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for an extension of one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BEE. I do not know, I will say to the gentleman from New York, any other way to reach this subject except the way it has been done, unless you are willing to let this hospital stand there idle.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee his information concerning that. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars is appropriated for this Corpus Christi Hospital. Before it has been taken over it is damaged by storm.

Mr. GOOD. One hundred and twenty thousand dollars has already been paid to the owner.

Mr. GRIFFIN. We already have appropriated and money is on hand to pay for the repairs. Do you consider any further appropriation necessary?

Mr. GOOD. The $150,000 was only available for the purchase of the building. Instead of purchasing a building, if, after it had been injured by the storm, the department had said to the owners, "Repair the building and we will pay $140,000," they would have been authorized to pay the $140,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes in further debate on the Speedway Hospital in Chicago.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to get the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] if possible, because in the debate that we had with reference to the general hospital situation, and particularly with reference to the Speedway Hospital on last Tuesday, the debate appearing on page 2125 of the RECORD, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] stated, referring to me:

> If the gentleman will put his hand on the contractor and he will sign a contract without the provisions such as I have stated, requiring the payment of money outside the limit of cost, the contract can be signed in an hour.

And the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] made practically the same statement, also on page 2125 of the RECORD, when he said:

> The Secretary will sign if the contractor will sign the contract for the amount provided in the act.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I never saw the contractor before in my life. But I went over the record pretty carefully, and I put it up to him to sign this contract presented to the Secretary of the Treasury to sign, and he was willing to do that. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] invited me to get this contractor to sign, and they said they would get the Secretary of the Treasury to do so, and now I have the original contract here signed by the Shank Contracting Co., and I ask unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD before I send it to the gentleman from South Carolina, who, I hope, will take it down to the Secretary and get him to either sign it or refuse to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to insert the contract referred to in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

These articles of agreement entered into this 29th day of January, 1920, by and between the United States of America, by Carter Glass, Secretary of the Treasury (hereinafter called contracting officer), party of the first part, and the Shank Co. (a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois), of Chicago, Cook County, Ill., represented by George H. Shank, its president (hereinafter called owner), party of the second part, witnesseth:

Conveyance of lands: The owner does hereby agree, in consideration of the payments hereinafter provided to be made by the United States of America, to convey or cause to be conveyed to the United States of America, upon the execution of this agreement by warranty deed, the title in fee simply, free and clear of all liens and incumbrances, in and to the following-described lands, tenements, and heriditaments located in the county of Cook, State of Illinois, bounded on the north by Twelfth Street, on the south by Twenty-second Street, on the east by First Avenue, and on the west by Ninth Avenue, described as follows:

The west ½ of section 23 in township 39 north of range 12 east of the third principal meridian, except that part thereof conveyed to the Illinois Central Railroad Co. for a right of way by deed recorded in the recorder's office of Cook County, Ill., as document No. 874485, said tract of land consisting of 320 acres, more or less.

The owner shall furnish to the United States of America an owner's guaranty policy issued by the Chicago Title & Trust Co., of Chicago, Ill., in the sum of $300,000, guaranteeing the unincumbered fee simply title to said real estate and a complete merchantable abstract of title to said premises.

Construction of buildings: 2. The owner does hereby further agree to furnish all the labor, materials, tools, machinery and equipment, and to do all things necessary for the construction and completion upon said site of a four-story fireproof hospital building, a fireproof administration building, a laundry building, a power house, a kitchen, a receiving ward, and communicating corridors in accordance with the plans, drawings, and specifications, which are to meet the general requirements of the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service and are to be completed in the manner next hereinafter set forth. The construction of said buildings shall be subject in every detail to the supervision, direction, and inspection of the contracting officer and shall commence upon the day of the date hereof; and in consideration of the premises the owner does hereby agree to complete and deliver over to the contracting officer all of said buildings and structures in accordance with said plans, drawings, and specifications within 100 days after the date hereof (Sundays and holidays excluded). The contracting officer may from time to time accept and use any portion of the buildings or structures which may in his opinion be completed, but such acceptance and use of portions of said buildings and structures shall not be construed to be a final acceptance of the buildings and structures under this contract: Provided, That in the event the taking possession of any portion of the buildings or structures prior to final completion shall increase the cost of the construction to the owner the constructing officer will reimburse the owner for such additional cost.

For lack of time, said plans and specifications for the construction of the foregoing buildings and structures are not as full and detailed as they ought to be for working plans and specifications, but notwithstanding the fact, the contracting officer has directed the owner to begin immediately the work of construction, and in compliance with such direction, the owner agrees to begin the work of construction immediately under the terms of this contract without awaiting the final completion of said plans and specifications, and the contracting officer agrees to employ, at his own expense, an architect skilled in hospital construction, to complete said plans and specifications with all reasonable dispatch and to the satisfaction of the contracting officer. The completion of said plans and specifications by said architect shall not, except as herein otherwise provided, involve or include any material changes and alterations in or additions to the plan or design of said buildings and structures; or the kind, quality, character, or cost of the materials which enter into the construction of the same, as such plan, design, and materials appear upon said uncompleted plans and specifications which have been delivered to the contracting officer and are now in his possession.

All material entering into the construction of said buildings shall be first class and all work required shall be done in a good and workmanlike manner to the satisfaction of the contracting officer.

Right of owner to remove materials: 3. It is understood and agreed that in the construction of said buildings the owner shall have the right to use without cost or charge to the Government (except as a part of the contract price) all suitable structures and materials now a part of said premises, but which have been reserved to the grantor in the deed of conveyance conveying said real estate hereinbefore mentioned, except the sewer system, water mains and water systems, metal garages, small hospital building, roadways, and outside fence; but the owner shall have the right to use so much or such parts of said seven excepted items as it may find necessary in the construction of said buildings. In so far as may be possible without interference with or obstruction of the use of the hospital plant by the Government, the owner shall remove those portions of said structures and materials so reserved in said deed of conveyance as shall not be used in the construction of said buildings, and shall clear the said premises of all débris and waste materials.

Additional work: 4. The contracting officer may from time to time by written instructions or drawings issued to the owner make changes in the said plans, drawings, and specifications, or may require additional work hereunder, and the provisions of this contract shall apply to all such changes, modifications, and additions with the same effect as if they were embodied in the original plans, drawings, and specifications, and the owner shall comply with all such instructions and changes; but if such changes, modifications, and additions involve extra labor and material, then the actual cost of such additional labor or material occasioned by such changes, together with a sum equal to 7 per cent thereof, shall be added to the contract price and shall be paid by the Government to the owner (except as hereafter in this clause is otherwise provided). In such event the time for the completion of this contract shall be extended to cover any delay in the completion of said buildings occasioned by such changes, modifications, or additions to said plans, drawings, and specifications.

It is the intention of the parties to this contract that the owner shall construct and deliver said buildings and structures so that the same when so constructed and delivered shall constitute as a whole a practical working hospital; therefore it is agreed that if any changes and modifications in or additions to said plans, drawings, and specifications shall be fairly and reasonably necessary in order to make said hospital in all its parts a substantially practical working hospital, then the same shall be made upon the written order of the contracting officer, and no allowances shall accrue or be paid to the owner under any provision of this clause on account of additional labor or materials occasioned by such last-described changes in or additions to said plans, drawings, and specifications, other than the amount of the contract price hereinafter named; but all the usual furnishings, supplies, and equipment required in the hospital and other buildings shall be supplied and installed by the Government.

Title to buildings: 5. The title to all buildings completed or in the course of construction shall be in the United States.

Delays, etc.: 6. The owner shall not be held responsible for or be deemed to be in default hereunder by reason of delays in the performance of this contract caused by strikes, fires, explosions, riots, transportation delays, acts of God, or other causes beyond the control and without the fault of the owner, including delays caused to the owner by the direct act or failure to act of the contracting officer, and the owner's time for performance of this contract shall be hereby extended to cover the delay in performance so caused to the owner, provided that the owner shall have immediately and fully notified the contracting officer of any such cause of delay and shall have used its best efforts promptly to remove the same and to obviate the effects thereof, and provided further that such delay shall not have been due to the owner's failure to comply with any of the provisions of this contract. The owner shall proceed with the performance of this contract as soon as and to the extent that any such cause of delay shall have been removed. The contracting officer, however, except in the case of delays caused to the owner by the direct act or failure to act of the United States, shall have the right, by giving written notice to the owner, to terminate in whole or in part the performance of the work which has been so delayed, in which event the United States shall make payments to and protect the owner in such an amount as in the opinion of the contracting officer will equitably reimburse the owner. If the owner be dissatisfied with the allowance made under the provisions of this clause it may have recourse to the appeal provided for in clause 19 hereof. The contracting officer shall, if such right to terminate said work in whole or in part be exercised by the contracting officer prior to completion, have the right to use any or all of the machinery, tools, equipment, and materials belonging to the owner at the site to complete such work upon payment for such materials and of a reasonable rental for such machinery, tools, and equipment and of all damages to such machinery, tools, and equipment while so used by the contracting officer.

Liquidated damages: 7. Time shall be considered as of the essence of this contract, and in case of failure on the part of the owner to complete his work within the time specified herein it is agreed by the owner that the United States will be damaged by the delay, and the amount of such damages, exclusive of expenses for inspection and superintendence and necessary traveling expenses being difficult, if not impossible, of definite ascertainment and proof, are hereby agreed upon, liquidated, and fixed in advance in the sum of $500 for each and every of the first 15 calendar days (Sundays and holidays excepted), which the said owner shall delay in the completion of this work beyond the time fixed in this contract, and in the sum of $1,000 for each and every calendar day (Sundays and holidays excepted) which the said owner shall delay in the completion of this work on and after the expiration of said 15 calendar days, which the owner hereby agrees to pay to the United States as liquidated damages, and not by way of penalty. In addition to the liquidated damages herein agreed to be paid, it is hereby agreed by said owner that all expenses for inspection and superintendence, including all necessary traveling expenses connected therewith, during said period of delay shall be paid to the United States. It is further agreed by said owner that such liquidated damages, expenses for inspection, superintendence, and necessary traveling expenses may be deducted and retained from any payment due or to become due to the said owner: Provided, That no liquidated damages and no charges for inspection, superintendence, and traveling expenses shall be made where such period of delay shall equal the time lost through any cause for which the contracting officer is responsible either in the beginning or prosecution of the work, to be determined by the contracting officer; but where any delay caused by the said owner is in excess of the time lost through any cause for which the contracting officer is responsible, liquidated damages for such excess time shall be charged against the owner at said respective rates, together with all expenses for inspection, superintendence, and necessary traveling expenses incurred during such excess time.

Provided further, That no liquidated damages and no charges for inspection and superintendence shall be made for any delay excusable under the provisions of clause 6 hereof.

Provided further, That any extension allowed to the said owner by the contracting officer for the completion of this contract shall not affect the right of the United States to collect liquidated damages and expenses for inspection, superintendence, and necessary traveling expenses for any delay caused by the said owner prior to such extension.

Completion and operation of heating plant: 8. The owner shall complete the installation of the heating plant and radiation so that the same will be ready for use at least three weeks before the entire work under this agreement shall be finished; and the Government shall take over said heating plant and said radiation when so completed, and at its own expense furnish all necessary fuel and proper maintenance, and shall operate said heating plant and radiation so as to deliver sufficient heat throughout the whole system in order that the walls may be more thoroughly dried out to receive the decoration called for by the specifications.

Increased cost of labor and materials: 9. It is understood that the contract price hereof is based upon well-established union scales of wages for labor as of August 26, 1918, and upon the prices for materials which the owner agrees to advise the contracting officer of through the delivery to his representative upon the ground, within 15 days from the date hereof, of a complete schedule of all materials to be used in the construction of said buildings and structures and the price at which the same are contracted for, together with such other data as the contracting officer may require in connection therewith at the time, and the delivery of such schedules shall be of the essence of the agreement relating to said materials contained in this clause. Should the owner during the course of the construction of said buildings and structures be required by any increase in such union wage scales or in the market price of such materials to expend more money for the completion of said buildings and structures than that upon which its present contract price is based, then it shall first notify the contracting officer of such fact and, upon 24 hours' notice to the owner, the contracting officer may from time to time elect to furnish and furnish such materials to the owner in quantities provided for in the plans and specifications, in which event there shall be deducted by the contracting officer from the contract price hereof a sum equal to the total value of any such materials so furnished to the owner based upon the prices set forth in said schedule. In the event the contracting officer does not within 24 hours after the receipt of such notice of increased cost of materials elect to furnish and within a reasonable time furnish the same, then the owner shall proceed to purchase such necessary materials, and the amount of such increase so required to be paid by the owner shall be reimbursed to the owner by the Government in addition to the contract price herein named. All savings made by the owner through the purchase of materials so required in the construction of said buildings and structures at prices less than those appearing in the schedule shall be credited upon the contract price hereof, and the contracting officer shall deduct from any sums due the owner an amount equal to all such savings. After approval by the contracting officer of increases in wages to laborers the owner shall be reimbursed in the amount necessarily paid by it on account of increased wages. In case any controversy shall arise hereunder as to the amount of such increase in the cost of labor or of materials, then such amount, if any, shall be determined by the contracting officer. The owner shall not, however, make any departure from the standard rate of wages being paid in that locality without the prior consent of the contracting officer and shall not attempt to secure labor at the expense of other Government work.

Payments by Government: 10. In consideration of the foregoing the United States shall and will pay to the owner the sum of $3,000,000, which amount the owner hereby agrees to accept in full payment of the entire purchase price of the above-described real estate and of the cost of construction and completion of the buildings hereinbefore mentioned except as herein otherwise provided, as follows:

(a) One million four hundred thousand dollars of said amount to be paid upon the signing of this agreement and the execution and delivery by the owner of the warranty deed and the delivery of the abstract and title insurance policy, specified in section 1 of this contract, conveying and insuring the fee simple title to said above-described real estate.

(b) The remainder of said sum of $3,000,000, to wit, $1,600,000, to be paid on the 1st and 15th days of each succeeding month to the owner in installments of approximately 90 per cent of the value of the work executed subsequent to the conclusion of this contract and actually put in place, to the satisfaction of the contracting officer from time to time as the work progresses, the said value to be ascertained by the contracting officer, and approximately 10 per cent thereof will be retained until the completion of the entire work and the approval and acceptance of the same by the party of the first part, which amount shall be forfeited by the said party of the second part in the event of the nonfulfillment of this contract, it being expressly covenanted and agreed that said forfeiture shall not relieve the owner from liability to the Government for any and all damages sustained by reason of any breach of this contract: Provided, however, That no payment hereunder shall be due to the said owner until every part of the work to the point of advancement reached, on account of which payment is claimed, shall be found to be satisfactorily supplied and executed in every particular and any and all defects therein remedied to the entire satisfaction of the said party of the first part: Provided further, however, That the said work is to be constructed in accordance with plans and specifications transmitted to the owner July 15, August 16, and September 23, 1919, and in accordance with the drawings and specifications mentioned in the letter of January 7, 1920, from the owner to the contracting officer, and, that the owner will furnish three service elevators not shown in any specification, but which appear upon the plans.

Eight-hour law: 11. Wages of laborers, operatives, and mechanics doing any part of the work contemplated by this contract in the employ of the owner shall be computed upon the basic day rate of eight hours work, with overtime rates to be paid for at not less than time and one-half for all hours in excess of eight hours.

Convict labor: 12. That in the performance of this contract the owner shal not directly or indirectly employ any person undergoing sentence of imprisonment at hard labor which may have been imposed by a court of any State, Territory, or a municipality having criminal jurisdiction, nor permit of such employment by any person furnishing labor or materials to such owner in fulfillment of this contract.

Contract not assignable: 13. Neither this contract nor any interest therein shall be transferred by the owner to any other party, except to the extent permitted by section 3477, United States Revised Statutes.

Subcontracts assignable to Government: 14. The owner shall not enter into any contract or subcontract in contemplation of or in connection with this contract without the prior approval of the contracting officer. Every contract and subcontract made by the owner in contemplation of or in connection with the performances of this contract shall state that it relates to this contract and shall contain a provision that its unperformed portion may be assigned at any time by the owner to the United States or its nominee, at the request of the contracting officer. In the event the contracting officer shall request the assignment to the Government of any such contract or subcontract, and the owner shall fail or refuse to immediately assign the same, then and in that event this clause shall operate as an assignment of all of the unfulfilled interest of the owner in such contract or subcontract, but the Government shall not by such an assignment assume any obligation of the owner under such contract or subcontract other than that portion thereof fairly represented by such unfulfilled portion of the contract or subcontract.

Covenant against contingent fees: 15. The owner expressly warrants that it has employed no third person to solicit or obtain this contract in its behalf, or to cause or procure the same to be obtained upon compensation in any way contingent, in whole or in part, upon such procurement; and that it has not paid, or promised, or agreed to pay, to any third person, in consideration of such procurement, or in compensation for services in connection therewith, any brokerage, commission, or percentage upon the amount receivable by it hereunder; and that it has not, in estimating the contract price or compensation demanded by it, included any sum by reason of any such brokerage, commission, or percentage; and that all moneys payable to it hereunder are free from obligation to any other person for services rendered, or supposed to have been rendered, in the procurement of this contract. The owner further agrees that any breach of this warranty shall constitute adequate cause for the annulment of this contract by the United States, and that the United States may retain to its own use from any sums due or to become due hereunder an amount equal to any brokerage, commission, or percentage so paid or agreed to be paid.

Bond: 16. The owner shall prior to commencing the said work furnish a bond, with sureties satisfactory to the contracting officer, in the sum of $1,250,000, conditioned upon the full and faithful performance of all the terms, conditions, and provisions of this contract, and upon the prompt payment of all bills for labor, materials, or other service furnished to the owner.

Members of Congress not to benefit: 17. No Member of or Delegate to Congress, or Resident Commissioner, is, or shall be, admitted to any share or part of this contract, or to any benefit that may arise herefrom, but, under the provisions of section 116 of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1909 (35 Stats. 1109), this stipulation shall not extend, or be construed to extend, to any contract made with an incorporated company for its general benefit.

Substitution of materials: 18. In the performance of this contract the Government agrees to render all assistance possible in the procurement of materials and delivery of the same at the site of the work that it reasonably can; and if the owner is unable to purchase or to procure immediate delivery of any of the materials specified in said plans and specifications and wishes to substitute for such material other material of substantially the same general kind and quality, prompt request shall be made upon the constructing officer representing the contracting officer upon the premises for permission to make such substitution; and in the event the constructing officer shall determine that such substitution can be made without detriment to the interest of the Government under this agreement, such substitution shall be allowed. The determination of such constructing officer shall be made within three days after such request.

Settlement of disputes: 19. This contract shall be interpreted as a whole and the intent of the whole instrument, rather than the interpretation of any special clause, shall govern. If any doubts or disputes shall arise as to the meaning or interpretation of anything in this contract, the written decision of the contracting officer shall govern. If, however, the owner shall feel aggrieved by the decision of that officer, it shall have the right to submit the same to the Secretary of War, whose decision shall be final and binding upon both parties hereto.

Contract binding on successors: 20. This contract shall bind and inure to the owner and its successors. It is understood and agreed that wherever the words "contracting officer" are used herein, the same shall be construed to include his successor in office, any other person to whom the duties of the contracting officer may be assigned by the Secretary of War, and any duly appointed representative of the contracting officer.

Witness the hands of the parties hereto the day and year first above written, all in triplicate.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.
By _____, Contracting Officer.
SHANK CO.,
GEORGE H. SHANK, President.

I hereby certify that I have satisfied myself of the authority of the person signing the contractor's name to this agreement to bind it in the matter, and I have waived the filing of evidence of such authority, as permitted so to do by the Army Regulations.

I do solemnly swear that the foregoing is an exact copy of a contract made by me personally with the contractor named as owner above; that I made the same fairly without any benefit or advantage to myself or allowing any such benefit or advantage corruptly to the said contractor or any other person; and that the papers accompanying include all those relating to the said contract as required by the statute in such case made and provided.

——— ———.

I certify that the award of the foregoing contract was made to the lowest responsible bidder for the best and most suitable articles or services on proposals received. That owing to the peculiar nature of said contract and the special authority of the Secretary of War therefor, no other or competing contractors were notified and considered in connection with said contract.

The work contracted for being an emergency requirement, no advertisement for bids was published in newspapers by order of the Secretary of War, General Orders, No. 49, dated April 28, 1917.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Before I proceed further in the debate I want to correct one statement in the RECORD. On page 2125 the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] said:

The Secretary of the Treasury has explained this thing to me as I have stated, and I know he tells the truth.

I am reported as having said:

I do not think he does.

I had no desire of saying the Secretary of the Treasury was not telling the truth. My remarks referred to his explanation. I ask unanimous consent that the permanent RECORD read:

I do not think he explains.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the correction asked by the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the committee ordering that to be done, but the committee has no jurisdiction over the permanent RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It will be in the RECORD in my remarks anyway, so the Secretary of the Treasury will know that I have not accused him of prevaricating.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman, as a matter of fact, will go to the reporters and give them whatever memorandum he wants, it will be put in the permanent RECORD at his suggestion.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I know the gentleman is going to say there is some change in this contract in that it will cost more money than the $3,000,000. I want to call his attention to the fact that the contract which the Secretary seems to want to sign, as explained to me the other day by the Secretary of the Treasury, has this provision in it:

It is further covenanted and agreed that no claim for compensation for any extra materials or work is to be made or allowed, unless the same be specifically agreed upon in writing or directed in writing by the party of the first part; and that no addition to, omission from, or changes in the work or material herein specifically provided for shall make void or affect the other provisions or covenants of this contract, but the difference in the cost thereby occasioned, as the case may be, shall be added to or deducted from the amount of the contract.

In other words, the Secretary of the Treasury, in submitting the contract that he wants to sign, has a provision in there that could very easily make this Speedway Hospital cost a great deal more than the provisions in the contract which I am going to hand to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BLANTON. That clause is in every Government building contract.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Certainly. It is conceded that it is. But if the Secretary of the Treasury would be consistent, then he would eliminate it from this contract.

I desire to take no more time.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Who drew the contract? Did the gentleman draw the contract?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I did not. It was drawn either by the Shank Co. or their attorneys. I have no intention of drawing contracts for the Secretary of the Treasury or any contractor.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Do you say it provides for any expense over $3,000,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Not the one I submit to you to-day, but the one that was submitted to the Shank Co. by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. And the Shank Co. objected to a contract that allowed them to receive more than $3,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. They want a contract that is fair to the Government, because, as I told the gentleman at that time, Mr. Hines is trying to give the Government a million dollars. Mr. Shank is not taking a dollar profit from the Government. They have put their shoulder to the wheel, and they are good sports, and they are willing to go through with it.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I think all these contracts were drawn in the office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House the contract then presented, ready to be signed by the contractors, was based upon the specifications that were drawn by the Public Health Service itself, and the contractors stated they were ready to sign, but the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service refused to assent to that unless Congress would give $2,500,000 more to put up other buildings, 26, I think, in all, one costing $50,000 for animals for inspection purposes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. As to the hearings had before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I doubt if the gentleman from Nebraska has seen them. Will he cite where that state of facts exists? I submit to the gentleman from Nebraska that he is mistaken in saying that at any Government hearing such a contract was presented; not after the act of December 24, 1919, or after the act of March 3, 1919; not one. But every contract which this contractor says he desires the Treasury to sign contained a proviso that if, after October, wages and materials went up, they would have the right to go into the Court of Claims in excess of $3,000,000. The Secretary of the Treasury refused to sign that, saying that he had no authority for it at all; that it was in plain violation of the statute; and that he could not sign it; and not until right this minute, unless that contract does it, has a contract provided for that. That contract is outside of the statute.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that if this contract has not a joker in it providing for the payment of 1 cent over the $3,000,000 it will be signed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have not seen that contract that the gentleman from South Dakota has; he has got it in his hand; but I think when I read it I shall find some place in it where it makes a liability on the part of the Government for more than $3,000,000, in complying with the statute of October 23 or July 11.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I do not know what the gentleman from North Carolina will find in it, but I am sure that the Secretary of the Treasury will find in it what will provide for the soldiers the facilities which the law requires.

This law, passed on March 3, 1919, was passed when the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] was in the chair and the Democrats were in control of the House. This contract was passed upon by the special Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate when the Democrats were in control. It was passed upon by a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which Senators REED, Hardwick, BECKHAM, TRAMMELL, LENROOT, and FRANCE were members, and they put the amendment into that bill which said that the Secretary of the Treasury should sign this contract. It has been a matter that has been passed upon by some of the leading Democratic lawyers of the United States and some of the Republican lawyers. But the Secretary of the Treasury, I repeat, will not sign this contract because of some personal feeling that he has, or because of that of some person connected with him, toward Mr. Hines, the man who is trying to give this million-dollar hospital to the Government.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the fact is that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] never has exactly understood this proposition. When he says that the act of March 3, 1919, passed when the Democrats controlled this House, directed the Secretary of the Treasury in a mandatory way to sign this contract, he has been misinformed and has not read the act. The fact is that under that law the Secretary was not only not bound to sign this contract, but had the right to spend this money in the construction of another hospital building without taking over the Shank contract at all; and it was thought by the Secretary of the Treasury at one time that the wise thing for him to do would be to build another hospital in the city of Chicago on a site owned by the Government of the United States. While that matter was being considered by the Secretary of the Treasury, and when it was thought that he might do that, a deficiency bill went over to the Senate toward the close of that session. Fearing that the Secretary would not sign the contract with Shank, the Senate inserted a provision requiring him to sign that contract, provided it could be made to suit the needs of the Public Health Service.

Upon the enactment of that law the Secretary submitted the matter to the Public Health Service in order to ascertain their needs. After it had been returned by them it was then submitted to the Supervising Architect for a report as to how much a building such as was required by the Public Health Service would cost. When the report came from the Supervising Architect, it was estimated by that official that it would cost, as I remember, $2,500,000 more. It was then argued that the reason for the additional cost was because the Public Health Service intended to add additional buildings; and therefore, in the subsequent legislation of December 24, the date when the last act was signed, it was required that the contract should be completed within the amount appropriated, $3,000,000; and gentlemen on this floor told me, in response to my questions, that it was their belief that it could be done for $3,000,000 and would be done for $3,000,000. More than one gentleman said that. The Secretary of the Treasury proceeded, in accordance with that law, to offer to sign a contract with the Shank Co. not exceeding $3,000,000.

A conference was held at the Treasury. This matter was brought to my attention yesterday after the matter was brought up in the House by the gentleman from South Dakota on the day previous. The Secretary of the Treasury has submitted this memorandum of a conversation that took place between Mr. Bennet and Mr. Wetmore, representing the contractor, on January 15; and in response to the request of Mr. Wetmore as to whether he would sign a contract not to exceed the lump sum authorized by Congress, Mr. Bennet answered in the negative.

The representative of the contractor said that there should be a provision in the contract that he should receive over and above the $3,000,000 a sum representing the increased cost of labor and material over and above what labor and material cost in October, 1919, the date of the last specification submitted to him. The Secretary of the Treasury took the position, and rightfully so, that under the last mandatory provision of Congress he could not sign an agreement that gave the contractor directly, or by inference, the right to recover from the Government over $3,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. In the law which passed Congress this fall the contractor would have a right to recover in excess of the contract submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Now, the gentleman says that he has expressed the view of the attorney representing the contractor; that under the last act he can recover more than $3,000,000; and yet every man on the floor of the House, when the bill was up on December 18, gentlemen who had most praiseworthy reasons for acquiring the hospital, in response to my question, said that the reason they advocated it was that not a dollar over $3,000,000 could be expended. Now, the gentleman says that the men who are behind the proposition were mistaken and that an additional amount can be spent, and I think that is the opinion of counsel representing the contractor in this matter. I frankly say that I do not believe that it would be the intent of the owner of the building, but his counsel does believe and does suggest that under the last act there is a way they can receive over $3,000,000; but Congress never intended that they should receive over $3,000,000. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] stated to me on the floor that the amount should not exceed $3,000,000, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said he favored it, because $3,000,000 was the outside sum, and for this sum it could be completed. Every man who spoke and advocated it I interrogated, and they said that the intent was that they should be limited to $3,000,000.

Now, the gentleman from South Dakota says that under that law the contractor can come in and get more than $3,000,000, but he never can get it while Carter Glass is Secretary of the Treasury, and I hope that there will never be a Secretary of the Treasury who will allow the owner and contractor to receive more than $3,000,000, which Congress intended should cover the full expenditure for this hospital. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The gentleman asked me to give the name of the man who drew the contract which was given to the Secretary to sign, but I was not certain that I could find it. It was drawn by Lieut. Col. A. A. O'Brien, then and now in the War Department.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That was the war contract; but in this contract, the Shank contract, they would build the hospital and go to the Court of Claims for any excess above $3,000,000. He is coming back to get Congress to give him more than $3,000,000, and yet the gentleman from Nebraska and every man knows that before the Public Buildings Committee he said time and again they were willing to build the building for $3,000,000. Now he says he wants to come back to the Court of Claims and get more, and just as sure as it is signed you will see him back here trying to get more.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have been going over this matter to some extent and I am satisfied that the position of the Secretary of the Treasury is absolutely indefensible. That he refused to sign the contract is evidenced by the letter to the Shank Co. of January 22, which I shall put in the RECORD. That letter settles that controversy. I followed the Secretary of the Treasury on this hospital matter until I saw that I was getting my fingers burned. Let us see what the history of the hospital legislation is, so far as the Cook County Speedway is concerned.

In February, 1919, the Treasury Department came before the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and asked for legislation authorizing the purchase of this building as a hospital for $3,000,000. Then it was claimed that the hospital was just right. I questioned the item when it was on the floor of the House. I questioned the necessity for any more hospitals, for I then thought that our hospital facilities were ample. Later when the matter came before the House in a deficiency bill, the Secretary of the Treasury said that there was no necessity for this hospital. Later on he said it was too large, and for that reason it should not be purchased. And Gen. Blue and other officers of the Public Health Service came before the Committee on Appropriations and said that we should not acquire the hospital, because it was too large and it would cost too much to operate it, and stated they should have the money to build another hospital in Chicago on land owned by the Government.

Less than 60 days ago the Secretary of the Treasury sent to the House through a letter to the Speaker a statement that the hospital is too small and that he wants $4,000,000 in addition to the amount already appropriated to build an ideal hospital there large enough for the demands on the service. If it was just right in 1919, if it was too small a few weeks later, and we now find it is not half large enough, where and how are we to follow the Secretary of the Treasury in his quibbling—I was about to say small dealing—with a very important work?

A few days ago I was invited to go to Chicago to give an address before the Illinois Manufacturers Association. There has been so much said about the Public Health Service, so much said about this hospital, that I wanted to go out and see it, and so I had an officer in charge of the Public Health Service in Chicago take me out and also take me to one of the hospitals in Chicago that is under his care.

I am not a judge as to the value of those buildings, but they are buildings almost a half mile long, fireproof construction, and are located out there by that beautiful suburb of Chicago, Oak Park, Ill., only two or three blocks removed from the elevated railway system, a distance of about 10 miles from Congress Hotel. This magnificent building can be placed in condition to receive patients within 60 days, so it is claimed.

I want to say to the Secretary of the Treasury and the gentlemen on the other side of the House, as well as on this side of the House, that if this contract is signed for the acquisition of the land and the buildings, without regard to the equipment for the hospital, there will be no deficiency appropriation, if I can prevent it, in addition to the $3,000,000 carried in the act. When the Public Health Service came before Congress and asked for a million dollars in the bill, a lump sum to repair hospitals already taken over and which might be taken over in the future, it was the intention to expend a large sum in remodeling an old wooden hospital out at the Great Lakes Training Station. They said they expected to expend only $20,000, but the officer in charge at Chicago told me that his estimate was that to make the wooden hospital available and to build additions, making it a hospital that would take care of the service in Chicago, it would require, he thought, about $100,000. When we asked representatives of the service where they would expend the million dollars they were asking for for repairs for hospitals, they could give us the names of only about 20 hospitals, and the total amount estimated for was $500,000. In this bill we have given them every dollar that they asked for, but we have not given them what they wanted to get under a camouflage. It will be impossible for them to use any part of this in remodeling an old wooden hospital at Chicago when the service has said time and again that these men should not be confined in these wooden hospitals, and by that means prevent the securing of adequate hospital accommodation in Chicago.

I went to the hospital under the Public Health Service there in the city of Chicago. I do not recall now how many men were in that hospital, but I visited the various rooms, I suppose as many as 50. There were in the hospital about 35 more patients than they had beds. I saw rooms there no more than 15 feet long and 12 feet wide, with only one window, that contained three men—three of the boys who helped to carry that flag to imperishable glory—lying there in that little room of that hospital, and some of them had to lie in beds outside, there to gain their health and strength. You can take the responsibility, the Secretary of the Treasury can take the responsibility, for that kind of treatment, if he wants to, but I am unwilling to permit the boys in that cold climate, where the mercury runs down to 20° below zero, to be subjected to all of the dangers of a fire in a wooden hospital—especially in view of the fact that the Treasury Department says it is unwise and unsafe to put the boys in a wooden hospital in the District of Columbia, or in Virginia, or in Texas, or in Kentucky, but that they must have fireproof hospitals there.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that we are getting to a point where Congress will no longer tolerate the quibbling of this man down in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury. [Applause.] Let him sign the contract, and the Committee on Appropriations, of which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] is the honored ranking Democratic member on the deficiency subcommittee, will work together to see that there will not be a penny appropriated in excess of the $3,000,000 for acquiring the land and building the hospital. [Applause.]

CHICAGO BROADVIEW HOSPITAL.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 22, 1920.

Contract.

SHANK CO.,
30 North La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

GENTLEMEN: The act of December 24, 1919, provides as follows:

"* * * That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed immediately to acquire the uncompleted hospital building at Broadview, Cook County, Ill., and the site thereof, consisting of 320 acres, more or less, and to cause the work on said hospital building to be completed and the five proposed auxiliary buildings to be constructed in accordance with plans and specifications transmitted to the Shank Co. July 15, August 16, and September 23, 1919, and the appropriation therefor contained in the act entitled 'An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers,' approved March 3, 1919, together with such further changes in said buildings as may be found necessary or desirable."

Under the provisions of the above law it is not possible to accept your proposal exactly as made, but it is possible to accept it with certain modifications hereinafter given. Accordingly, acceptance is made of your proposal No. 1, contained in letter of October 16, 1919, and subject to such conditions as are hereinafter specified and exclusive of that condition contained in said proposal that it is subject to the terms of the form of contract therein mentioned; acceptance is likewise made of your proposal of January 7, 1920. Under these acceptances you are to convey to the United States 320 acres of land, more or less, constituting the site of the Broadview Hospital, Chicago, Ill., together with the improvements thereon, including the uncompleted hospital building, and to complete said building, making such modifications therein as are necessary in accordance with the specification dated September 14, 1918, for the United States Army General Hospital, Chicago, Ill., and the addendum thereto dated April 11, 1919, written in the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, as modified by the supplementary specification dated July 16, 1919, and the drawings mentioned therein, and as further modified by the addendum specification dated September 23, 1919, and the drawings mentioned therein, together with such additional drawings and specifications as may be furnished you by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department; and to construct five auxiliary buildings, making such modification therein as said Supervising Architect deems necessary, in accordance with the specification (without date) for the construction of an administration building, commandant's quarters, receiving building, power house and laundry for the Public Health Service Hospital No. 2 at Chicago, Ill., and the drawings mentioned in said undated specification, as modified by the addendum specification dated September 23, 1919, together with such additional drawings and specifications as may be so furnished you.

Said real estate (including the uncompleted building) shall be conveyed to the United States free from all liens and encumbrances whatsoever.

The main building is to have three units remodeled so as to provide for the personnel, shops, etc., in accordance with the drawings and specifications mentioned and your letter of January 7, 1920, to the Secretary of the Treasury.

You are also to furnish three service elevators which you state orally were included in your proposal but which were expressly omitted by the specifications.

Said three service elevators in the main building shall be an approved make; the machines, controllers, cars, safety devices, etc., shall be in accordance with the specifications for the seven passenger elevators to be installed in the main building except that the service elevator cars shall be approximately of the size indicated on the plans, and each service elevator shall have a live-load capacity of 3,000 pounds at a speed of 100 feet per minute. Each of these service elevators shall be installed complete in every detail, including electrical connections, ready for service. Complete detail drawings of the elevator, machines, controllers, cars, safety devices, etc., and specifications for same, shall be submitted (in triplicate) to the Supervising Architect for approval before the elevators are installed. Any features in conection with said service elevators which are not covered by the specifications for the other seven passenger elevators shall be substantially the same in character, workmanship, and materials.

Also, you are to cause to be provided, without additional cost to the Government, in addition to the water mains and connections now in place or required by this contract, service, gas, and electric mains, including electric transformers, the service mains to be connected to the main service supplies and to the separate buildings.

Also, you are to provide any additional foundations or to make any change in foundations of the auxiliary buildings as may be found necessary on account of soil conditions, without additional cost to the Government.

The work is to be completed within three months of the date of this letter of acceptance.

In consideration of the above you will be paid, as stated in your proposal, the amount appropriated therefor by statute, which amount is ascertained as follows:

Section 7a of the act of March 3, 1919, makes the total limit of cost of the Broadview Hospital $3,000,000; section 10 of the same act authorizes the employment of technical and clerical services for the preparation of drawings, supervision, traveling expenses, etc., at a total not exceeding $210,000, such amount to be taken from the sums authorized and appropriated for construction purposes. The proportionate share chargeable against the amount authorized for construction purposes for the Broadview Hospital is $73,770.87, so that the amount provided for by statute for the Broadview Hospital is $2,926,229.13, which is the amount that will be paid to you under this contract, less such other amounts as hereinafter provided in this acceptance, viz:

In accordance with your oral proposal, a deduction of $25,000 is made from the total contract price for the substitution of wood frames for metal frames now required for fly screens, which substitution does not affect the metal bar screens in unit D, which are to remain as now required by the drawings and specifications; or, in lieu of this deduction, it is agreed that you will furnish lighting fixtures of such design and character as may be required by the Supervising Architect.

It is a further condition of this acceptance that before beginning work you will submit for consideration a complete list of practicable changes suggested during your conference at this department, by which the cost of the work will be reduced by approximately $75,000.

Payments are to be made as follows:

Three hundred thousand dollars upon the execution and delivery of the contract, bond, warranty deed, abstract of title, and policy of title insurance to the satisfaction of this department.

Approximately 90 per cent of the value of the building as it now stands, such percentage to be based on the proportionate value of the completed work as may be ascertained by the Supervising Architect.

All future payments of approximately 90 per cent of the value of the work executed and satisfactorily in place, as ascertained by the Supervising Architect, acting through the superintendent, will be made monthly, and payment of the balance retained will be made after the final acceptance by the duly authorized representatives of the Treasury Department of all materials and workmanship embraced in the contract, but payment will not be made until every part of the work to the point to which payment is claimed is satisfactorily supplied and executed in every particular and all defects therein remedied to the satisfaction of the Supervising Architect.

It is a condition of this acceptance that the department shall have the right, if it so elects, after a reasonable notice to you, and before you have entered into subcontracts therefor, to furnish any of the materials required in the construction of said buildings; and for any such materials so furnished you shall make a proportionate deduction therefor from the contract price.

It is intended to have the title to this real estate passed upon by the Attorney General of the United States in the usual way, and it is understood as part hereof that you will comply with the usual requirements of the Department of Justice with respect to the evidences of title if anything more is desired than you shall have already furnished this department.

It is understood and agreed that you will execute promptly a formal contract, with bond in the sum of $700,000, guaranteeing the faithful performance of the work, a form for which will be sent you, and sign the stamped set of the said drawings with red label, forwarded under separate cover, the contract, bond, and drawings to be returned immediately for file in the office of the Supervising Architect.

Payment of the above-mentioned price for said land and improvements (including uncompleted building) and the performance of the work hereinbefore mentioned will be made from the appropriation for "Hospital construction, Public Health Service."

Please promptly acknowledge the receipt of this letter and signify your assent to its terms and conditions.

Respectfully, CARTER GLASS, Secretary.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] recalls some of the history with reference to this hospital, and says that last June the Secretary of the Treasury declared the hospital building proposed in Chicago was too large. Well, at that time the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] was of the opinion that not only was that hospital unnecessary but that most of the others were unnecessary. And he proposed, in connection with the deficiency appropriation bill of June, to suspend operations upon that and all other hospitals, and upon the floor of this House you heard him speak for an hour, telling this House that we had more beds than were needed, and that it was absoluteiy unnecessary to proceed with the construction of this building at that time. When he did that the gentleman had this justification: That the Public Health Service furnished the facts showing that we did have more beds than we actually needed at the time.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. It was the Secretary of the Treasury himself who gave me that information.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No matter whether he submitted it, it came from the Public Health Service.

Mr. GOOD. I do not know about that.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The figures were accurate, but the situation changed. The number of boys entitled to the benefits of the acts of Congress has been increasing each month and is still increasing, and with the change of the situation this House decided in December to require the Secretary to sign this contract, providing it did not exceed $3,000,000. Let us see what happened. I hold in my hand the hearings before the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, and on page 33 the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] asked Mr. Bennett, the attorney for Shank & Co., this question:

> How much money will this bill allow above the appropriation already made, $3,000,000?

Mr. Bennett answered:

> Not a cent.
> Mr. CLARK. It does not increase the appropriation at all?
> Mr. BENNETT. Not one penny.

The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] now says that under that act the Secretary is authorized to pay an additional amount or incur an additional obligation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Oh, the gentleman is in error. I said nothing of the kind. I am satisfied that the statement of the chairman of this committee and of the contractor is correct, that this will be built for $200,000 less than the $3,000,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. When the gentleman looks at the report of his remarks he will find that he said this afternoon that the contractor claimed under this act of December that the Secretary could incur an obligation over $3,000,000, and the reporter's notes will prove it——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Oh, the gentleman has read that into my remarks, because that is not what I intended to say.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have not read anything into it. He will see that I am correct when he comes to read the reporter's notes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If that is so, then I want to withdraw the statement.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The statement he made is correct; that the attorney for the contractor claims that under the last act the Government can be made to pay more than $3,000,000, and the attorney has made the same statement to other gentlemen. After making that statement, the gentleman from South Dakota submitted to me a contract which he says the contractor would be glad to sign, and wants to have signed, and that it provides for no expenditure above the $3,000,000. Let us look at the contract. I told him I knew that if it was drawn by the attorney for the contractor, somewhere in it there would be a joker that would allow him to receive more than $3,000,000, and even while listening to him and others in debate I was able to find it. On the fourth page of the contract submitted to me, ninth paragraph, I find just the provision which I feared, which the gentleman intimated was not here. I have said time and again that the Secretary of the Treasury refused to sign this contract, because the contractor, in addition to the $3,000,000, wants an agreement allowing him to recover a sum representing the increased cost in labor and material. The gentleman submits a contract and it provides exactly for what Shank & Co. have been trying to put over the Secretary of the Treasury, and I will read it to you:

> Should the owner, during the course of the construction of said buildings and structures be required by any increase in such union-wage scales or in the market price of such materials to expend more money for the completion of said buildings and structures than that upon which its present contract price is based, then it shall first notify the contracting officer of such fact, and, upon 24 hours' notice to the owner, the contracting officer may from time to time elect to furnish and furnish such materials to the owner, in quantities provided for in the plans and specifications, in which event there shall be deducted by the contracting officer from the contract price hereof a sum equal to the total value of any such materials so furnished to the owner based upon the prices set forth in said schedule.

Now, listen:

> In the event the contracting officer does not within 24 hours after the receipt of such notice of increased cost of material elect to furnish, and, within a reasonable time furnish the same, then the owner shall proceed to purchase such necessary material, and the amount of such increase so required to be paid by the owner shall be reimbursed to the owner by the Government in addition to the contract price herein named.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Here is the joker. I knew they could not submit a contract without having a joker that would require the payment of more than $3,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am glad to yield to the gentleman. Read paragraph 9.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from South Carolina be extended for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Read paragraph 9; I have marked it.

Mr. KITCHIN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. KITCHIN. I want to ask the gentleman from South Carolina, is not that the same contract which the Shank Co. brought to the War Department before the Treasury Department took hold of it to get them to sign and they refused to sign it?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Well, I do not know. All I know——

Mr. KITCHIN. It is a fact.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It was a contract submitted to me by the gentleman from South Dakota on this floor as being a contract requiring the payment of not over $3,000,000, and if he reads it he will find it requires the payment of an indefinite, indeterminate amount to cover the increased cost of material.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for a question in the two minutes which I have secured for him?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The Shank Co. in the contract say that they are willing to abide by the price of labor and material on the 16th day of October, when this contract was submitted.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Why do they put that joker in there if they——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. That joker—It is not a joker; the gentleman refers to it as a joker, but it is not half as elastic as the provisions in the contract submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Where is that contract? The gentleman will not deny that will require over $3,000,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The original contract submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury far exceeded $3,000,000. This contract gives so much more than the contract submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury that there is no comparison.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will not the gentleman admit that under that it will require more than $3,000,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Not more than $3,000,000 if the gentleman will take into consideration the price of labor and materials on October 16, 1917, when the proposal was made. Now, if the Secretary of the Treasury refuses to comply with this law for two or three years more the cost of labor and materials may go up again.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman admits he will have to have more than $3,000,000 if prices go above what they were in October, 1919?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If the cost of labor and production has gone up since October 16, 1919, it may be necessary to exceed the $3,000,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman says it may be necessary to exceed it. Does he not know that it will be necessary?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It would be under the contract submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Oh, no. The only contract submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury does not exceed $3,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The Secretary of the Treasury is now trying to get $3,500,000 out of the Treasury.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The law prohibits the Secretary of the Treasury from signing any contract in excess of $3,000,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Dakota a question. Suppose the gentleman himself was Secretary of the Treasury, with this law on the statute books which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] had put on there and which we had all voted for, would you sign that contract under that law, and if you signed it, would you not be violating the law?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If I had been Secretary of the Treasury and Congress had passed a mandatory law saying I should sign a certain contract, I would have done it, and would have done it a year ago, instead of letting these soldiers lie around dark rooms suffering from improper treatment and improper beds.

Mr. KITCHIN. Is it the old contract which you have submitted, which the War Department refused to sign?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It is the contract which the War Department drew and submitted to Shank. It was drawn by Col. O'Brien.

Mr. KITCHIN. The contract shows it was not submitted to the War Department.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I simply want to say this: The chairman of the Appropriations Committee has gotten upon this floor and announced that, no matter what is done, he is opposed to appropriating any money as a deficiency to pay any additional sum on this contract. Did not the gentleman state that?

Mr. GOOD. I said that I was opposed to appropriating a single dollar in addition to the $3,000,000 for acquiring the land and the building exclusive of what are known as fixtures and equipment.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Did not the gentleman advocate the signing of the contract which I have read in his presence, which requires, in addition to the $3,000,000, that there should be paid a sum representing the increased cost of wages?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know that it is in the contract.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If it is, would the gentleman advocate signing it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have a minute more. The gentleman can not embarrass me.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOOD. I will say this to the gentleman: If the contract provides that it shall be completed, and the land shall be acquired within the limit of cost, that will control. It will control with me, so far as a deficiency appropriation is concerned.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. But I will call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to this:

> In the event the contracting officer does not, within 24 hours after receipt of such notice of increased cost of materials, elect to furnish, and within a reasonable time furnish the same, then the owner shall proceed to purchase such necessary materials, and the amount of such increase so required to be paid by the owner shall be reimbursed to the owner by the Government in addition to the contract price herein named.

Would the gentleman advocate the signing of a contract that provides in that way for the payment of an amount in addition to the contract price of $3,000,000?

Mr. GOOD. Not a dollar in excess of the limit of cost. Of course, I would not. I am in favor of this hospital being acquired and completed within a limit of cost and the contract signed just as it was, except that it shall provide that the auxiliary building shall be fireproof instead of a frame building.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman from Iowa and the Secretary of the Treasury are together in their views. They both stand ready to sign a contract for $3,000,000 and no more.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the contract which the Secretary of the Treasury did sign, and which has been handed to me, authorizes the creating of a deficiency. It absolutely authorizes it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Where is that contract? I want to see it. I have gotten so I love to read them this afternoon.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I read that provision of the contract when I made my remarks.

Mr. GOOD. It is the same provision the gentleman read on Tuesday.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know anything about the particular controversy that has been waged back and forth across the aisle for the last few minutes. But I do want to call the attention of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] in particular to another phase of this proposition now before the House. The gentleman from South Dakota, in the interest, of course, of the proper care and treatment of the soldiers, is very anxious to have the Speedway Hospital purchased by the Government at a cost of $3,000,000. That hospital would take care of a few hundred soldiers. But I want to submit to him that in view of the needs of the Public Health Service it is even more important to have other hospitals not now in charge of the Public Health Service properly repaired and remodeled to take care of the many soldiers who are daily knocking at the doors of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] the other day, when this bill was under discussion, in general debate made a very caustic criticism of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Surgeon General, because he said that they were placing soldiers in dark rooms and in rooms in hospitals not properly suited for the care of patients. He made the statement then that the Secretary of the Treasury was neglecting the soldiers and was not expending the money that was appropriated under the act of March 3, whereas, as a matter of fact, that money was apportioned among the 17 hospitals that have been taken over by the Public Health Service. The money so appropriated was not sufficient, and the Public Health Service came to the Committee on Appropriations and asked for $500,000 additional to be used for the purpose of placing these 17 hospitals in proper repair. The committee has recommended this sum, but the Bureau of Public Health Service asked for $500,000 more.

For what purpose? Those who appeared before the committees stated that they were taking over all of the desirable Army-post hospitals now used by the Army just as rapidly as they become available, and that they needed the money as soon as these hospitals were taken over to put them in proper repair.

Now, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] a few moments ago left the House under the impression that what they wanted with that $500,000 was to repair, as he said, "some old wooden hospital up in Chicago." I deny that. The hearings before me show that they stated that they wanted that $500,000 to take care of these Army hospitals at these Army posts and camps as they become available. The Committee on Appropriations denied to the Bureau of Public Health Service that $500,000, and the result will be that as those hospitals are taken over from time to time, the Secretary of the Treasury will not have one dollar with which to put them in proper shape and remodel them. And I want to suggest to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], who is so much interested in the comparatively few soldiers who would be sent to the Speedway Hospital in Chicago, that he could render to the disabled soldiers of this country a real and greater service if he would take advantage of this opportunity to offer an amendment to increase this appropriation and give the Secretary of the Treasury the $500,000 for which he asked.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Is it not true that the soldiers are being turned out of hospitals all over the United States? Is it not true that there are not sufficient beds for the soldiers in those hospitals? Is not that true?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know whether that is true or not. But if it is true it shows a greater reason why the committee, controlled as it is by the majority on your side of the House, should have granted this $500,000 to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to take care of those soldiers. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Does the gentleman say it would be worth while to give the Secretary of the Treasury $500,000 for anything when he has told us that he will not expend the $3,000,000 that was carried in the bill which was enacted on March 3, 1919?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] has clearly pointed out, the Secretary has not been able to secure the hospital for the $3,000,000 allowed by the law, and this is certainly no reason why we should deny the Secretary the right to spend $500,000 to put Army hospitals in repair and properly remodel them for these patients who are daily applying to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. Now, if the gentleman really wants to perform a service to the soldiers, I say to him that now is the time for him to offer an amendment increasing this appropriation $500,000 and give to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount which he says is necessary to properly take care of and to provide for these disabled soldiers.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If I thought that the Secretary of the Treasury and his aides had sufficient thought for the well-being of the soldiers to expend the money that we have already appropriated, I would be willing to offer an amendment to give them ten times that much. As I said the other day, the Secretary of the Treasury now comes in and asks for $85,000,000. He did that on December 5. I was willing for him to expend twice that much; but he will not spend the money that we have authorized him to spend, and he has taken that position every day since the passage of the law in July, 1919.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The officials of the Public Health Service, since the act of March 3, 1919, was passed, have expended the money appropriated on the repair of these hospitals.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. One minute more, Mr. Chairman. They have not had sufficient money with which to properly repair them. This bill carries the money with which they can put them in proper repair. But the committee has denied to the Secretary of the Treasury $500,000 which he says is necessary for the repair of hospitals to be taken over in the future; and I submit to the gentleman from South Dakota that when it appears later on that he has taken over these hospitals and is unable to repair them the fault will be found to be on his side of the House on account of their refusal to give the sum which he says is needed for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes, and then I will move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have tried to explain why the committee did not give the $1,000,000 for the repair of the hospitals. The Public Health Service could only mention certain hospitals on which they desired money for repairs, and we gave them every dollar that they asked for to repair those hospitals. But we did not give the Secretary a lump sum of $500,000 to go anywhere he pleased and repair hospitals. We did not because, as I said, it was the estimate of the doctor in charge in Chicago that the old wooden hospital at the Great Lakes Training Station, in order to take care of the service, would require an expenditure of about $100,000; and if you appropriated it I was satisfied that Mr. Glass would spend $100,000 in repairing those old wooden hospitals, and that that would be thrown away.

But, Mr. Chairman, when did the Secretary of the Treasury, when did that side of the House, become so apprehensive with regard to waste, with regard to the extravagance of the Public Health Service? Down at Dawsonsprings, Ky., they are at work now in building 2 miles of road. The Secretary's office had before it an estimate that if the Secretary would let the contract for grading 2 miles of road to subcontractors it would cost $31,000 a mile, but the Secretary refused and let the contract to one contractor, the man who made his brags to the department's own representative that the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury had promised to let him have the contract whether he was the low bidder or not, and the estimate of the representative of the department is that it will cost $62,000 a mile—a pure gratuity, if not a real graft, of $62,000 in grading 2 miles of road.

Oh, the gentleman the other day said that Mr. Perry had put in the RECORD, in response to Mr. BYRNS's question, a statement showing that it cost $4.50 per cubic yard to grade or excavate for rock. Mr. Perry went up into Connecticut, in the granite quarry fields; he went over into Ohio, in the granite quarry fields, and compared the quarrying of granite rock in Ohio and Connecticut with the price paid in Kentucky for southern sandstone.

I went to the Department of Agriculture, where the department had approved contracts for 50 miles of rock excavation in the State of Kentucky, and what was the price paid in Kentucky? The price averages from $1.15 a cubic yard to $2 a cubic yard; and yet here was a contract where we were paying $4.50 a yard for excavating rock. What kind of rock? The Government agent says it is a sort of decayed sandstone; that you can plow through it and then move it like sand. And yet that contractor is paid $4.50 a yard for moving it when the Government agent said it could be moved for $2.50 at a profit. This is $62,000 of pure graft in the construction of 2 miles of road and you say nothing about it. You appear to approve it. But when it comes to building a hospital where the walls are all up and nothing is to be done but to put in partitions, plaster, hang the doors, put in the heating plant, and plumbing—the interior—then the Secretary of the Treasury objects because he says it will create a deficiency. Flimsy excuse, indeed. What will he say of the cost of his pet building at Dawsonsprings and of the deficiency his own contract will require?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman from Iowa seems to be entirely familiar with the Speedway proposition. I want to ask this question: Can the Secretary of the Treasury sign any contract except one to complete the job within the cost limit of $3,000,000? Has he any discretion?

Mr. GOOD. The Secretary was authorized by Congress to sign this specific contract. I have never seen the original contract, but it should, if it does not express it, come within the limit of $3,000,000. If there was some way to require it, the additional cost occasioned by obstinacy of the Secretary should be borne by him and not by the Government.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The Secretary could not conform to the law and sign any contract that does not provide for the completing of the enterprise within the cost limit?

Mr. GOOD. I think he can sign a contract that Congress has specifically said that he should sign. I think that authority gives three dates. I can not recall them now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I ask that the gentleman have two minutes more as this is an important matter and I want some information.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Do I understand that there is an act of Congress which designates some particular contract already in being and which can be located that the Secretary shall sign?

Mr. GOOD. I understand so.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That contract which we have directed him to sign would provide that the work may exceed the cost limit of $3,000,000?

Mr. GOOD. No; I understand it is within the cost limit of $3,000,000, although I have never seen the contract.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Is it not in the interest to get hold of the contract which brings the cost price within $3,000,000?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly. The gentleman from South Dakota had a copy of the contract. I understand Mr. Moyle had agreed with the contractor to sign a contract. Everything was agreed to. I understand there had to be some modifications because by the agreement the five auxiliary buildings were to be constructed of concrete instead of wood as originally planned. Some dates had to be changed because of delay. They have already agreed on that. The contractor and Mr. Moyle, the Assistant Secretary, had taken the matter up and agreed to a contract, but the Secretary found a cause for further delay.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. We are getting outside of the particular facts that I had reference to. This particular contract that he is authorized to sign is within a cost limit of $3,000,000?

Mr. GOOD. The letter I shall put in the RECORD practically confirms the statement which Mr. Bennett made to me, that they had agreed upon a contract with the limit of $3,000,000, but the Secretary upset the agreement. These men ought to get together and agree on a contract like men instead of quibbling like little children, and if they do not, some one who will handle it like men will be given the authority to handle the matter.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I agree to that, and if they bring it within $3,000,000, the Secretary ought to sign it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12046, the second deficiency bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, the following leave of absence was granted:

To Mr. O'CONNELL, continued leave of absence, on account of sickness.

To Mr. GOLDFOGLE, for to-day, on account of illness.

To Mr. DUNBAR, for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MCDUFFIE (at the request of Mr. BANKHEAD), for to-day, on account of illness.

To Mr. ELLSWORTH, indefinitely, commencing Saturday, January 31, on account of important business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

By unanimous consent, leave to extend remarks in the RECORD on this bill (H. R. 12046) was granted to Mr. WATSON, Mr. MCFADDEN, and Mr. MACCRATE.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by putting in a letter written by the Secretary of the Treasury to Shank & Co. under date of January 22, 1920.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SENATE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3315. An act to promote Americanization by providing for cooperation with the several States in the education of non-English-speaking persons and the assimilation of foreign-born residents, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education.

S. J. Res. 76. Joint resolution for the investigation of influenza and allied diseases in order to determine their cause and methods of prevention; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 31, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting tentative draft of a bill to reimburse Capt. H. E. Lackey for checkage against his personal account; to the Committee on Claims.

2. A letter from the president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., transmitting, as required by law, a report of the company to the Congress of the United States for the year 1919; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting information regarding the work done by soldiers on public roads in the several States; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. RHODES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1329) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain Indian lands necessary for reservoir purposes in connection with the Blackfeet Indian reclamation project, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 591), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. EDMONDS, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1330) for the relief of V. E. Schermerhorn, E. C. Caley, G. W. Campbell, and Philip Hudspeth, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 592), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CARTER (by request): A bill (H. R. 12157) to amend an act of Congress approved June 30, 1913; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MCARTHUR: A bill (H. R. 12158) to enlarge the boundaries of the Oregon National Forest; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. THOMAS: A bill (H. R. 12159) to provide for the granting of pensions to survivors of certain battalions of Kentucky Militia; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PARRISH: A bill (H. R. 12160) authorizing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across Red River at a point a little east of north of Nocona, in Montague County, Tex.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ESCH: A bill (H. R. 12161) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 12162) authorizing a per diem allowance for officers on recruiting duty; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HUDDLESTON: A bill (H. R. 12163) providing for a survey of Valley River, in Jefferson County, Ala., with a view to making same navigable; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: A bill (H. R. 12164) to authorize the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Columbia River between the town of Pasco and Kennewick, in the State of Washington; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SINNOTT: A bill (H. R. 12165) authorizing the Postmaster General to investigate conditions arising from contracts in star route, screen wagon, and other vehicle service prior to June 30, 1918; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska: Resolution (H. Res. 452) directing the Committee on Banking and Currency to investigate certain complaints against Federal reserve banks; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. MACCRATE: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 285) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the Senate and House of Representatives certain detailed information secured from income and profits tax returns of taxable year 1918; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, urging legislation to pension pioneer veterans of the Indian wars of 1848 and 1856; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, joint memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, favoring submission to the States of an amendment to the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, providing that children of aliens not entitled to naturalization shall retain the nationality of their parents; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, joint memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, urging enactment of legislation to match the appropriation offered by the State of Oregon for the construction of a national road as a monument to Ex-President Roosevelt; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 31, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we can not understand the measure, the moral and spiritual significance of the common facts of life without Thy inspiration and guidance. We have seen from life's minute beginning up at last to man the ever-increasing purpose running. We lift our hearts to Thee to know the meaning of this larger purpose of life to lay hold on eternal life as Thou hast revealed it to us through Thy Son. Grant us this day to live in high and holy communion with Thyself. For Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

FOREIGN SECURITIES IN THE UNITED STATES (S. DOC. NO. 191).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of October 17, 1919, a statement showing the financial obligations of foreign Governments offered in the United States since August 1, 1914, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

ARMY AND NAVY OFFICERS (S. DOC. NO. 194).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication of the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 7th instant, lists of commissioned officers in the War Department assigned to duty in other than strictly combat or line organizations, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

THE AMERICAN METAL CO. (S. DOC. NO. 192).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Alien Property Custodian, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 12th instant, certain information relative to the sale of trust certificates of the American Metal Co. to a syndicate, etc., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

EAST WASHINGTON HEIGHTS TRACTION RAILROAD (S. DOC. NO. 195).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the East Washington Heights Traction Railroad Co. for the year ended December 31, 1919, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4382) to confer on the Court of Claims jurisdiction to determine the respective rights of and differences between the Fort Berthold Indians and the Government of the United States.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6863) to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MAPES, Mr. FOCHT, and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky managers at the conference on the part of the House.

HEIGHT OF BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6863) to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CALDER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CALDER, and Mr. SHEPPARD conferees on the part of the Senate.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY (S. DOC. NO. 193).

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD in connection with what I am now saying a statement which I made to the press yesterday, and also the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. I do this because it contains a brief report of what the committee which has been meeting lately tried to do in regard to the reservations. I think it would be well to have it completely in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT MADE TO THE PRESS IN REGARD TO THE MEETINGS WITH REFERENCE TO RESERVATIONS TO THE TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY BY SENATOR HENRY CABOT LODGE AND SENATOR GILBERT M. HITCHCOCK.

"For the past two weeks nine Senators—five Democrats and four Republicans—have been meeting to consider the question of changes in the reservations adopted by the Senate before the adjournment of the last session of Congress, commonly known as the Lodge reservations. The Senators who thus met did not constitute a committee. The meetings were entirely informal, and it was understood at the outset that they had no power or authority whatever to bind anyone. Their only purpose was to see whether there were any changes which they would be willing to lay before all the other Members of the Senate for their consideration. No final agreement, even to submit any changes to their colleagues in the Senate, was reached. Some tentative agreements were obtained. Reservations 3, 8, 12, and 13 were tentatively accepted by all without change. It was tentatively agreed to submit the following changes to all the other Senators for their consideration:

"(A). The resolving clause, which is as follows:

"Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany concluded at Versailles on the 28th day of June, 1919, subject to the following reservations and understandings, which are hereby made a part and condition of this resolution of ratification, which ratification is not to take effect or bind the United States until the said reservations and understandings adopted by the Senate have been accepted by an exchange of notes as a part and a condition of this resolution of ratification by at least three of the four principal allied and associated powers, to wit, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan:

"The Democrats proposed to strike out all after the word 'ratification,' in line 6, to the end of the clause. The Republicans proposed the following substitute:

"Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany signed at Versailles on the 28th of June, 1919, subject to the following reservations and understandings, which are hereby made a part and a condition of this resolution of ratification, which ratification is not to take effect or bind the United States until the said reservations and understandings adopted by the Senate have been accepted as a part and a condition of this resolution of ratification by the allied and associated powers, and a failure on the part of the allied and associated powers to make objection to said reservations and understandings prior to the deposit of ratification by the United States shall be taken as a full acceptance of such reservations and understandings by said powers.

"This proposal was tentatively agreed to.

"Reservation No. 4, which is as follows:

"4. The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction and declares that all domestic and political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs, including immigration, labor, coastwise traffic, the tariff, commerce, the suppression of traffic in women and children and in opium and other dangerous drugs, and all other domestic questions, are solely within the jurisdiction of the United States and are not under this treaty to be submitted in any way either to arbitration or to the consideration of the council or of the assembly of the League of Nations, or any agency thereof, or to the decision or recommendation of any other power.

"Various changes were suggested to this reservation. It was finally tentatively agreed to insert the word 'internal' before the word 'commerce,' in line 3, and to strike out, in line 5, the words 'all other domestic questions,' which were a superfluous repetition.

"Reservation No. 6, which is as follows:

"6. The United States withholds its assent to articles 156, 157, and 158, and reserves full liberty of action with respect to any controversy which may arise under said articles between the Republic of China and the Empire of Japan.

"It was tentatively agreed to strike out the words 'between the Republic of China and the Empire of Japan.'

"Reservation No. 7:

"7. The Congress of the United States will provide by law for the appointment of the representatives of the United States in the assembly and the council of the League of Nations, and may in its discretion provide for the participation of the United States in any commission, committee, tribunal, court, council, or conference, or in the selection of any members thereof and for the appointment of members of said commissions, committees, tribunals, courts, councils, or conferences, or any other representatives under the treaty of peace, or in carrying out its provisions, and until such participation and appointment have been so provided for and the powers and duties of such representatives have been defined by law no person shall represent the United States under either said League of Nations or the treaty of peace with Germany or be authorized to perform any act for or on behalf of the United States thereunder, and no citizen of the United States shall be selected or appointed as a member of said commissions, committees, tribunals, courts, councils, or conferences except with the approval of the Senate of the United States.

"It was tentatively agreed to substitute for this reservation the following wording, which is precisely the same in effect except that under the substitute there is no promise made to pass such a statute, the original form containing the words 'The Congress of the United States will provide':

"No person is or shall be authorized to represent the United States, nor shall any citizen of the United States be eligible, as a member of any body or agency established or authorized by said treaty of peace with Germany, except pursuant to an act of the Congress of the United States providing for his appointment and defining his powers and duties.

"Reservation No. 10, which is as follows:

"10. If the United States shall at any time adopt any plan for the limitation of armaments proposed by the council of the League of Nations under the provisions of article 8, it reserves the right to increase such armaments without the consent of the council whenever the United States is threatened with invasion or engaged in war.

"Many suggestions were made for changes in this reservation, and it was finally tentatively agreed to adopt the following substitute proposed by the Republicans:

"No plan for the limitation of armaments proposed by the council of the League of Nations under the provisions of article 8 shall be held as binding the United States until the same shall have been accepted by Congress.

"Reservation No. 1, which is as follows:

"1. The United States so understands and construes article 1 that in case of notice of withdrawal from the League of Nations, as provided in said article, the United States shall be the sole judge as to whether all its international obligations and all its obligations under the said covenant have been fulfilled, and notice of withdrawal by the United States may be given by a concurrent resolution of the Congress of the United States.

"It was proposed by the Democrats to strike out the word 'concurrent' and insert the word 'joint.' It was suggested by the Republicans to amend this reservation by striking out all after the word 'given,' in line 7, and inserting 'by the President or whenever a majority of both Houses of Congress may deem it necessary.'

"No decision was reached as to the changes proposed in this reservation.

"Reservation No. 9, which is as follows:

"9. The United States shall not be obligated to contribute to any expenses of the League of Nations, or of the secretariat, or of any commission or committee or conference or other agency organized under the League of Nations or under the treaty, or for the purpose of carrying out the treaty provisions unless and until an appropriation of funds available for such expenses shall have been made by the Congress of the United States.

"It was proposed to strike out the word 'or,' in line 3, and insert 'except the office force and expenses.' No decision was reached upon this change.

"Reservation No. 11:

"11. The United States reserves the right to permit, in its discretion, the nationals of a covenant-breaking State, as defined in article 16 of the covenant of the League of Nations, residing within the United States or in countries other than that violating said article 16, to continue their commercial, financial, and personal relations with the nationals of the United States.

"It was proposed to strike out, in lines 19 and 20, the words 'or in countries other than that violating said article 16.' No decision was reached on this proposal.

"Reservation No. 14, which is as follows:

"14. The United States assumes no obligation to be bound by any election, decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly in which any member of the league and its self-governing dominions, colonies, or parts of empire, in the aggregate have cast more than one vote, and assumes no obligation to be bound by any decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly arising out of any dispute between the United States and any member of the league if such member, or any self-governing dominion, colony, empire, or part of empire united with it politically has voted.

"The following was proposed as a substitute for this reservation:

"Until part 1, being the covenant of the League of Nations, shall be so amended as to provide that the United States shall be entitled to cast a number of votes equal to that which any member of the league and its self-governing dominions, colonies, or parts of empire, in the aggregate, shall be entitled to cast, the United States assumes no obligation to be bound, except in cases where Congress has previously given its consent, by any election, decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly in which any member of the league and its self-governing dominions, colonies, or parts of empire in the aggregate have cast more than one vote.

"The United States assumes no obligation to be bound by any decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly arising out of any dispute between the United States and any member of the league if such member or any self-governing dominion, colony, empire, or part of empire united with it politically, has voted.

"No decision was reached on this change.

"Reservation No. 2:

"2. The United States assumes no obligation to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country or to interfere in controversies between nations—whether members of the league or not—under the provisions of article 10, or to employ the military or naval forces of the United States under any article of the treaty for any purpose, unless in any particular case the Congress, which, under the Constitution, has the sole power to declare war or authorize the employment of the military or naval forces of the United States, shall by act or joint resolution so provide.

"Various amendments and substitutes were offered to this reservation in regard to article 10 of the treaty. It was found impossible to agree on any change in this reservation to be presented to the other Senators.

"Reservation No. 5:

"5. The United States will not submit to arbitration or to inquiry by the assembly or by the coucil of the League of Nations, provided for in said treaty of peace, any questions which in the judgment of the United States depend upon or relate to its long-established policy, commonly known as the Monroe doctrine; said doctrine is to be interpreted by the United States alone and is hereby declared to be wholly outside the jurisdiction of said League of Nations and entirely unaffected by any provision contained in the said treaty of peace with Germany.

"It was proposed by the Democrats to strike out the words 'said doctrine is to be interpreted by the United States alone.' To this consent could not be obtained.

"Speaking for myself alone, I have only this to say: That I was unable to agree to any change in reservations 2 and 5, dealing with article 10 and the Monroe doctrine. In my opinion reservation No. 2, which provides that we shall assume no obligation of any kind under article 10, except the one mentioned in the treaty, that we should ourselves respect the boundaries of other nations, can not possibly permit of change.

"The change proposed in reservation No. 5 in regard to the Monroe doctrine was an absolutely vital one, because it was asserted as an official interpretation by the representatives of Great Britain that the Monroe doctrine under the treaty was to be interpreted by the league. To this I, for one, could never assent, and in view of the statement made in Paris by the British delegation, to which I have referred, I regard the line which it was proposed to strike out as absolutely necessary. The United States has always interpreted the Monroe doctrine alone.

It is our policy. No one else has ever attempted to interpret it, and it is something, in my judgment, which ought never to be permitted, even by the most remote implication. If we should strike out that phrase now after it had been accepted by the Senate, it would lead to a direct inference that we left that question open. The right to interpret the Monroe doctrine, pertaining to the United States alone, must never be open to question.

"H. C. LODGE."

[From the Washington Post, Jan. 31, 1920.]

SENATOR HITCHCOCK'S STATEMENT.

"Senator HITCHCOCK said:

"'To-morrow I shall not be here, but Senator WALSH of Montana will give notice for me that on Tuesday, February 10, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the peace treaty. I shall be back here before that time. It is my intention to return to Washington from my home in Nebraska Thursday next.

"'At the meeting to-day we presented the last Taft reservation on article 10 as our proposition of a compromise. There was some conversation as to the exact meaning of the reservation. We urged the Republicans to say whether they could accept it or consider it.

"'Senator LODGE said definitely he could not accept it. We then asked if the Republicans had a counterproposal or would make one. Senator LODGE replied that he could not make any proposition on article 10 other than the one contained in the LODGE program of reservations. He said he could not consent to any modification.

"'We did not take up the Monroe doctrine, but Senator LODGE was equally positive there could be no alteration of that reservation. We had accepted the reservation on the Monroe doctrine, with the exception that we proposed an elimination of the right of the United States alone to interpret it.

"'I suggested that perhaps we could agree on some way of taking the treaty up in the Senate, but Senator LODGE said he did not care to have any meeting on that subject.'

"'Do you think you have enough votes to get the treaty up in the Senate?' Senator HITCHCOCK was asked.

"'We do not know.'

COUNTS ON 43 VOTES.

"'How many Democrats do you count on?' was the next inquiry.

"'There will be at least 43 Democratic votes,' replied Senator HITCHCOCK. 'Before the question of the Senate taking up the treaty comes before it for determination conferences will have been held by the Democrats, and possibly the Republicans, to decide whether the reservations as tentatively agreed upon in the bipartisan conferences shall be taken up singly or en bloc.

"'There was no dramatic climax to the conferences. It was agreed by all that unless some compromise could be worked out on article 10 it would be useless to continue the meetings.'

"'Was your move to-day discussed with the White House in advance?' Senator HITCHCOCK was asked.

"'It was not. We are running entirely independently of the White House in this action.'

"Senator HITCHCOCK said he was satisfied that Senator UNDERWOOD will make no move to get consideration of his resolution for a formal committee of conciliation until after the effort is made to get the treaty before the Senate for open consideration on the floor."

Mr. LODGE. I ask at the same time that the statement may be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, in behalf of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], I give notice that on Tuesday, the 10th day of February, he will ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany.

RAILROAD CONTROL.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, there has been a good deal in the newspapers of late about the farmers of the country joining hands with the railroad brotherhoods in favoring and demanding an extension for two years of the Government control of railroads, and a good deal about the farmers of the country favoring further Government control of railroads, even Government ownership of railroads. A few days ago a delegation of farmers—I read in the newspapers—from Wisconsin called at the White House to urge the President to withdraw his order for the restoration of the railroads to their owners the 1st of March and urging him to favor an extension for two years of the Government control of railroads.

I have a statement issued on that subject by Mr. E. A. Calvin, Washington representative of the Association of State Farmers Union Presidents. It is one of the best and most sensible statements on the subject I have seen, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ASSOCIATION OF STATE FARMERS UNION PRESIDENTS,
Washington, D. C., January 29, 1920.

To Members of the United States Congress:

As considerable is being said in the press and elsewhere to the effect that delegations of farmers have recently visited Washington, demanding that the Government retain control of the railroads for at least two years, and stating that this is the wish of the farmers of this country, I feel it to be my duty as a representative of the farmers to set forth their views on this question and to transmit to you resolutions which were adopted by different farm organizations representing the actual American farmers.

At the annual meeting of the Oklahoma Division of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, held on August 19 and 20, 1919, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"We view with alarm and oppose the Government ownership of railroads, and especially the Plumb plan, of the Government buying the railroads at public expense, turning them over to the railroad employees, and guaranteeing the railroad employees whatever wages they demand and a division of the profits. If Congress in its wisdom does this, we ask them to also buy all of our farms and their equipment, hire the farmers to operate them at two-thirds of the hourly wage scale paid the average railroad employee, and sell the production to the consumer at cost."

This about expresses the views of an overwhelming majority of the farmers of the Nation, who are members of the Farmers' Union and other farm organizations in the several States, including Louisiana, Alabama, Ohio, Texas, Illinois, and Iowa, which organizations adopted similar resolutions opposing Government ownership.

At the annual meeting of the American Farm Bureau Federation, held in Chicago November 14 last, the following resolution was adopted:

"We are opposed to Government ownership of public utilities. We demand the early return of the railroads to private control, under such conditions and regulations as will render adequate service at just and equitable rates. We particularly demand immediate attention to restoring the efficiency of livestock and other perishable transportation, both in car equipment and train schedules."

If there is any class of our citizens who have suffered from inefficient railroad service and delay in transportation in the last two or three years, it is the farmers; and you can take it as a fact, if we are to believe what they say in their resolutions, that a majority of the farmers of this Nation desire the return of the railroads to their owners at the earliest possible moment, and we consider the President's announcement that they shall be returned on March 1 as sound in principle and highly expedient under existing conditions.

At the fifty-third annual session of the National Grange, at Detroit, Mich., November 18, 1919, the following resolution was adopted:

"While recognizing the evils of uncurbed power growing from swollen fortunes in the hands of unscrupulous and ambitious individuals, the National Grange declares that in a government of a free democracy is lodged ample power to curb all such evils. We declare our opposition to Government ownership and to nationalization of business and industry. We favor the safeguarding and protection of private property on the broad ground that only by the full development of the right of private property can there be perpetuated the full measure of individual initiative and emulation upon which a democracy is based and by which its future is assured."

All fair-minded people will readily agree that the above is sound in principle and in harmony with our democratic form of government. The experience of the last three years of the Government's endeavoring to engage in operating and conducting different lines of business has demonstrated the folly of nationalizing business under control of the Federal Government by commissions or licenses, and the fact has been asserted, and has not been denied, that when the Government endeavored to produce castor oil, those in charge of this industry for the Government succeeded in producing only 2 quarts at a cost of several million dollars. I feel safe in asserting that if this task had been left to the common-sense farmers of Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, and Oklahoma, where castor-oil beans are grown, the Government would have received an abundance of castor oil at a minimum cost.

Another resolution adopted by the grange is very pertinent and appropriate at this time:

"In war time price fixing may have been necessary; in peace time the grange regards Government price fixing as unjustifiable and indefensible."

What the farmers of this Nation most desire is to extend the market for American products all over the world, and especially at this particular time, when the teeming millions of Europe and Asia are reported to be suffering for the lack of clothing and food; and if steps are taken to open the industries of Europe and the markets of the world to American products, and production in our country be restored to normal, those engaged in agriculture, manufacturing, and all avenues of distribution will soon enjoy an unprecedented prosperity, and at the same time the suffering in European and Asiatic countries will be greatly relieved.

What the farmers want is constructive and not destructive legislation. They are not asking, nor do they desire, any special legislation for the benefit of the farmers only. They want equal opportunities for all, and special privileges for none, and if this policy is adopted by our Government and extended over the world's markets, there will be a revival in all industries as well as that of agriculture, and they desire to extend the American markets for foods and raw materials as well as manufactured articles to all nations of the world.

The farmers everywhere are on record as opposing the establishing and maintaining by the Federal Government of employment bureau agencies over the country to be conducted by the Federal Government, and are opposed to all similar class legislation. They want to be left alone in the pursuance of their business, and do not want their affairs interfered with by socialistic rules and regulations promulgated by a certain department at Washington.

Respectfully,

E. A. CALVIN.

HERBERT C. HOOVER.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, quite a good deal of criticism has been indulged in with reference to Mr. Hoover, and there has been question as to his Americanism and his citizenship. I wish to say that while I had charge in the Senate of the food-control bill I came in frequent contact with Mr. Hoover, and I found him at all times to be thoroughly loyal to this country, thoroughly patriotic, and using his best endeavors to assist in successfully prosecuting the war.

I saw in the New York World of the 28th instant a statement with reference to Mr. Hoover over the signature of Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, president of Stanford University, who has known him for a great many years. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SHOWS HOOVER KEPT IN CLOSE TOUCH WITH UNITED STATES.

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, CALIF., January 27.

The campaign of lies about Herbert Hoover that is again being given free circulation is an insult to the intelligence of the American people. If facts are sought, I consider it my duty as Hoover's most intimate friend since boyhood to state the truth for those who wish it, so that they may not be misled by the renewal of the former deliberate attempt to attack his nationality, citizenship, and Americanism.

I have maintained close contact with Mr. Hoover throughout his career and know intimately of his comings and goings; his family, birth, raising, and education are known to me in detail. Iowa, Oregon, and California were his only residences, except for his work on the geological survey of Arkansas.

Since his graduation from Stanford University in mining and engineering his professional life always has had a world scope. It began during the period of some 12 years prior to the war, when he enjoyed an international practice as an engineer. No calendar year ever went by, with the exception of 1898 and 1917, in which he was not for some portion of the year a resident of the United States.

On these two occasions of considerable absence he was engaged in engineering constructive work in Australia. His engineering practice has taken him into every country in the world. It is a credit to the universities of the United States that her engineers are in such demand in such work.

It is within my knowledge that the total period that Hoover could have been actually in England would not exceed an aggregate of more than 3 or 4 years out of the total 46 of his life, although at times he left his family there when he was obliged to journey to Russia and other parts of Europe on professional business. His son came home in time for the fall term of school in California as soon as he was old enough for public school.

Mr. Hoover has been actively connected with Stanford University, acting as adviser to the president in the engineering department or as a trustee of the university. For over 12 years he has maintained for his family a home either in San Francisco or at the university. During this entire time his life has emphasized those sterling American qualities that are the pride of us all.

As his friend, college mate, physician, and colleague I am happy to say that I know no finer character, no better American, no more genuine lover of the United States than Herbert Hoover.

I hope that we may speedily have conditions in this country so that vilification, tirades, and abuse may be supplanted by constructive public service.

RAY LYMAN WILBUR,
President of Stanford University.

REAR ADMIRAL CARY T. GRAYSON.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, a lady, Miss Davis, came to my committee room a week or 10 days ago and made complaint that she had been evicted from her rooms or property that she had occupied, the property being owned by Admiral Grayson, and stated that it was because of an increase of rent demanded. The attorney for Admiral Grayson, or Mrs. Grayson, has written me a letter explaining the transaction. The letter states that Miss Davis was evicted for nonpayment of rent and that the property has since been rented for a lower rental than was paid by the evicted tenant.

I am glad to present this letter, and I ask to have it printed with that explanation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I did not quite understand what the letter contains.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois stated that complaint had been made that some lady was evicted from the premises of Admiral Grayson upon the grounds that the rent had been increased. He files a letter from Admiral Grayson's attorney stating that she was evicted for nonpayment of rent, and that the premises have since been rented for a less sum than they had been rented to her.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 27, 1920.

HON. LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: My attention has been called to your remarks in the Senate on Friday, January 16, in which you stated that you have been informed that Admiral Grayson had evicted a woman tenant from a house of which he was the owner because she objected to an attempted profiteering raise in rent on his part. I assume that as a fair-minded man you will be as anxious to correct an error in your statement as you were to condemn Admiral Grayson because of a supposed delinquency on his part. He is the owner of 1602 Sixteenth Street NW., in this city, which adjoins the house where Admiral and Mrs. Grayson reside. On the 31st day of October, 1918, Susan L. Davis entered into a lease agreement with John W. Thompson & Co. (Inc.), the latter acting as the agents for the owner, by the terms of which Miss Davis rented 1602 Sixteenth Street, partially furnished, for the period of one year beginning October 10, 1918, at a monthly rental of $175 per month, payable in monthly installments in advance on the 10th day of each month beginning October 10, 1918. Almost immediately after she took possession of the premises Miss Davis began to fall back in the payment of rent, until it became necessary to enter suit against her for the possession of the premises. This step was decided upon by John W. Thompson & Co. (Inc.), and, acting as their attorney, I brought suit in its name, under the provision of the aforementioned lease, in the municipal court of the District of Columbia. This cause was known as Landlord and Tenant Proceedings No. 174673, and was for possession of the premises by reason of the nonpayment of rent provided for in the lease. At the hearing of the cause judgment was given in favor of John W. Thompson & Co. (Inc.) and against Miss Davis. After judgment had been obtained against her, Miss Davis came in and paid $175 and $1.85 costs of the suit. This paid the rent up to April 10, 1919, and $100 on account of the month ending May 10, 1919, leaving $75 due on the month ending May 10, 1919. I had numerous interviews with Miss Davis during the month of June in an endeavor to collect the rent, which she promised to pay faithfully many times but which she neglected to do.

It thereupon became necessary to institute suit against her again, which I did in the early part of July, in Landlord and sion of premises and for $425 rent due up to and including the 9th day of July, 1919, being $75 balance due for the month ending May 9, 1919, and $175 for the month ending July 9, 1919. When the case was called Miss Davis failed to appear, and although I could have taken judgment by default I refused to do so, and had the case set down for hearing at a later date. I saw Miss Davis personally and had her agree upon the date of the hearing, and that she would be there in court. When the case was called again she neglected to appear and judgment was had against her for possession of the premises and for $425 rent up to the 10th day of July, 1919. Miss Davis pleaded so hard to be allowed to stay in the house and made so many promises that she would pay, not only the arrears in rent but all future rent, that I agreed to allow her to stay on for a month or two to see if she could make good her promises. She was keeping a boarding house, and she received from roomers and boarders in excess of $900 per month, according to the figures given to me by some of the boarders in the house. It appeared to me that being in receipt of so much money each month she could pay the rent if she were so inclined, and I believed her when she said that she would do so. I was very loath to dispossess her and put her out in the street, because of the many "hard-luck tales" she had to tell. It became apparent, however, that she abused my confidence, and on September the 18th it became necessary for me to take steps to dispossess her and put a deputy marshal in the premises, which I did by virtue of the second judgment above referred to, action under which I had postponed in order to give her an opportunity to live up to these promises made by her. She thereupon paid part of the rent due and entered into a written agreement with me to pay one-half of the money which she received from her boarders on account of current rent and back rent. She did not live up to this agreement, however, and it was not until September 20 that I was able to collect the $425 which was due on the rent up to July 10, 1919, and for which I had obtained a judgment as aforesaid. It became necessary for me to sue her again, which I did in Landlord and Tenant Proceedings No. 179632, and obtained judgment against her for the premises. I then referred the matter to Mrs. Grayson, who acted for her husband, whose time was taken up by the President. As a matter of fact, all my dealings have been with Mrs. Grayson, and I never spoke to Admiral Grayson in my life until after this case was completely closed. I explained to her the difficulty I had in collecting the rent, and also that it was my belief that Miss Davis would not pay either the current rent or the back rent, and that my advice was that she should be dispossessed of the premises. Mrs. Grayson, however, was very sympathetic toward Miss Davis and relied upon Miss Davis's numerous promises to pay. She instructed me to allow Miss Davis to remain in the house another month. At the end of that time Miss Davis not only did not pay anything on the accrued rental but paid only $100 of the $175 due for the current month. When I reported this to Mrs. Grayson she was still generous enough to allow Miss Davis to stay on in the house in hope that she would be able to extricate herself from her financial difficulties. Miss Davis did not live up to her promises to pay, and in our opinion was able to do so but refused to do so. It thereupon became necessary to dispossess her, which was done on or about the 20th day of December, 1919, at which time Miss Davis owed $75 rent on the month ending August 10, 1919, and $175 for each month thereafter, making a total of $775 due up to and including the 10th day of December, 1919. She has not paid and refuses to pay anything on account of this back rent, and it was for this and not for any refusal to pay an increased rental that she was dispossessed. She was treated as leniently and generously as any tenant that I ever knew or heard of. So far from profiteering, I might say that Admiral Grayson has rerented the house for a less price than he rented it to Miss Davis, and that he was induced to rent it to Miss Davis to be conducted as a boarding house right next door to his own home only because, at that time, there were numerous war workers in the city without shelter. The rental paid for this house containing eight bedrooms, two bathrooms, a large parlor, dining room, and kitchen was extremely moderate. The statements made in this letter can be verified by the records of the municipal court of the District of Columbia, by correspondence with Miss Davis, copies of which are in my possession, and by testimony of a number of boarders in Miss Davis's house whose names I will furnish you if you so desire.

Very truly, yours,

I. J. COSTIGAN.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I invite the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the guardian of the RECORD, to the request of the Senator from Illinois. Does he think it proper to print such communications in the RECORD?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I expect within a day or two now to have statistics prepared in relation to the printing not only of the RECORD but the printing of speeches. I hope to present them to the Senate in a very few days. I am quite sure that when the statistics are presented the Senate of the United States is going to agree to stop the printing of matter of every conceivable character and nature in the RECORD.

We have seven men scouring the country to-day for paper upon which to print the RECORD. Senators will notice that in the last few days the RECORD has been printed upon paper that is not black, but nearly so; the poorest sort of paper. We never would have used it in the Government Printing Office a few years ago for any purpose whatever. It is all the paper that we can get in the United States to print the RECORD upon, and if we are going to have a RECORD, we have got to conserve the print paper.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, in his criticism of the use of newsprint paper, did the Senator from Utah extend it to the various departmental activities engaged in sending out many tons of material? Literally, tons of it come to my office.

Mr. SMOOT. I have done so many times, and I will say to the Senator that later—and I have the matter under way now—we shall find out exactly what printing has been done by each one of the departments.

Mr. President, I have from newspapers of the country letters referring to reports from the Government departments and showing that there is printing only upon one side of the paper—whole reports are so printed—with absolutely no use made of half of the paper. We also find that some of the departments are to-day sending out such printed matter in linen envelopes.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. It seems to me the newspapers should never complain of the scarcity of print paper so long as they devote two or three pages daily to the sporting news. Why can they not eliminate those two or three pages of sporting news? We should certainly get along much better if they did so.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is much in what the Senator from Minnesota says. I may go further than that, and say that I think the Sunday newspapers throughout the United States have grown to such proportions that there ought to be a halt called on their size by the newspaper publishers themselves.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me at that point?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The few reports which I get from the newspapers in reference to this matter are from what might be denominated the smaller newspapers, the smaller dailies and weeklies; they are not the newspapers which are known as the large metropolitan newspapers. Those smaller newspapers universally complain of the paper which they think is uselessly consumed by the large newspapers, particularly in the Sunday editions, and the funny page, and also the sporting news, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has suggested. They claim that because they are small papers and have not so much money invested and are not able to purchase the large amount of paper purchased by the metropolitan press, they are discriminated against in favor of the larger papers, which get their paper cheaper than they can. They complain that they are not able to get even sufficient paper to print their small editions; and many of them have gone out of business.

Mr. SMOOT. I have received, I was going to say, thousands of just such complaints as those which are referred to by the Senator from Nebraska. The larger newspapers have contracts for their paper in some cases for years ahead; and to-day the small newspapers of the country are doing just what we are compelled to do now to secure paper for the RECORD; they are hunting from one end of the country to the other in order to purchase sufficient paper to print their regular edition.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. SMOOT. And they are paying almost any price asked in order to get it.

Mr. NORRIS. The fact is they are paying prices that are four or five times what they paid previously, and are paying much higher prices than other papers pay for their newsprint paper.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be the case.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will permit me, I will give him an instance of the practice which has just been commented upon. I heartily agree with what the Senator from Utah has said about the reckless and almost criminal waste of newsprint paper by some of the departments of the Government. An instance of it came to my knowledge only the other day. I received a communication from Mr. Will A. Campbell, editor of the Helena (Mont.) Independent, accompanied by exhibits in the form of some printed material which he had received from some department of the Government which maintains a mailing list and sends out Government publications. I can not say now just what department it is, for I have not the exhibits with me, but he had received three copies of an identical publication. One was addressed to Mr. Will A. Campbell, Helena, Mont.; another was addressed to Mr. W. A. Campbell, Helena, Mont.; and another was addressed to the editor of the Independent, Helena, Mont. They were all the same thing, and my correspondent writes me that such occurrences are frequent; that that is only an instance of what is happening every day.

Here is an instance of absolute waste brought about by pure and sheer carelessness. A great deal of it could be remedied by proper attention on the part of the departments to their mailing lists and to the documents they send out. There should be some remedy for this waste. I hope some method of stopping it may be found and adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, along the line of the observations of the Senator from Montana I will say that I have no doubt that there is not a business man in the United States who does not receive every week in the year over 100 circulars of the same kind from the departments of our Government. Not long ago I had a business man collect for me the publications and documents received by him in the course of three days, and in those three days, as I remember, 165 Government publications were received by that one business man of Kansas.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Government publications?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; Government publications. I asked him to send them to me just as he received them; I opened the envelopes containing the publications and sorted them out. There were 11 of one kind from different departments of the Government, word for word alike, and there were 8 of another kind word for word alike. Talk about the waste of paper! It is wicked on the part of the Government of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Senate has been very economical in the space occupied by it in the RECORD. I have refrained from disturbing the Government Printing Office greatly during this session. I have had the impulse, but have succeeded in resisting it. There is in the south end of my district a newspaper known as the Daily Breeze, which enjoys a very healthful circulation for a country newspaper publishing information not only as to its own affairs but as to the affairs of other people. Its editor is Frank Reed. He recently wrote me that he had been fined $10 by the internal-revenue collector of his district because he was late in filing his capital-stock return, which should have been in the form of an affidavit that the par value of the stock of the Breeze Printing Co. did not exceed $99,000. The capital stock was $4,000. The company prints a daily paper in a town of about 6,000 population. Under the law the internal-revenue collector could have assessed a fine of $10,000, but he wisely made it an amount which it was possible for the Breeze to pay.

So the Breeze paid up and continued on its way. Mr. Reed writes me:

> Our excuse in mitigation of this crime was that the business mail from the Internal Revenue Office, being franked, is identical in appearance with the mail from every department of the Government, which comes to this office in such volume that it would require a private secretary to separate the important mail from that which goes into the waste basket, and, not being possessed of a sufficient income to hire a private secretary, this call for the report went into the waste basket with a great deal of newsprint wasted by the departments, to the editor's subsequent discomfiture.

This communication I have selected from probably a thousand similar ones on this subject from a single State. The departmental mail has become a public pest even to a newspaper man. These knights of the paste pot and shears are entitled to protection from governmental activities along this line, and they are asking for it, and I think, it being in the line of economy of print paper, that it would be well for the department to heed their demand.

Mr. President, if I did not ask to have the letter from the attorney of Admiral Grayson printed at length in the RECORD I should like to do so, because in fairness to him it ought to be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The order has already been made to print the letter in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word in relation to the printing that has been ordered by the Senate. I have had extracted from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the proceedings of the Senate all of the speeches that have been delivered on the peace treaty. I have had them bound in one volume, which I have here upon my desk. This [exhibiting] is the result. There are a few over 3,000 printed pages, containing an average of 2,100 words per page, or a total number of words of 6,300,000. Those represent the speeches delivered on the floor of the Senate. I started to segregate the pages of matter that have been inserted in the RECORD at the request of Senators, including newspaper articles, editorials, and letters from citizens; but it soon developed that it was altogether impossible to put them in any reasonable number of books. So it was concluded to abandon the effort. This shows, Mr. President, where we are drifting; and I hope that the Senate, sooner or later——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is that a public document?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is not a public document. It is a collection I have had made of all the speeches, printed in one volume.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would be a good thing to have it printed as a public document.

OFFICE SPACE FOR DISTRICT RENT COMMISSION.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to an item that appeared in the Washington Post this morning. It reads as follows:

> RENT BOARD OFFICE FAILS TO SATISFY—LOCATION WILL HAMPER WORK ON HOUSING, SAYS COMMISSIONER MASON.
> With more than 1,000,000 square feet of floor space available in the Government office buildings in Washington, Guy Mason, of the District Rent Commission, declared yesterday the choice of the rear of the fifth floor of the Hooe Building, 1330 F Street NW., for the commission's office was an outrage to the public, which has been awaiting anxiously for the rent commission to find a speedy remedy for the rent situation here. The commissioners hope to find a building more suited to their purposes.
> "The commissioners are extremely anxious to attack the housing problem in Washington," said Mr. Mason, "and the Public Buildings Commission, of which Senator REED SMOOT is chairman, has placed an additional obstacle in our way by assigning us to offices which will not be ready for occupancy for two or three weeks, and when ready their position on the fifth floor of the building will become an added inconvenience when large numbers of complainants start coming to lay their cases before the commissioners in person."
> The commission must pay for occupancy and lighting expenses 83 cents a square foot of the 3,200 square feet allotted in the Hooe Building, according to Mr. Mason.

I am not acquainted with Mr. Mason, but there is scarcely a word of truth in that article. If that newspaper report is true, I can only say if that is the kind of a rent commissioner we have in the District of Columbia as far as he is concerned the renters need not expect results of a practical nature, but will receive false and sensational statements through the public press.

In the act creating the Public Buildings Commission following is the authority granted:

> Said commission shall have the absolute control of and the allotment of all space in the several public buildings owned or buildings leased by the United States in the District of Columbia, with the exception of the Executive Mansion and office of the President, Capitol Building, the Senate and House Office Buildings, the Capitol power plant, the buildings under the jurisdiction of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, and the Congressional Library Building, and shall from time to time assign and allot, for the use of the several activities of the Government, all such space.

In the first place, I wish to say that if Mr. Guy Mason made the statement that there are a million square feet of space in the Government buildings in the District of Columbia available, it is an absolute falsehood.

Mr. President, the Rent Commission applied to the Public Buildings Commission for space in some Government building. The authority of that commission is only to allot space for the use of the several activities of the Government. The commission has no power whatever to allot space to activities of the government of the District of Columbia. That question has been referred to the counsel of several of the departments, and the commission received opinions to the effect that the law did not authorize the Public Buildings Commission to assign space for the activities of government in the different departments of the District of Columbia.

If the commission had the authority to assign space for the Rent Commission of the District of Columbia, it would also have authority to assign space for all the activities of the District, and that the commission has not the power to do.

This is what the commission did do when the Rent Commission made an application for space in a Government building. I knew that there were some 3,200 square feet of space in the Hooe Building that was not being occupied to-day, although the Treasury Department had to pay rent for the whole of the space in the building, and I suggested to the rent commissioners of the District of Columbia that if they desired to occupy that space and would pay their pro rata of the rent of the whole building, the Public Buildings Commission would have no objection whatever to their use of the same.

Mr. Sinclair, a member of the commission, together with Mr. Roper, the secretary of the commission, went with the secretary of the Public Buildings Commission and examined that space, and Mr. Sinclair reported to the other members of the Rent Commission of the District of Columbia that the space named was unoccupied and that the commission could occupy it if they paid the same rental per foot as the Treasury Department was paying for the building. On a vote of the commission they accepted the proposition and said they would move into the Hooe Building upon the terms offered. Now comes a member of the commission in a public statement, as already read by me, which is untrue in nearly every respect.

Not only that, but he is complaining about paying 83 cents a square foot for the rent and lighting of the building, and I ask upon what ground? Take business property in the business section of the District of Columbia anywhere near the Hooe Building and the prices which are being charged to-day per square foot for rent run from $1.50 to as high as $3.50.

So, Mr. President, all the Public Buildings Commission has done in this matter has been to call to the attention of the Rent Commission of the District of Columbia, following its application for space, the fact that there were 3,200 square feet in the Hooe Building that the Government was not occupying at the present time, and that if the commission wanted the use of it, it could do so by paying exactly what the Treasury of the United States to-day is paying per square foot for the space they occupy in the building.

I simply call these facts to the attention of the Senate in the hope that such uncalled for and untruthful statements will not again be made by a member of the Rent Commission of the District of Columbia. I can not understand the motive. The Public Buildings Commission to-day is consolidating every department of the Government in just as compact form as possible. We have been trying for the last two or three weeks to make room, as I stated to the Senate the other day, for the 1,700 employees of the Fleet Corporation, which is now located in Philadelphia, and I think we have accomplished that purpose by transfers and consolidations. When Mr. Guy Mason makes the statement that there are a million square feet of space in the Government buildings which are now unoccupied, it is an absolute untruth.

FOREIGN LOANS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, as it seems that we have done so much printing and desire to be so economical, I wish to call attention to a few lines that I read with great interest yesterday afternoon, showing that we have now due us on our European loans $325,000,000 of interest; that none of the accrued interest on the loans has been paid; and that the plan is to defer for a few years the collection of any of the interest. I ask to have printed in the RECORD the amount of the interest due to the United States on these loans by each of the countries to whom the loans have been made. Great Britain, for example, owes us $144,440,837.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, does that mean the amount of interest due? That does not include the principal?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The interest due is the amount I mentioned. I started by saying that I was calling attention to the interest due on these loans, none of which has been paid, and I understand the proposition is to defer for several years the payment of any of the interest.

I regard this as a matter of very general public interest and a matter of information that is not generally known. I wish to have a memorandum of each of the items of interest printed in the RECORD.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to ask him a question. Has any interest been paid by any government on any of the indebtedness?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. As I am advised, no interest has been paid by any of the countries to whom the loan has been made.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, some time ago I had inserted in the RECORD a statement which I think is the same one that the Senator saw in the paper yesterday. It was copied, if I remember correctly, from the New York World. I call the Senator's attention, if he has not noticed it—I did not notice it myself until this morning—to the fact that on page 2232 of the RECORD of the proceedings of yesterday the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] had placed in the RECORD an article from the Washington Post, giving all this detail, together with the advice of the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the entire matter, not only as to how we shall finance the moneys that foreign powers have borrowed from us, but the policy of the department as to further aid to Europe and as to related subjects; and on page 2233, in the first column, appears an itemized statement of the amount of interest due to us from other countries. I do not say this in derogation of anything the Senator has just put in the RECORD, but I call his attention to the fact that it is by authority of the Treasury Department.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And it was inserted yesterday?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, Mr. President, I do not care to publish the figures again.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I suggest to the Senator that he leave it in the RECORD, because I do not think the attention of the country can be called to it too frequently.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If there is no objection, I will ask to have published the brief statement that I handed in; and I do wish that the most general knowledge of this situation might go throughout the country. It may relieve the minds of some of those who still are disturbed upon the theory that we have done nothing for European countries, and who urge that the responsibility is still on us to do something for them, lest we might be considered slackers in our treatment of European interests.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

$325,000,000 DUE UNITED STATES FROM EUROPE ON LOANS.

"Accrued interest on loans to European countries totals approximately $325,000,000, according to a table submitted to the House Ways and Means Committee by the Treasury Department, which plans to defer collection for a few years pending reconstruction.

"Great Britain owes the most interest, the total on loans to that country being $144,440,837. Interest owed by other countries is: France, $94,021,749; Italy, $54,256,589; Russia, $16,832,662; Belgium, $11,465,278; Czechoslovakia $1,667,083; Serbia, $917,299; Roumania, $609,873; and Liberia, $548."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the Senator advised us that the plan was to defer the payment of this interest.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The article I have placed in the RECORD states the plan is to defer for a few years interest collections.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator tell us from what source the suggestion comes?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, from the Treasury Department.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So I understood in this article.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Treasury Department is advising the further deferment of the payment of the interest?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield. I have not any definite information upon that subject, but the statement in this article was that the Treasury Department planned to defer for a few years the collection of interest.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question about it, Mr. President. That is the recommendation of the Treasury Department, and I wish to say to the Senator that in some cases it could not be otherwise. I am not going at this time into the particular instances; but in the case of a good many of the countries, if we were insisting upon it, the Government of the United States would simply have to advance to them the money to pay the interest. That, however, is not the case with Great Britain and some of the other large countries.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, it is quite likely that interest will have to be deferred on the loans to some of these weaker countries. What I am now seeking information in regard to is whether the purpose or the recommendation of the department is to defer the interest upon all of these loans—for instance, to France and Great Britain and Italy—for an indefinite time?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I only saw the published statement of the purpose. I can not think it is true; I felt that public attention should be brought to it. If there is a purpose of that character anywhere it is entitled to public attention, and I think it should be abandoned except in cases where payment of interest is impossible.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I prosecuted this inquiry because it was disclosed in the consideration of the so-called New bill, to establish a department of aeronautics, that a number of the European countries which are so deeply indebted to us, and so straitened financially that they are unable to pay us the interest upon their loans, are engaged in most ambitious and highly expensive projects to increase their air forces and their air equipment for military purposes. In other words, as it was quite appropriately expressed in the course of the debate, they are carrying on a great program of military organization with money that is furnished them by the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. KING. That statement has been made a number of times upon the floor of the Senate. I have before me the testimony of Secretary Baker before the Military Affairs Committee when his attention was challenged to the statement that Great Britain had a budget of $300,000,000 for aircraft for the current year. Secretary Baker denied that, upon the information which he had, and said that the greater part of it was in liquidation of obligations which had been incurred. My infornation is that neither Great Britain nor France is undertaking any very elaborate aircraft production program, and yet, of course, both Great Britain and France are in such a situation that perhaps their needs for aircraft defense are more important than those of this country.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I spoke of this because I listened with some interest to the address of the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] the other day, in which he sought to impress the Senate and the country with the idea that we were lagging away behind other countries in aircraft production and in the development of aircraft for military purposes, and that was urged as a reason for the speedy passage of the bill to which I have referred.

Mr. KING. I have no doubt that military and naval officers in Great Britain and France and Italy had very ambitious programs for aircraft production; but those programs have not been carried into effect, and will not be carried into effect. My information is that Great Britain will not expend to exceed $50,000,000 for new aircraft production, but that the great amount that has been mentioned is in liquidation of contracts which heretofore have been entered into.

While I have the floor I desire to make a brief statement concerning our trade relations with Europe and to refer briefly to the statement made by the Senator from Georgia. There seems to be a determined effort upon the part of some American newspapers to mislead the American people concerning the financial and commercial relations between the United States and European countries. Whenever any suggestion is made that the people of Europe should receive financial help, there are some newspapers as well as certain elements in our country that immediately assert that Europe is attempting to deprive the American people of their money and to inflict a serious injury upon us.

Some of the same newspapers are earnestly urging an extension of our commerce with other nations, and criticize with more or less virulence Great Britain when information is forthcoming that that nation is opening up commercial fields in South America and in other countries. There are some in our midst who are constantly denouncing European nations because they owe us, and the purpose seems to be to create an impression in the United States that these obligations have been improperly incurred and that our country has been robbed to the extent of billions of dollars by our allies as well as other European nations.

Before the war our annual exports to Europe were approximately $2,000,000,000, and our entire foreign commerce in 1913 was nearly four and a quarter billions. As the war progressed our exports greatly increased and our foreign trade became so stupendous as to be beyond our comprehension. Our exports during 1918 were nearly $6,000,000,000 and our foreign trade passed the $7,000,000,000 mark. For 1919 our foreign commerce was approximately $10,000,000,000. It is manifest to the dullest student of political economy that this enormous foreign commerce resulted from the extension of credits not only by the Government but by individuals and corporations to foreign purchasers. The money loaned by our Government to our allies, and to other European nations, amounting to approximately $10,000,000,000, did not consist of the actual physical transfer of gold and silver to Europe. Credits were extended to European nations, and these credits were absorbed in paying for surplus American products. Billions of dollars of domestic products were marketed abroad. The products of field and farm and mill and mine were purchased by the peoples of Europe through the credits which we enabled them to obtain. At the beginning of the war we were a debtor Nation. Europe exhausted most of her American securities and lost a large part of her gold supply in paying for surplus products produced in the United States. If our Government had not loaned money to Europe, if credit had not been provided for our allies and other European nations, the surplus products of our own country would have filled to overflowing the terminals, warehouses, and granaries of our country. Prices would have rapidly declined. Labor would have been thrown out of employment and financial disaster would have overtaken us.

So when we criticize Europe for having obtained credits in the United States we are closing our eyes to the immense benefits which the American people derived from the transactions.

Mr. Vanderlip and others who have visited Europe have explained in the clearest possible terms the precarious financial situation there existing. The supply of gold is limited. Most of the European nations are without credit. They are burdened with such stupendous obligations as a result of the war that it is almost impossible for them to obtain credit. There is a lack of raw materials, and all Europe is so burdened as the result of the war that it is difficult, and, in many instances impossible, for the people to engage in manufacturing activities or to undertake the enterprises which formerly brought them work and prosperity. It is unwise to close our eyes to the bankrupt condition of Europe. The condition is such that we can not gloss it over. We are not cut off from Europe in a commercial or financial way; and no one desires that there shall be a complete severance of all business and commercial dealings between this Nation and European countries. Our prosperity is dependent to a large degree upon our exports and upon our foreign trade. If we neither import nor export, a complete business paralysis would soon ensue.

American business men are now penetrating every civilized land for the purpose of obtaining foreign markets for the surplus products of our country. We have built up a merchant marine in order to increase our commercial activity in the world. If our factories and mills are to continue their production, if our farms and fields and mines are to continue to yield their rich rewards, there must be markets found in all corners of the globe. Our flag must be seen in every port, and American goods and products must find purchasers and consumers in the remotest isles of the world. Europe has always been our chief foreign market, and Great Britain and her colonies were purchasing before the war, as I recall, considerably more than 50 per cent of our exports. Instead of criticizing and denouncing Europe because of her obligations to us and her inability to meet immediate interest payments, we ought to be devising plans by which we may extend our trade, increase our exports, and, while helping Europe, obtain legitimate and proper benefits for ourselves.

My attention was recently called to Poland's needs for American products. Representatives from Poland sought to purchase in this country engines and steel products for railroad construction. She did not have sufficient gold with which to make payment. Her boundaries were still undetermined, and she lacked that stability to make her bonds or her securities inviting to American manufacturers. It is clear that if arrangements could have been made by which the desired products could have been supplied to Poland, it would have been of great advantage to that new nation, and it would have been advantageous not only to the steel mills of the United States but to the laboring men, the producers of coal, and the merchants and others living in the section where the steel goods would have been manufactured.

The former Secretary of Commerce called my attention a short time ago to the fact that representatives from one of the agricultural States had visited him for the purpose of having arrangements made, if it were possible to do so, by which one of the European nations could obtain credits in order to purchase 100,000 horses from farmers in the State referred to. The European nation needed the horses and the agriculturists in the State mentioned were desirous of selling them. If the transaction could have been completed the farmers of the United States would have benefited, and, of course, the nation in Europe in need of the horses would have been benefited.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. PHELAN. I have been trying to follow the Senator and desire to interrupt him simply to ask whether he approves of the policy of advancing money out of the Treasury in order to stimulate the sale of American goods?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that question is not involved in the point I am endeavoring to make, but I have no objection to answering the Senator. When we entered the war it was imperative that we do everything possible to win the war. Our allies needed money and credit, and in aiding them by extending credits we were contributing to the defeat of the enemy and were materially aiding in winning the war. However, I think the time has come when the Government of the United States can not longer continue this policy of loaning to European nations. This is a general statement. It is possible that some contingency might arise which would call for a loan to some European nation. We in common with our allies have promised the peoples of Poland and Czechoslovakia and the Jugo-Slavic State that they should have independence. It is possible that a situation so acute might develop as to call for aid to be extended to one or more of these States by this Government and some of the allied and associated powers. Indeed, I feel that there ought to be some concerted effort by the allied and associated powers to strengthen these new States against the Bolshevist tide. If they should be destroyed no one could predict what the effect would be not only upon Europe but upon the United States. In the interest of our own peace and to prevent the recurrence of war, we might feel compelled to loan money to some European nation.

But I have had in mind in the observations which I have submitted the extension of credits to the peoples of Europe by the American people themselves and not by the Government. I might also add that the situation of the people in some parts of Europe is such that the Government of the United States might properly make some advances to prevent millions from starvation and death. The distress in certain portions of Europe is beyond our power to comprehend. Poverty, disease, starvation, and death are destroying entire sections and depopulating great cities. The cries of the starving women and children should not be in vain. And, notwithstanding charity begins at home, it would be to our everlasting discredit if we did not look with profound sympathy upon the sufferings of the people of Europe and if we did not attempt in every possible way to alleviate their distress.

Mr. PHELAN. I will pursue the inquiry when the Senator from Utah is through.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I only want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that Poland is not one of those who owe us any interest. Austria is not one of those who owe us any interest. The suggestion would be that some of the interest due from Great Britain might be paid to us, and we could loan it to them if we saw fit. They are certainly taking care of their business everywhere, all over Europe and even in Russia.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not recall what nations have failed to pay the interest due the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. All of them.

Mr. KING. I am speaking in a general way of the conditions which caused the European indebtedness. We had a surplus of agricultural and manufactured products, as well as raw materials, and the nations of Europe were compelled to have them. They became purchasers and we vendors; the transactions were highly favorable to the American people and enabled Europe to prosecute the war and to feed her soldiers and civilians.

Mr. President, we might as well recognize the fact that we are the great creditor nation of the world, and if we continue to do business with Europe we will be compelled to extend credits to her for many years to come. Our bankers and business men must recognize this situation and provide the needed credits. The American people will be compelled to become European investors. There must be a market developed in the United States for European securities. Some of our surplus capital must take the form of foreign securities, and the stocks and bonds of Europe must be absorbed to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars among the American investing public. This we will be compelled to do, whether we desire to or not, if we continue to trade with Europe. For our own good we must trade; therefore we will be required to take in payment for our products the only thing Europe has at present, viz, evidences of indebtedness and the best form of securities that can be furnished. We all remember that a few years ago we sold our securities in Europe. We settled the balance of trade against us with American securities. We built railroads with money from Holland and France and other European nations, and European capital was employed to develop our country, build our factories, and promote the welfare and prosperity of the country. Now that we are a creditor nation we will be compelled to convert the obligations of Europe into European investments, and so become capitalists in Europe.

If Europe continues to trade with the United States, she must have something to place in the balance. She has no goods or gold with which to settle her balances. There is only one other thing which will enable her to deal with us, and that is credit. The manufacturers in Germany or France or Poland must have raw materials. We have raw materials as well as finished products for sale. For our own good, as well as for the welfare of the sorrowing people of Europe, we must extend to them the necessary credits. This is a time for broad and statesmanlike vision.

Nationalism does not mean isolation, and national prosperity will not be promoted by oppressing or crushing the nations by which we are surrounded.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, the Senator, in answer to my question, said that he was not favoring, as I had understood from his remarks, advancing Treasury money for the rehabilitation of European governments and industries. When the money was advanced out of the Treasury—the proceeds of the sale of bonds—to certain European countries, it developed, and the record will show it, that the money advanced by the United States released their own money, which otherwise would have been employed in the purchase of munitions of war, and their money thus released was employed in the establishment of their industries, which were in competition with our own; and the rather ridiculous situation developed that, for instance, England out of its abundance provided for industries, such as the dye industry, which we at the very same time were endeavoring to establish by the levying of a tariff.

Of course, the surplus supplies of the United States were sold to European countries, and possibly a general benefit accrued to the people; but more particularly a special benefit accrued to those who had war munitions for sale, because it was principally in war munitions that the trade was carried on. But to take the money levied on the property of the people and the incomes of the people and to give it to Europe for commercial and industrial rehabilitation I think is entirely unjustified.

I believe that Mr. Hoover himself, a very benevolent gentleman, said that the remedy to-day was to tell Europe to go to work, and as long as we provided funds there would be a danger of pauperizing Europe, and the habit of work would be lost; and this great, big, and rich Nation, therefore, in the interest of Europe, should refrain from coddling industries when the people have within themselves the power, as we know they have had in other generations, to recuperate and to recover their lost industries.

I have had petitions—and that is why I particularly took the floor at this moment—from constituents in California who have advanced the idea that we went to war for the purpose of establishing a new order of liberty and democracy, where people would be given the right to govern themselves, and where the old autocratic ideas would be, so far as we were able, abolished, and that self-determination would be given to all the people. Now, the protestants in the petitions which I have received say that inasmuch as the Senate has refused in any form to agree to a covenant of a League of Nations by which the countries would be guaranteed in the rights for which we went to war—liberty, democracy, self-determination, and justice—we have to that extent failed in the war; we have not realized our ideals; we have accomplished nothing; and it is a matter of the highest duty to ourselves to refrain from giving money to Europe for the continuation of the old order, because they are simply reerecting governments on the same foundations, and nothing else. And because America is not there to protect the rights for which she strove as a moderator, as a great moral force, the whole scheme of a reorganized world is in the hands of the very nations that have in the past perpetuated the evils and the wrongs of which the petitioners complain.

So I am opposed to advancing money to Europe for rehabilitation, because it is not being reestablished in the right lines. I am opposed on the further ground that the people of this country are carrying unprecedented burdens, and that charity does begin at home. I think a mistake economically would be made if we should do anything tending to pauperize Europe, and prevent her, so far as our charity and benevolence are concerned, from looking to her own resources, looking to her own ability, and throwing herself upon her own capacity. As long as she is coddled, as long as she is considered decrepit, ill, ailing, as Europe always considered Turkey, for instance, "the sick man of the East"; as long as she is put in that light in our eyes, and led to believe, from our solicitude for her welfare, that she is unable to help herself, she will remain helpless.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator before he takes his seat?

Mr. PHELAN. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator says that he is opposed to loaning any further money to European countries. Does the Senator think he is likely to be asked to give his consent, or may it not be loaned without asking the consent of Congress?

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator's inquiry is very pertinent. I remember an inquiry at one time during the period when we had little information and everybody was in favor of action rather than talk as to whether our advances to Europe were secured; and I have failed to learn—in fact, I know to the contrary now—that any security was given for any class of loans at any time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the statement that was printed in the RECORD yesterday as having been made by the Secretary of the Treasury, it appears that since the armistice was signed the Treasury has made direct cash advances of $2,380,891,000 to the Allied Governments. If we have loaned that much since the armistice was signed, what is to prevent a further loan of $150,000,000, which is a mere bagatelle, in comparison, without appealing to the Senator for any consent?

Mr. PHELAN. I am well aware of that, Mr. President. Of course, those advances were made pursuant to authority given by Congress to the executive department. Hence, the advances are perfectly regular. What shall Congress do now is the question?

Mr. OVERMAN. It ought to be stated that in the communication the Secretary of the Treasury said he is opposed to advancing any more money. His statement is that—

Relative to the solution of the exchange puzzle, Mr. Glass warned that this country could not continue to extend credits on a sufficient scale to cover the present swollen trade balances while paying cash (gold and silver) to Latin-American and Far Eastern traders.

So it is not his policy to advance any more money.

Mr. PHELAN. I have not read the article to which the Senator refers, but if it is not the policy of the Treasury, although it has the power to advance the money, then the Senate will not be called upon to give its consent. I notice the appeal to the House by the Treasury Department is for money for the relief of starving people. That is another phase of the same subject. We ought to be very well advised as to the necessity of that relief before we give it. But "all mankind's concern is charity," and, of course, we are all disposed to be very charitable with other people's money.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator, of course, realizes that the prosperity of the United States largely depends upon finding foreign markets for the surplus products of our people. The Senator knows that for years we have been interested in trying to obtain a merchant marine, so that we could compete, in part at least, with European nations. The Senator knows that unless we do finance Europe, in a way, Europe will be unable to purchase the products of which we have a surplus. I am not in favor of the Government financing Europe, but obviously the manufacturers, the agriculturists, those who have surplus products in the United States who must find markets abroad, must make some provision to aid those who need these products and want to buy them, to effectuate the purchases; and in order to do that American capitalists will be compelled to purchase European securities, and with those European securities Europe, in turn, will be able to finance herself to the extent of purchasing those things of which we have a surplus. Our prosperity depends upon the prosperity of Europe. If Europe becomes bankrupt and her nations fall into chaos and ruin and her entire financial system goes to wreck, it will react disadvantageously upon America, and our men will be turned out of shops and mills and our surplus products will be piled in factories, in granaries, and in terminals, and we will have financial ruin here in the United States.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I appreciate very much the point made by the Senator from Utah, that there is an absolute necessity for the maintenance of our commerce and our merchant fleet to have the countries of the world exchange their commodities with ours, and therefore he argues we should have a care to see that the European Governments are restored to their pristine ability to engage in such trade.

There are other countries of the world besides Europe, whose trade is not embarrassed, and whose industries may or may not have to be aided by American money The Senator is perfectly right in saying that it is legitimate for American financiers to provide that money, based upon the merits of the enterprise. That is the great field of finance just as the other is the great field of commerce.

But what I am arguing against is the free advancing of the money in the Treasury which belongs to all the people and which the people of the United States have to provide, and, by the payment of interest, have to bear a burden for untold generations. That money should not be advanced by the Government, but Europe should be the object of the enterprise and the encouragement of our financial institutions.

There is a case in point which the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] will appreciate. The city of San Francisco was utterly destroyed in 1906 by fire. There was a loss of probably $600,000,000 in that small area of 47 square miles. A committee consisting of the Federal judge and the president of the University of California came to Congress and, for the restoration of San Francisco, they asked that Congress guarantee bonds to be issued by the city, because, on account of the fire, the city's credit was utterly lost and she had no ability to go into the financial market and get money on her own securities, and therefore they prayed Congress like a good father to indorse the obligations of the city of Federal importance located at the Golden Gate.

What did Congress do? I thought at that time that Congress had no feeling of interest in this great Federal city by the Golden Gate because it refused. It said: Let the great city by the Golden Gate rehabilitate herself. At that time we were told that it would take five years to clear the débris which was on the streets of San Francisco. Two hundred and fifty thousand people were in the bread lines. San Francisco came to the money markets of the East and financed herself, and it was very good for San Francisco that Congress had refused to give her any artificial support because she was thrown on her own resources. The financiers of the East, after they had overcome their alarm about a recurrence of such a disaster in San Francisco, due to the fear of seismic disturbances, timidly at first and then in competition with each other, very generously at last advanced the money at normal rates of interest.

There is a parallel. San Francisco is better for her self-sufficiency and her self-reliance, and Europe's growth will be more permanent and enduring and the people of Europe will be able better to maintain their self-respect by not leaning upon America. The financiers of America shall do the work of rehabilitation on a business basis, and the Government of America shall look after the internal concerns of the people and see that the great burden of taxation which they bear now is speedily reduced, and one of the best ways of doing it is to collect our interest from Europe, for down in the stockings of Europe we know there is money, because the world to-day, France and England particularly, is exploiting industries and natural resources. Witness Persia, Mesopotamia, Mexico, and South America, where oil exploitation is going on with money which should be put into the United States Treasury in payment of the enormous advances which we made as necessary to preserve the very existence of those countries; and now they are going into foreign fields and interfering with our trade by reason of our bounty.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. PHELAN. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] suggests the importance of commercial advances to Europe. Does it not occur to the Senator from California that some attention to collecting the interest due on the advances we have made would encourage commercial interests to make loans in Europe? The feeling that those who make a loan are to get their interest is essential to a loan. I fear we are setting a bad precedent.

Mr. PHELAN. Unless in forma pauperis, the European nations have no reason to ask our indulgence. If they are broke, we can not get blood out of a turnip; but I say they are using their money in the great continents of the world for the purpose of securing raw materials, and largely petroleum oil, with the end in view of commanding the commerce of the world, because oil absolutely determines who shall be the carriers upon the sea and ultimately who shall be the industrial winners of the world's trade. Oil is the fuel which can most economically be used, and in competition with oil burners it is impossible for a coal-burning merchant marine to exist. To-day we are importing petroleum. We consume more than we produce, and when we get into the foreign fields we are told very frankly—and the evidence is in the RECORD from Mr. Manning and Mr. Doheny—that England is there first. Why should we indulge that payment of interest when that money which is ours is used against our larger interests in the world of commerce and trade and of war, because a naval craft has a larger radius of sailing and has greater capacity for munitions if she has only oil to carry for the purpose of her propulsion. An oil burner will win against a coal burner, and that is why those nations are feverishly exploring the oil supplies of the world. Let them pay their bills before they indulge in the luxury of acquiring new sources of raw materials which will probably be the determining factor in the ultimate conflict in this world which is sure to come, perhaps not in our time, for commercial greatness and national supremacy.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what is the order of business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The good of the world, I think.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us have the regular order until we get through with the morning business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Petitions and memorials are in order.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 5.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, in legislative session assembled, respectfully represent that—

Whereas there is a long stretch of coast dangerous to shipping lying between Bandon, Oreg., and the Humboldt Bay in northern California, entirely unprotected by life-saving station between said points; and

Whereas the Cape Blanco Reef, the Port Orford Reef, and the Rogue River Reef, on the Oregon coast, are a particular menace to the safety of shipping; and

Whereas in the past, owing to the lack of life-saving facilities in the vicinity of these reefs, a great number of lives have been lost from vessels being wrecked upon these reefs; and

Whereas Port Orford, in Curry County, State of Oregon, is a proper, efficient, and convenient place upon said coast for the location of a life-saving station so located as to be available to give aid to shipwrecks occurring upon either of the above-named reefs: Be it

Resolved, That your memorialists respectfully and earnestly petition and request the Congress of the United States to use all just means to cause a life-saving station to be installed and maintained at the port of Port Orford, in Curry County, Oreg.

Adopted by the house January 16, 1920.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate January 14, 1920.

W. T. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

Indorsed: Senate joint memorial No. 5. By Senator I. S. Smith.

J. W. COCHRAN, Chief Clerk.

Filed January 16, 1920.

BEN W. OLCOTT,
Secretary of State.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,

I, Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state of the State of Oregon, and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of senate joint memorial No. 5 with the original thereof adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon at the special session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon January 12–17, 1920, and filed in the office of the secretary of state January 16, 1920, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof, together with all indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at the capitol at Salem, Oreg., this 20th day of January, A. D. 1920.

[SEAL.]

BEN W. OLCOTT,
Secretary of State.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 3.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully request that—

Whereas loss of timber through forest fires in Oregon and other Northwestern States is detrimental to public welfare, and threatens the permanency of our principal manufacturing industry; and

Whereas use of airplanes furnished by the War Department for patrol of forested areas in Oregon and California the past season aided materially in the work of forest protection; and

Whereas the department air-service officer, Western Department, has submitted a report to the War Department outlining a plan for air patrol of forested areas in the States of Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, California, and western Wyoming; and

Whereas the States above mentioned embrace some 80,000,000 acres of Government-owned forest land and contain fully one-half of all the standing merchantable timber in the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That our Representatives and Senators in Congress be, and are hereby, memorialized and requested to use their best endeavors to secure approval of the recommendations of the department air-service officer, Western Department, for patrol of our forests by airplanes during the 1920 season, and also to provide the Federal Forest Service necessary funds to enable proper cooperation with the air service in order that the maximum benefit may be secured through air patrol.

Adopted by the house January 13, 1920.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate January 15, 1920.

W. T. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state of the State of Oregon, and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of house joint memorial No. 3 with the original thereof adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon at the special session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon January 12–17, 1920, and filed in the office of the secretary of state January 16, 1920, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof, together with all indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at the capitol at Salem, Oreg., this 20th day of January, A. D. 1920.

BEN W. OLCOTT,
Secretary of State.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 4.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas lying east of the Cascade Mountains and within the boundaries of Klamath County, Oreg., is the Klamath Indian Reservation, a territory some 40 miles square and containing $20,000,000 worth of standing pine timber at the present selling price, which will, at the rapid advancement in the value of timber, double in the next few years; and

Whereas in addition to said timber there is a vast number of acres of hay and pasture land, the body known as the big marsh contains about a hundred thousand acres, that a large number of artesian wells located on said last-mentioned tract and large quantities of hay are cut each year; and

Whereas there are now on said reservation eleven hundred Indians, the number of Indians on said reservation not having varied to any appreciable extent for about 15 years; and

Whereas the opening of this reservation would immediately add to the assessment roll of Klamath County more than $30,000,000 of property and make Klamath County the second county in the State in relation to assessed valuation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oregon, the House of Representatives concurring, That the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon favors the immediate opening of the said Klamath Indian Reservation for settlement, preference right of acquiring said lands for settlement being given to those who served in the military or naval forces of the United States during the war between the United States and Germany, the Spanish-American War, or the Philippine insurrection, and have been honorably discharged or separated therefrom or placed in the Regular Army or Naval Reserve; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state transmit copies of this memorial to the President of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, to the Secretary of the Interior Department of the United States, and to each Senator and Representative from the State of Oregon in the Congress of the United States.

Adopted by the house January 17, 1920.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate January 15, 1920.

I, Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state of the State of Oregon and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify:

That I have carefully compared the annexed copy of Senate joint memorial No. 4 with the original thereof adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon at the special session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon January 12–17, 1920, and filed in the office of the secretary of state January 17, 1920, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof, together with all indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at the capitol at Salem, Oreg., this 20th day of January, A. D. 1920.

BEN W. OLCOTT,
Secretary of State.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial.

Whereas the thirtieth regular session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, by an act filed in the office of the secretary of state March 4, 1919, and being chapter 345, general laws of Oregon, 1919, referred to the people of the State of Oregon for their ratification or rejection at the special election held on Tuesday, the 3d day of June, 1919, an act appropriating the sum of $2,500,000 to be paid to the United States for the purpose of assisting the United States in constructing a military highway to be known as the Roosevelt Coast Military Highway, from the city of Astoria through Clatsop, Tillamook, Lincoln, Lane, Douglas, Coos, and Curry Counties of the State of Oregon to the California State line, and for the purchase of rights of way and property necessary and convenient therefor, to be owned and maintained by the United States, contingent, however, upon the United States appropriating from any fund the sum of at least $2,500,000 for the same purposes; and

Whereas at said special election there were two to one legal and effective votes cast in favor of such measure; and

Whereas said measure became and is now a valid and effective law of the State of Oregon; and

Whereas there is now no adequate military protection for the 400 miles of coast line of the State of Oregon along the Pacific Ocean, and there are but four or five available passes from the interior to the coast and no available communication from place to place along the coast without the construction of a highway such as is proposed; and

Whereas the United States Government is still the owner of several millions of acres of timberlands in forest reserves and which lie between the summit of the coast range and the coast line, which will increase in value by the construction of the Roosevelt coast military highway and the opening and development of the State of Oregon caused thereby, in many times the total appropriation requested from the United States; and

Whereas no appropriation made by the United States Government for forest roads in national forests in other sections will compare with the financial benefit which will accrue to the United States by the opening and development of the lands owned by the Federal Government through the construction of the proposed highway along the Oregon coast; and

Whereas many thousands of acres of the richest land in the State lie in the numberless valleys along the coast between the summit of the coast range and the ocean, which can only be developed by a north-and-south road connecting the communities, and further developed by local roads leading from the trunk road up the valleys; and

Whereas the coast country has and is now contributing through the organization of port districts to the improvement and development of navigation to the benefit of the Nation, and has already paid out and expended approximately $8,000,000 for these purposes; and

Whereas the Nation owes a duty to its soldiers, sailors, and marines in the Great War against Germany and her allies to provide lands and homes, which through the development of the country by building roads and otherwise may be in some small measure a partly adequate compensation for the great work they have performed; and

Whereas the wonderful beauty of the Pacific coast along the Oregon shore line is a priceless heritage to the Nation, which should be fostered and made available to the countless millions in this country, aside from the great financial gain which will accrue to the Nation and the State by the building of this highway and apart from the just demand for military protection along this unprotected coast: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oregon (the House of Representatives concurring), That we hereby memorialize Congress to enact suitable legislation to match the appropriation offered to the National Government by the State of Oregon for the building of a national road, and which will be an everlasting monument to the memory of one of the greatest Americans of our time, our late lamented, much loved ex-President Roosevelt, the scholar, the statesman, and the soldier.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 1.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Believing that a race of people who are by the laws of the land not entitled to become citizens of the United States by naturalization, and who are permitted to remain in the United States for business and trade purposes, the children of such aliens should retain the citizenship of their parents; and

Believing that if there is reason for excluding the parents from naturalization, such disqualification should extend to the offspring of such parents; and

Believing that the theory of our system of government and our application of such theory should be the same; and

Believing that the people who choose the men to make, enforce, and interpret our laws should be capable of acquiring citizenship and not have it imposed upon them by the accident of the place of birth: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oregon (the House concurring), That the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon favors the submission by Congress to the legislatures of the several States a proposed amendment to the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, so that such amendment shall provide, when amended, that children born in the United States, or in territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and whose parents are not citizens and can not under existing laws acquire citizenship by naturalization, shall retain the citizenship of the parents and shall not become citizens by reason of birth in the United States or in territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof.

Be it further resolved, That upon the adoption of this joint memorial the secretary of state of the State of Oregon transmit copies thereof to the Secretary of State of the United States, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Represenatives of the United States, and to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Oregon.

BEN W. OLCOTT,
Secretary of State.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 6.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

That whereas Congressman SINNOTT, of the third congressional district of the State of Oregon, has introduced a bill which is now pending in the Congress of the United States, having for its purpose the restoration to entry of certain lands in Klamath County, Oreg., which provides:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

"SECTION 1. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to determine and make public announcement of what lands in and around Upper Klamath Lake, in Klamath County, Oreg., ceded to the United States by the State of Oregon by an act entitled 'An act to authorize the utilization of Upper Klamath Lake, Lower or Little Klamath Lake, and Tule or Rhett Lake, situate in Klamath County, Oreg., and Goose Lake, situate in Lake County, Oreg., in connection with the irrigation and reclamation operations of the Reclamation Service of the United States, and to cede to the United States all the right, title, interest, and claim of the State of Oregon to any and all lands recovered by the lowering of the water levels or by the drainage of any or all of said lands' (General Laws of Oregon, 1905, p. 63), may be uncovered and opened to agricultural development by drainage or diking, not impairing the use of the portions of said lake which do not cover title or marsh lands for storage of water or irrigation in connection with the Klamath reclamation project.

"SEC. 2. That title to all said lands can be acquired by homestead entry under the general homestead laws and the provisions of this act, and not otherwise. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to permit any drainage district organized under the laws of the State of Oregon, or any person or corporation, to dike or drain said lands at a cost to be fixed by said Secretary, and to have a lien on said lands as security for the payment of the cost of said drainage or diking. That residence and improvement on said lands by entryman shall not be required until his entry shall have been drained.

"SEC. 3. That those who served in the military or naval forces of the United States during the war between the United States and Germany, the Spanish-American War, or the Philippine insurrection, and have been honorably discharged or separated therefrom or placed in the Regular Army or Naval Reserve shall have preference and prior right to file upon and enter said lands under the homestead laws and the provisions of this act for a period of six months following the time said lands are opened to entry. That in opening said lands for homestead entry the Secretary of the Interior shall provide for the disposition thereof to said soldiers, sailors, and marines in one 160-acre tract to each entryman, by drawing, under general rules and regulations to be promulgated by him: Provided, That the rights and benefits conferred by this act shall not extend to any person who, having been drafted for service under the provisions of the selective-service act, shall have refused to render such service or to wear the uniform of such service of the United States.

"SEC. 4. That said lands shall not be leased or otherwise disposed of except under the provisions of this act, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect."

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oregon (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon favors the passage by Congress of said bill, and to that end the Representatives and Senators in the Congress of the United States from the State of Oregon are hereby urged to use their influence in behalf of the passage of said bill; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the Senate of the State of Oregon be directed to transmit by mail a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives of the State of Oregon in Congress.

Mr CHAMBERLAIN. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 5.

Honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress of the United States assembled:

Whereas the people of the State or Oregon believe in an adequate and efficient enforcement of the immigration laws now on the statute books, and the enactment of such additional legislation as may be necessary to bring about the effective exclusion of, and also the deportation from the United States of undesirable aliens, particularly those who are unattached to American ideals and who seek by violent and unlawful means to undermine or overthrow our Government; and

Whereas the United States Immigration Service, through the collection of head tax, imposed upon aliens entering the United States, has caused to be collected and turned into the United States Treasury millions of dollars in excess of the cost of maintenance and operation of said service; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States has not yet made an adequate appropriation for the said United States Immigration Service to permit of a full and adequate scrutiny of those aliens seeking admission into the United States, and the comprehensive inspection, apprehension, and deportation of those undesirable aliens already within our country unlawfully and here to our country's detriment: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon in special session assembled, That we do hereby petition and earnestly pray the honorable Congress of the United States for the passage of such legislation as may be necessary to effectually expel and keep out undesirable and disloyal aliens, and particularly to make the sufficient appropriation of those very necessary funds required to vitalize and make effective the execution of the said immigration laws now in force and to be enacted; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state of the State of Oregon to the Senate of the United States, and that copies of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state of the State of Oregon to the House of Representatives of the United States, and that copies thereof be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Oregon to the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the State of Oregon, with the request that they use every effort within their power to bring about an accomplishment of the ends and purposes herein indicated.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 8.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon, the Senate concurring, respectfully represent this: That—

Whereas the Oregon Irrigation Congress did heretofore appoint a committee for the purpose of obtaining Federal aid to be used in investigating the irrigation possibilities of what is known as the Deschutes project in central Oregon; and

Whereas, as the result of the efforts of the committee so appointed, the Federal Government has caused a geological survey to be made; and

Whereas the investigation was made under the direction of Prof. Crosby under authority of the Government of the United States of America, who has heretofore filed his report favorable to the development of this project; and

Whereas it is of the utmost importance to the development of the irrigation and farming in central Oregon that the Federal Government take the necessary steps to develop the Deschutes project as speedily as possible, so that approximately 250,000 acres of land may be made productive in Deschutes, Crook, and Jefferson Counties: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the Senate concurring), That the Representative Assembly of the State of Oregon favors the passage of any act by the United States Congress which will provide means with which the Deschutes project may be financed and developed by Federal aid; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Oregon be directed to transmit by mail a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Oregon in Congress.

BEN W. OLCOTT,
Secretary of State.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 2.

Memorial to the Congress of the United States of America urging the United States Government to enact pending legislation and such additional legislation as will most adequately and speedily promote highway construction, and urging the appropriation by Congress of sufficient funds to enable the Federal Government and the various States to construct an adequate system of forest roads and post roads.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America:

We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Oregon, in special session, jointly concurring, respectfully represent that—

Whereas the American Association of Highway Officials in convention assembled at Louisville, Ky., on December 11, 1919, adopted a series of resolutions, copies of which resolutions were transmitted to the House of Representatives and the United States Senate, in which resolutions there were, among other matters urged upon the attention and consideration of the United States Congress, the following facts:

That the States within whose boundaries are included large national forest reserves have expended during the last five years millions of dollars in the improvement of State and country highway systems.

That the majority of these States have issued bonds in large amounts in order to finance modern highway construction.

That there are within the boundaries of these States approximately 150,000,000 acres of national forest reserves.

That State and county highways of national importance traverse these reservations through areas involving the most difficult highway construction of the West.

That the forests in these various States are great national assets, which should be preserved, and the construction of roads and highways traversing the said forests facilitate the control of forest fires, which have in the past caused tremendous losses.

That the appropriations heretofore made by Congress have been inadequate to permit of sufficient road construction within such national forests to keep pace with State and county highway systems and construction or to provide for a standard of construction equaling that of the several States and counties.

That the withdrawal of large areas by the Government has decreased the taxable resources of the States and counties wherein such withdrawals have been made, thereby reducing the bonding capacity of said States and counties.

That it is the duty of the National Government to provide sufficient funds to develop its national resources to the same extent and standards as that of the States and counties similarly situated; and

Whereas the facts and conditions heretofore stated apply with equal force, as emphasized by said American Association of Highway Officials, to Indian and other Federal reservations and to unappropriated lands of the United States; and

Whereas the said American Association of Highway Officials, by said series of resolutions, have urged upon the Congress of the United States the necessity of appropriating at least $10,000,000 per year for the next 10 years, of which appropriation no less than 75 per cent should be expended in the construction of primary State and county highways within and adjacent to national forests, and have urged upon said Congress the necessity of appropriating at least $2,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and $5,000,000 per year thereafter for the next nine years for the purpose of constructing highways through Indian and other Federal reservations or unappropriated lands of the United States; and

Whereas the said American Association of Highway Officials did, by said resolution, urge upon the United States Congress the appropriation of the following sums of money:

$100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.
$100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.
$100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923.
$100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924.

And whereas there is pending before Congress proposed legislation having for its aim the creation and construction of a system of national highways, which legislation has received the indorsement of the American Association of Highway Officials; and

Whereas the said American Association of Highway Officials has in said resolutions urged and recommended that the said system of national highways shall be selected by the various States in cooperation with the Bureau of Public Roads; and

Whereas your memorialists, the Senate and House of the Representatives of the State of Oregon, unanimously indorse the facts set out in the resolutions adopted by the said American Association of Highway Officials, and we respectfully urge upon the United States Congress the further fact that the State of Oregon occupies a peculiar and special position with reference to national forests and other national and Federal reserves and, therefore, is in a peculiar and special need of adequate highway construction: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (in special session, jointly concurring), That we do hereby most respectfully urge and request that the Congress of the United States of America give special and immediate attention to the passage of pending legislation relative to national highway construction and the creation of a system of national highways and to such other legislation as will be in harmony with the resolutions of the said American Association of Highway Officials, and we further urge that the said Congress of the United States of America appropriate for highway construction the amounts and appropriations herein designated, and such other additional amounts as will be necessary to most effectively promote highway constructions, and we urge that such appropriations be made in such manner and in such amounts as will most effectively and adequately enable the Bureau of Public Roads to continue its present cooperation with the various States in the construction of highways: Be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Oregon is hereby authorized and directed to transmit a copy of this memorial, under the seal of his office, to every Member of the delegation and to the presiding officer of the Senate of the United States and to the presiding officer of the House of Representatives in Congress.

Adopted by the house January 13, 1920.

STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state for the State of Oregon and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of house joint memorial No. 2 with the original thereof adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon at the special session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, January 12–17, 1920, and filed in the office of the secretary of state January 16, 1920, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof, together with all indorsements thereon. In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at the capitol at Salem, Oreg., this 20th day of January, A. D. 1920.

[SEAL.] BEN W. OLCOTT,
Secretary of State.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint resolution 12.

Be it resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring):

Whereas there is now pending before the Senate of the United States Senate bill 1309, providing for the construction of a national highway system; and

Whereas the provisions of said bill are of great value to the entire United States, and particularly to the Pacific Northwest; and

Whereas said bill has the hearty approval of the Federal highway councils of both the States of Washington and Oregon: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to favor the passage of said act; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Oregon be directed to transmit immediately a copy of this resolution to the President of the United States Senate and to all of the Oregon Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Adopted by the house January 17, 1920.

Mr. CURTIS. I present resolutions adopted by the Legislature of the State of Kansas in favor of the enactment of legislation to protect the National Guard. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 8.

Whereas the record made by the National Guard troops in the Great War and the efficiency of the officers and men entitle the National Guard of the United States to the fullest measure of support and the widest opportunity for the development of a military force which the public sentiment of this country demands shall be the backbone of its military strength—that great body of citizen soldiery who answered the call, never flinched in the face of the severest fire, and whose record of achievement stands as a guaranty of the ability of this organization to handle its own affairs and any situation that may confront it; and

Whereas the National Guard of the United States has developed to a high degree of efficiency when organized under the militia clauses of the Constitution of the United States, which reserve to the States the right of appointment of officers and the training of troops; and

Whereas the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate of the United States has reported the Army reorganization bill, S. 3688, which provides that the National Guard shall become a part of the Army of the United States; and

Whereas the adoption of such revolutionary measures will place the appointment of officers of the National Guard in the hands of the President of the United States; and

Whereas under this proposed act the governors of States can not call upon troops for the suppression of any disorders which may arise in the States without first obtaining the consent of the Federal Government; and

Whereas such summary legislation will in effect destroy the traditions of the National Guard and local pride and wipe out an organization which has been the backbone of the military strength of the country: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein), That we commend the action taken by Members of the Senate of the United States representing the State of Kansas who have opposed the passage of any legislation which shall abrogate the prerogatives of the States guaranteed under the militia clauses of the Federal Constitution; and be it further

Resolved, That we memorialize the Congress of the United States, requesting that they shall take such action in the reorganization of the military forces of the country which shall give to the National Guard the fullest measure of support, the widest opportunity for development, and which shall at all times reserve to the governors of the States the right of appointment of officers and training of troops guaranteed to them under the militia clauses of the Federal Constitution.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the house and passed that body January 23, 1920.

President of the Senate.
EMMET D. GEORGE,
Secretary of the Senate.

Approved January 27, 1920.

HENRY J. ALLEN, Governor.

Mr. CURTIS. I also present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Kansas, praying that appropriations be made for the construction of good roads. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 4.

A resolution requesting the Congress of the United States now in session to pass the bill, already introduced, appropriating funds to aid the several States in the construction of roads.

Whereas there is now before the Congress of the United States a bill making appropriations for the further cooperation of the Federal Government with the several States in the construction of roads.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of Kansas (the Senate concurring therein), That we most respectfully urge the passage of this bill in order that the States may continue their present road-building program and give assistance to many petitions now on file for which there are no Government funds.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the house, and passed that body January 9, 1920.

W. P. LAMBERTSON,
Speaker of the House.
CLARENCE W. MILLER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Passed the senate January 23, 1920.

President of the Senate.
EMMETT D. GEORGE,
Secretary of the Senate.

Approved January 27, 1920.

HENRY J. ALLEN, Governor.

Mr. CURTIS. I also present resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Kansas, praying for a revision of the immigration and naturalization laws of the United States. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 5.

Memorializing Congress to revise the immigration and naturalization laws of the United States.

Whereas the strained relations existing between the employers and the employees of the Nation have been found by the agents of Government to be due in large measure to the prevalence amongst our alien residents and citizens of foreign birth to illiteracy, pauperism, wrong ideals of freedom, liberty, and democracy, and prejudice against government, law, and order, engendering an almost complete inability to understand our institutions and government and thus endangering the safety and perpetuity of popular government in State and Nation; and

Whereas we are persuaded that the prevention of increase in this class of population is necessary: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Kansas (the Senate concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States is hereby memorialized to enact into law as speedily as possible measures which shall look to stopping this stream of evil at its source. We earnestly recommend that such a national statute upon immigration should include:

First. An examination at the port of embarkation in the country of which he is a citizen of every prospective emigrant to the United States. This examination should be made so thorough and minute that the consular representative of the United States conducting the same may become thoroughly acquainted with the moral character of the prospective emigrant in the community in which he lives and his financial ability to care for himself and family, if he have one.

Second. His ideas concerning the supremacy of organized government and law, his political ideals and affiliations in regard to the theories of government and society, particularly concerning those doctrines known as free love, polygamy, communism, radicalism, socialism, bolshevism, and anarchy.

Upon completing such examination and finding the prospective emigrant qualified in all the respects indicated to become a citizen of the United States, the consul shall issue to him a passport which will entitle him to enter the United States at the port to which the vessel upon which he embarks is chartered. The immigration officers at the port of debarkation must refuse landing privilege to any immigrant who does not possess such passport.

We further recommend that the period of probation before being admitted to citizenship shall be extended to five years, and until the applicant has satisfied the court that he has the ability to read, write, and speak the English language and to understand the foundation principles of our Government as set forth in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States, and all present wholesome restrictions in other respects be retained.

Resolved, That duly authenticated and engrossed copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the presiding officer of each House of Congress, and to each Senator and every Representative in Congress from the State of Kansas.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the house and passed that body January 13, 1920.

Speaker of the House.
CLARENCE W. MILLER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. CURTIS presented petitions of the Judson Kilpatrick Post, No. 36, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Newton; of General Russell Post, No. 65, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Pittsburg; of O. M. Mitchell Post, No. 69, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Osborne; and of Preston B. Plumb Post, No. 55, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Emporia, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the so-called Fuller pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburg, Kans., praying for the ratification of the peace treaty with reservations, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburg, Kans., praying for an appropriation to purchase foodstuffs for the relief of stricken Europe, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of the American Commission on Irish Independence, adopted at a meeting held in Topeka, Kans., favoring the independence of Ireland, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MOSES. I present resolutions relating to the disposition of northern Epirus, the Twelve Islands of the Aegean, and the western coast of Asia Minor, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas northern Epirus, south of a line drawn from the Bay of Grammala northeastward to the Ostrovista Mountain and thence northward to Lake Ochrida and Prespa, has always been Greek, geographically, historically, ethnologically, and strategically; and

Whereas the Docanese, or Twelve Islands of the Aegean, have always been Greek; and

Whereas the western coast of Asia Minor, from the Gulf of Adramyti to the Bay of Makri, which lies to the northwest of the Island of Rhodes, including the entire Province of Aidin, with the exception of the District of Denizli, including also the District of Ballikesser, which is a part of the Vilayet of Broussa, is preponderantly Greek: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that northern Epirus, the Twelve Islands of the Aegean, and the western coast of Asia Minor, where a strong Greek population predominates, should be awarded by the peace conference to Greece and become incorporated in the Kingdom of Greece.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I present a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Commercial Club of Aberdeen, S. Dak., relative to an appropriation to purchase grain to feed the people of central Europe and the Near East. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ABERDEEN, S. DAK.

Resolution.

Be it resolved, That the board of directors of the Aberdeen Commercial Club urgently recommends that Congress, in order to avert famine and to promote the resumption of stable economic and political conditions in the countries of central Europe outside of Germany and in Armenia, authorize the United States Grain Corporation or other suitable agency to purchase and to transport to those countries where famine is imminent and the Governments of which are unable, through lack of necessary resources, to provide for the subsistence of their peoples, food, supplies, and other necessaries of life; to sell such supplies on credit to the Governments of said countries and so to regulate their distribution as most effectively to provide for the prompt and sufficient relief of the populations in need; and that Congress appropriate such sum as may be necessary for the purpose.

THE ABERDEEN COMMERCIAL CLUB,
By A. W. CAMPBELL, President.

Correct—attest.
[SEAL.] GEO. C. MANTOR, Secretary.
Dated January 20, 1920.

Mr. McNARY presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, favoring the submission by Congress to the legislatures of the several States of a proposed amendment to the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, providing that children born in the United States or in the territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof and whose parents are not citizens and can not under existing laws acquire citizenship by naturalization shall retain the citizenship of the parents and shall not become citizens by reason of birth in the United States or any Territories subject to the jurisdiction thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, praying that an appropriation be made for the construction of a national road to be named after the late President Roosevelt, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, praying for the immediate opening of the Klamath Indian Reservation for settlement, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, praying for the location of a life-saving station at Port Orford, Curry County, Oreg., which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the restoration for entry of certain lands in Klamath County, Oreg., which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Oregon, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the construction of a national highway system, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, praying that an appropriation be made to enable the Federal Government and the various States to construct an adequate system of forest roads and post roads, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the patrol of our forests by airplanes during the 1920 season, which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

He also presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, praying for the enactment of legislation to expel and prohibit undesirable and disloyal aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide means by which the Deschutes project may be financed and developed by Federal aid, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

Mr. CAPPER presented petitions of Judson Kilpatrick Post, No. 36, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Newton; of George I. Ransome Post, No. 303, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Kansas City; of Abilene Post, No. 63, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Abilene; of Lew Gove Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Manhattan; and of Major Elliott Post, No. 437, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Ashland, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the so-called Fuller pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STERLING presented a resolution adopted at a convention of county commissioners of the State of South Dakota, favoring a national highway system, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of the New York State Bar Association, praying for the enactment of legislation to amend the procedure in Federal courts, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PHELAN. I present a memorial of the City Council, of Oakland, Calif., remonstrating against the proposed importation of Chinese laborers into the United States. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Oakland City Council—Resolution No. 19610 N. S., introduced by Commissioner Morse.

Resolution declaring sense of the council of Oakland as opposing and condemning the importation of Chinese laborers to the United States to compete with American laborers, and urging Congress to prevent such importation.

Whereas a proposition, financed by unknown sources, has been inaugurated for the purpose of importing to the United States a large number of natives of China to work as laborers in this country, thus making them a commodity in the labor market of the United States; and

Whereas this Oakland City Council believes that such a course would be detrimental to the labor conditions in this country by effecting competition between American workers and such Chinese laborers; and

Whereas this council believes that any problem of alleged shortage of farm hands can be solved by the employment of American labor, and without the assistance of Chinese coolies: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Oakland City Council hereby expresses itself as being opposed to such a plan, and hereby condemns any and all efforts to import oriental laborers or any other encroachment of American ideals: And be it

Resolved further, That a copy of this protest of the council be sent to our Representatives and Senators in Washington.

I certify that the foregoing is a full, true, and correct copy of a resolution passed by the council of the city of Oakland on January 8, 1920.

L. W. CUMMINGS, City Clerk.
[SEAL.] By W. W. CHAPPELL, Deputy.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of Upland Post No. 73, American Legion, of Upland, Calif., praying for the enactment of legislation defining sedition and providing punishment therefor, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MYERS presented a petition of the Park County Chamber of Commerce, of Livingston, Mont., praying for the enactment of legislation to supply seed grain for 1920 planting to farmers in drought-stricken districts, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 557) for the relief of Oscar C. Guessaz, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 406) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1533) for the relief of Anna M. Tobin, independent executrix of the estate of Frank R. Tobin, deceased, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 407) thereon.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 151) to permit the payment for certain lands whereon Army supply bases are situated, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 408) thereon.

CUSTER BATTLE FIELD NATIONAL CEMETERY.

Mr. WALSH of Montana, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3485) to provide for building and furnishing a building at Custer Battle Field National Cemetery for use as an office for the custodian and for the convenience and comfort of the public, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

INVENTIONS, PATENTS, AND PATENT RIGHTS.

Mr. NORRIS. From the Committee on Patents I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 3223) authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to accept and administer for the benefit of the public and the encouragement of industry, inventions, patents, and patents rights, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 405) thereon.

I take this occasion to say to the Senate that I shall ask for permission to take up the bill and consider it at a very early date, possibly on Monday. I call the attention of Senators to the bill at this time so they may look into it if they desire to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

Mr. McKELLAR. On behalf of the minority of the Committee on Military Affairs, I beg leave to submit a minority report (No. 400, Part II) on Senate bill 3792, known as the Army reorganization bill.

In submitting the report I merely desire to call attention to the total figures of the cost of our Military Establishment in the event that the Army reorganization bill reported by the majority is passed by the Congress and approved by the President.

According to the best figures we are able to obtain, the cost of the Army per annum as provided in that bill will be $1,314,143,000. I wish to say that if we pass the bill it will be necessary to increase the taxes upon the people of the United States in order to meet the demands that will be made.

I desire to say that when we pass this bill it will also be necessary to raise the taxes upon the people of the United States in order to meet the demands that will thereby be made. It is incredible to me that the Senate of the United States can for a moment think of passing such a bill at such a time. In presenting the minority report I call the attention of the Senate to the matter, hoping they will read the report before the bill comes up to be voted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and printed.

FOREIGN COMMERCE.

Mr. SMOOT. Pursuant to Senate resolution 203, submitted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] and adopted on October 3, 1919, the various heads of the executive departments have sent at various dates their responses, which were ordered to lie on the table.

In my opinion, these reports should be printed as a Senate document, with a table of contents in the front thereof. To that end I offer the following resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. NORRIS. Will not the Senator wait until we reach the order of resolutions?

Mr. SMOOT. This may be regarded as a report of the Joint Committee on Printing. It is really a report of a committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

The resolution (S. Res. 290) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the several communications from the heads of the executive departments, transmitting, pursuant to a Senate resolution of October 3, 1919, detailed statements concerning the character, amount, and estimated cost of work now being carried on in the respective departments in relation to the foreign commerce of the United States, be printed as a Senate document.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WALSH of Montana:

A bill (S. 3821) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901," and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CURTIS (for Mr. KEYES):

A bill (S. 3822) for the establishment and maintenance of a forest experiment station on the White Mountain National Forest in the State of New Hampshire; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

A bill (S. 3823) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Pierce; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 3824) granting an increase of pension to Alma L. Bruce (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3825) to authorize the construction of the Lincoln and Lee Memorial Bridge over the Potomac River.

Mr. KING. I think the bill should be referred to the Committee on the Library, although it seems to me that it is the wrong committee. I am told that all matters with reference to what may be denominated monuments go to the Committee on the Library.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does it relate to a national memorial?

Mr. KING. It is to take the place of the old Chain Bridge over the Potomac above Georgetown.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that that part of the river is a nonnavigable stream. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3826) authorizing and requiring the Capital Traction Co. to operate its cars through G Street NW., in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 3827) granting an increase of pension to Ezra J. Osborn; to the Committee on Pensions.

WRANGELL (ALASKA) BOND ISSUE.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 10746, being Order of Business 309.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The title of the bill referred to by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 10746) to authorize the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction, enlargement, and equipment of schools, the acquisition and construction of a water-supply system, the construction of a sewer system, the construction of a city dock and floating dock, and to levy and collect a special tax therefor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota for the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Territories with an amendment, in section 4, page 2, line 19, before the words "per cent," to strike out "7" and insert "6," so as to read:

That the bonds above specified, when authorized to be issued as hereinbefore provided, shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed 6 per cent per annum, payable annually, and shall be sold for not less than their par value, with accrued interest, and shall be in denominations not exceeding $1,000 each, the principal to be due in 20 years from the date thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

LAND FOR WALTER REED HOSPITAL.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the other day I called the attention of the Senate to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 147) to amend the Army appropriation act, approved July 11, 1919, being Order of Business 337 on the calendar. The purpose of the joint resolution is to correct a ruling of the auditor in connection with land the purchase of which Congress authorized in connection with the maintenance of Walter Reed Hospital.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. We must have an executive session; and if the consideration of the joint resolution to which the Senator refers is going to take any length of time I shall have to object.

Mr. SPENCER. I think it will take no time at all. I think there is no objection to it.

Mr. President, we authorized the expenditure of $350,000 for the purchase of certain land which is necessary for Walter Reed Hospital. In the same act, however, there was a provision prohibiting the use of the money therein appropriated for the purchase of land. The auditor ruled that the latter general prohibition excluded the definite appropriation which we had made. It is in order to correct that ruling that this joint resolution was favorably reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF AIR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the Senate has for the last two or three days had under consideration Senate bill 3348, creating a separate department of air. It is evident that there is still a very general misapprehension on the part of Senators as to just what the bill proposes to do. It is true that the Senate Committee on Military Affairs had the bill under consideration from July to November last, and that the report of the Committee on Military Affairs in favor of the bill was by a majority of 9 to 2. At the same time, as I have stated, it is evident that the purpose and scope of the bill are still misunderstood, and particularly so by certain members of the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, as to its effect and bearing upon the air services in those departments.

I therefore ask unanimous consent to have the bill recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs for their further consideration. I desire to say in this connection that if that privilege is granted I shall endeavor to see that the members of the committees named are given the fullest opportunity for investigation and such inquiry as they may see fit to make, and I sincerely hope that they will avail themselves of the opportunity which will be then offered, an opportunity of which they did not, perhaps, take full advantage during the long period that the bill was under consideration last summer and fall.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Indiana is very wise, and I am sure it is the best plan to be pursued; but I wish to ask the Senator if it would be possible for his committee or some one to segregate from the two large volumes of testimony relative to the subject matter of the bill and other subjects that which bears alone upon aircraft and have that testimony printed separately? I have spent a great deal of time in going through the two volumes, but it is only with the utmost difficulty, unless one has an abundance of time, that it is possible to segregate the testimony bearing upon that question. Many of us desire to familiarize ourselves with this very important question.

Mr. NEW. I think what the Senator from Utah suggests would be possible and of advantage.

Mr. KING. I merely suggest it to the Senator.

Mr. NEW. Hearings before the Military Affairs Committee were held concurrently on three bills, and it is true that as they appear in the printed volumes of the hearings the subjects are, perhaps, somewhat involved. I will endeavor to see that the suggestion of the Senator from Utah is carried out.

Mr. KING. I have spent a good many hours in going through this testimony, and I doubt if many other Senators would have the patience to do so; but if it should be printed in compact form Senators will familiarize themselves, I think, with this important matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] that the bill referred to by him be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to withdraw the notice given a few days ago of a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Indian appropriation bill was passed.

I make this withdrawal after a conference with and at the instance of Members of the House who are interested in the questions in controversy between the two Houses.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

TREATY WITH PARAGUAY.

The Senate, in executive session, this day ratified the following treaty between the United States and Paraguay, and, on motion of Mr. LODGE, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom.

The treaty is as follows:

The SENATE:

I transmit herewith, to receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, a convention between the United States and Paraguay, signed October 20, 1919, for the development of commerce between them and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 24 January, 1920.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate, if his judgment approve thereof, to receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, a convention October 20, 1919, between the United States and Paraguay, for the development of commerce between them and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen.

Respectfully submitted.

ROBERT LANSING.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, October 22, 1919.

The United States of America and the Republic of Paraguay, being desirous to foster the development of commerce between them and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen, have agreed to conclude a convention for that purpose and have to that end appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America; Robert Lansing, Secretary of State of the United States of America; and the President of the Republic of Paraguay, Manuel Gondra, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary for the Republic of Paraguay, near the Government of the United States of America, who, having communicated to each other their full powers, which were found to be in due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

Manufacturers, merchants, and traders domiciled within the jurisdiction of one of the high contracting parties may operate as commercial travelers, either personally or by means of agents or employees, within the jurisdiction of the other high contracting party on obtaining from the latter, upon payment of a single fee, a license which shall be valid throughout its entire territorial jurisdiction.

In case either of the high contracting parties shall be engaged in war it reserves to itself the right to prevent from operating within its jurisdiction, under the provisions of this convention or otherwise, enemy nationals or other aliens whose presence it may consider prejudicial to public order and national safety.

ARTICLE II.

In order to secure the license above mentioned the applicant must obtain from the country of domicile of the manufacturers, merchants, and traders represented a certificate attesting his character as a commercial traveler. This certificate, which shall be issued by the authority to be designated in each country for the purpose, shall be viséed by the consul of the country in which the applicant proposes to operate, and the authorities of the latter shall, upon the presentation of such certificate, issue to the applicant the national license as provided in Article I.

ARTICLE III.

A commercial traveler may sell his samples without obtaining a special license as an importer.

ARTICLE IV.

Samples without commercial value shall be admitted to entry free of duty.

Samples marked, stamped, or defaced in such manner that they can not be put to other uses shall be considered as objects without commercial value.

ARTICLE V.

Samples having commercial value shall be provisionally admitted upon giving bond for the payment of lawful duties if they shall not have been withdrawn from the country within a period of six months.

Duties shall be paid on such portion of the samples as shall not have been so withdrawn.

ARTICLE VI.

All customs formalities shall be simplified as much as possible with a view to avoid delay in the dispatch of samples.

ARTICLE VII.

Peddlers and other salesmen who vend directly to the consumer, even though they have not an established place of business in the country in which they operate, shall not be considered as commercial travelers, but shall be subject to the license fees levied on business of the kind which they carry on.

ARTICLE VIII.

No license shall be required of:

(a) Persons traveling only to study trade and its needs, even though they initiate commercial relations, provided they do not make sales of merchandise.

(b) Persons operating through local agencies which pay the license fee or other imposts to which their business is subject.

(c) Travelers who are exclusively buyers.

ARTICLE IX.

Any concession affecting any of the provisions of the present treaty that may hereafter be granted by either high contracting party, either by law or by treaty or convention, shall immediately be extended to the other party.

ARTICLE X.

This convention shall be ratified; and the ratifications shall be exchanged in Washington within two years, or sooner, if possible.

The present convention shall remain in force until the end of six months after either of the high contracting parties shall have given notice to the other of its intention to terminate the same, each of them reserving to itself the right of giving such notice to the other at any time. And it is hereby agreed between the parties that, on the expiration of six months after such notice shall have been received by either of them from the other party as above mentioned this convention shall altogether cease and terminate.

In testimony whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed these articles and have thereunto affixed their seals.

Done in duplicate, in English and Spanish, at Washington, this 20th day of October, 1919.

ROBERT LANSING. [SEAL.]
M. GONDRA. [SEAL.]

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and at 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m. the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 2, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 31, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou Great Father Soul, a potent factor in shaping the destiny of men and of nations, give us the grace to submit ourselves to the heavenly influence, that our thoughts may be in consonance with Thy thoughts and our ways in consonance with Thy ways; and thus meet the great problems which confront us as individuals and as a people, and solve them to the well-being of our people and of all concerned; and so hasten the coming of Thy kingdom, that happiness and prosperity may smile upon all the world, and glory, and honor, and praise be Thine. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

FORT BERTHOLD INDIANS.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4382) to confer on the Court of Claims jurisdiction to determine the respective rights of and differences between the Fort Berthold Indians and the United States, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota calls up the bill H. R. 4382, with a Senate amendment thereto, and moves to concur in the Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk reported the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, what is this bill about?

Mr. SINCLAIR. It is a bill to confer on the Court of Claims jurisdiction to decide the rights and obligations that exist between this Government and the Fort Berthold Indians. It passed the House in December and passed the Senate, but through an inadvertence a typographical error occurred, which the Senate has corrected by amendment. The word "unit" was printed instead of the word "suits."

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

ZONING COMMISSION FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6863) to regulate the height, area, and the use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to all of the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6863, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman whether he has talked with the ranking Democrat on the committee in respect to this?

Mr. MAPES. I have.

Mr. GARNER. And this meets with his approval?

Mr. MAPES. It does.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What has ever been done about the apartment house up here near Mrs. Henderson's?

Mr. MAPES. The resolution reported by the committee is on the calendar.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does it restrict the height of buildings, that one can see from the top of Meridian Hill the glories of the city of Washington?

Mr. MAPES. The resolution as proposed provides for a building 2 feet lower than the plans of the building called for.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does that accomplish the purpose that Mrs. Henderson had in mind?

Mr. MAPES. Mrs. Henderson is in favor of the resolution.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If she is in favor of it, I am too.

Mr. MAPES. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that there have been some obstacles in the way of the passage of the resolution, and that there is no present intention upon the part of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia to call it up.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The obstacle is the fellow who owns the apartment building that is under construction, is it not?

Mr. MAPES. The plans and arrangements had all been completed and the building started, the proposition financed according to the existing law, and it did not seem practicable or fair to change the regulation at so late a date in the proceedings. In fact, the builders to put up the building had given an indemnity bond of several hundred thousand dollars to erect the building according to certain plans and specifications, which called for a building 2 feet higher than the resolution fixes as proper.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not recall, but have we not now a commission or something that undertakes to pass upon the height of buildings in the District of Columbia?

Mr. MAPES. No; we have a Fine Arts Commission, but it does not have authority to pass upon the height of buildings.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman mean to say that one can erect a building here of any height without any permit or approval?

Mr. MAPES. He must have a permit, but there is no authority to limit the height of buildings.

Mr. WINGO. What authority have they—just the authority to grant the permits?

Mr. MAPES. There are certain building restrictions and regulations with which they have to comply.

Mr. WINGO. By whom are the restrictions made? Are they made by the commissioners or by Congress or by a commission?

Mr. MAPES. By the commissioners of the District, under authority, of course, granted by Congress.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, there is a building code which requires the appointment of a building commissioner and building inspectors, who have the authority to specify the kind of construction that shall be employed in the erection of buildings.

Mr. WINGO. Do they not fix the height?

Mr. MADDEN. They have not the power to fix the height.

Mr. WINGO. Somebody in the past has refused to approve plans for buildings that were too high. How is it they permit some persons to put them up and others not? I understand the committee has reported out a bill in this particular Meridian Hill matter. Is it going to be the policy of Congress to undertake to fix the height of each particular building because some one objects that it might obstruct the view, or are we going to have a commission which will undertake to regulate that?

Mr. MAPES. Under the authority of this bill, which has already passed both Houses and which I am asking to have sent to conference, the District Commissioners are given the power to make regulations fixing the height of buildings.

Mr. WINGO. That is the bill the gentleman is now undertaking to send to conference?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. That will undertake to cover all of this, so that we will not be worried by complaints that come up from time to time?

Mr. MAPES. Yes. If this bill had been a law, there would be no occasion to come to Congress in respect to the building up near Meridan Hill.

Mr. MADDEN. It is within the power of the building commissioner, who is under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of the District, to say whether a building shall be a certain height or not, if its construction does not comply with what he believes is safe construction.

Mr. WINGO. Somebody in the District heretofore has undertaken to determine the height and character of the material and even the capacity of buildings.

Mr. MADDEN. They have got to do that.

Mr. WINGO. Of certain types of buildings, and yet I notice every now and then that somebody complains because a certain building is too high, or that they permit too many automobiles to go into the garage, or something of that kind. Even the lawyers in the District seem to be confused about where the jurisdiction lies.

Mr. MAPES. There is a law which limits the height of buildings to twice the width of the street on which they are constructed.

Mr. WINGO. But that law has never been enforced that I have been able to find.

Mr. MAPES. I do not know as to that.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman will find on nearly every important street buildings that violate that provision.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, the building commission has power to prescribe the kind of material that shall go into the buildings, whether it be fireproof, incombustible, and the manner in which they shall erect the buildings, and they have the right to say how much air space, and so forth, shall be afforded, and how much light space shall be afforded, and so forth.

Mr. WINGO. Is he the gentleman who is permitting these magnificent alleged fireproof apartment houses to be constructed with partitions made of common plaster board, that if an ordinary boy were to fall against it it would break? Is he the gentleman permitting that?

Mr. MADDEN. If they violate the law they are liable.

Mr. WINGO. Who is?

Mr. MADDEN. The commissioner is liable for any injury that may happen by reason of faulty construction.

Mr. WINGO. The point I am getting at is it is notorious that certain buildings are being built and sold to investors as strictly fireproof buildings and in most of them the partitions are nothing but thin plaster board that any ordinary man could take his fist and ram through it. It is true that important structures are being palmed off on the public as fireproof.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. What is before the House?

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MAPES. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], who has been on his feet for some time.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not take the gentleman off his feet by a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DYER. I make the point of order that the House is not in order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan to disagree to the Senate amendments and send the bill to conference?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—if the gentleman from Massachusetts wants to take the responsibility of forcing the question now—I am not so much concerned about the height of these buildings or whether some investor gets cheated in his transaction or not, as I imagine most of them can take care of most of their own property and do not need the guardianship of Congress, but I am concerned in not having this great row we had once before in which a most estimable lady's name, that of Mrs. Henderson, was connected in reference to the changing of Sixteenth Street to the Avenue of the Presidents. I hope there is nothing in this bill that leads in that direction.

Mr. MAPES. There is nothing of the sort in this bill.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WINGO. In reference to the remark of the gentleman as to interest in investors, I am not interested in them, but I have a common interest in the safety and the health of the people of the District, which are being jeopardized by the mere shells being put up in the District of Columbia under the guise of fireproof structures.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. LITTLE. I suggest——

Mr. WINGO. I object, unless we can get some information.

Mr. LITTLE (continuing). That the gentleman notify the United States attorney if there is any crime, and he has been modifying ever since I told him I was going to ask that.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman may notify him. I do not consider it a part of my duties. I will be glad to give him any facts I get on the subject. I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair announces the following conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MAPES, Mr. FOCHT, and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Arkansas object?

Mr. WINGO. I said I would object unless I could get information; but I will withdraw the objection, as I understand the gentlemen over there want to attend to some business. If they wish to do that, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the announcement of the conferees will stand.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12046.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the urgent deficiency bill, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 12 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. What paragraph is that?

Mr. GOOD. The last paragraph on page 13, which was the last one read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 12 miutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] to proceed for 10 minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, my provincialistic friend from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has always entertained such an opposition to the building of the sanatorium at Dawsonsprings, Ky., that if there were memorial exercises to be held or a funeral oration to be delivered by the gentleman he would certainly bring in Dawsonsprings.

He rushed out to Chicago a few days ago to make a speech before some organization there. He again reasserted his opposition to this proposition. I have always heard that a barking dog never bites. I am also convinced of the proposition that when a man takes both sides of the same proposition at one time or another those who are following or have any confidence in his contention concerning the matter lose faith in him. And yet he comes as a great friend now of the discharged, disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines of this country and criticizes the Secretary of the Treasury and the Bureau of Public Health for not completing, or signing the contract which will complete, the Speedway Hospital in Chicago. If the Speedway Hospital project was meritorious in 1919, when this matter was up, it is meritorious now. If there is a "nigger in the woodpile" now in the matter of the Speedway Hospital in Chicago, there was in 1919.

There was no more bitter speech on the floor of this House when this legislation was being considered than the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] made in condemnation of the Speedway Hospital in Chicago. He said yesterday he followed the Secretary of the Treasury, but that he found if he followed him much further his fingers would get burned. If consistency is the criterion, he is already singed all over now.

Why, gentlemen, he pictures now the deplorable condition of these discharged, disabled soldiers in these wooden hospitals in Chicago. When this legislation was pending the Bureau of Public Health and the Secretary of the Treasury sent communication after communication to the Speaker of this House telling of the deplorable conditions not only at Chicago but all over this country; and yet the gentleman from Iowa has done more to retard the enactment of this legislation and the building of these hospitals and providing and caring for these unfortunate boys than any other man on the American Continent.

I shall refer to Dawsonsprings only briefly. I have not time. If you gentlemen will do me the kindness to read the speech I put in the RECORD Wednesday, you will see that it shows whether the contract price for road work there is reasonable or not. He says that Mr. Graff wanted at that time to let the contract to a subcontractor. How would you do that without getting a contractor first to let the contract to? And Mr. Perry says it meant that the Government was to build it, and he said that if this was done the Government would have to have $100,000 worth of machinery and equipment down there to grade two miles and a half of road. And when the proposition came at the instance of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] to repeal this legislation last spring and summer, if he had had his way about it all of this legislation would have been repealed and the boys all over the country would have had no hope of hospital facilities. And then, when the proposition to repeal it came in the urgent deficiency bill, in the last analysis here, notwithstanding his opposition then to the Speedway Hospital, notwithstanding the accusations he made then, somebody at the last moment here, as you gentlemen will remember, made the gentleman change his mind that night and—notwithstanding the Speedway Hospital was then a graft, according to his former statements—he let it go over, and the excuse was that he wanted to get the urgent deficiency appropriation bill enacted. Or, in other words, according to his former position, he would squander $9,000,000 of the people's money in hospital facilities just for the purpose of getting the urgent deficiency appropriation bill enacted into law. And when the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. NICHOLLS] asked him and said, in substance, "I voted with you all the time against the Speedway; why have you changed?" he answered, and his answer is shown in his speech in the RECORD of July 28, 1919, as follows:

Humiliated as I have been because of the failure of the Rules Committee to report a rule, and actuated only by a desire to pass appropriation bills within the limit of time, I have been forced to take this position.

Why, the attitude of the Secretary of the Treasury has never been changed on the Speedway proposition, but the position of the gentleman from Iowa has been changed in some way, by some means; and because he has changed, he came in a spirit of criticism on the floor here yesterday and not only criticized the Secretary of the Treasury but the Bureau of Public Health in their activities, and says that a part of this little road work at Dawsonsprings is a graft. Gentlemen, in view of the reputation of Carter Glass, the Secretary of the Treasury, and his eminent and faithful service as a Member on the floor of this House, I think it will stand about as well as that of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] when it comes to graft or when it comes to honor and integrity on any proposition. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I do not believe there is a man of higher integrity that walks the soil of the United States than Secretary Glass; and because he has not changed his mind on the Speedway proposition, and because of the further fact that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has, the latter comes in and criticizes the Secretary of the Treasury.

And yet the gentleman from Iowa comes now to ingratiate himself into the good graces of these disabled soldiers. He is very apprehensive about them now. He wants them all taken care of at this late date. But if it had not been for him, more than any other man, these hospitals, and especially the one at Dawsonsprings, would have been constructed and the soldiers would have been receiving the benefit of them to-day. He may think he is getting by with it, but it will meet with the condemnation of these poor, helpless boys, whom we promised when we went into the war, when we adopted the Bureau of War Risk Insurance act, "You bare your breast to the bayonets of the enemy, and when this great fight is over, if you come home maimed and wounded we will not only pay allowances and an indemnity but we will provide for you hospital facilities." That is what this Congress is trying to do, but the monkey wrench was thrown into the machinery by the gentleman from Iowa on this proposition, and, in my judgment, he will receive not only the wrath of every boy that is in these wooden hospitals and exposed to the hazards of fire and cold but he will be held responsible by every friend of these soldiers on the American Continent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to answer the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] in kind. I am reminded of lines of Shakespeare in one of his immortal plays:

The robb'd that smiles, steals something from the thief.

I answer the gentleman's remarks with a smile.

The gentleman in his remarks the other day, as found at page 2128 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, refers to a Democrat who was appointed by the Bureau of Public Health of the Treasury Department to go to Dawsonsprings and superintend the work there, and this is what the gentleman says of him:

The Bureau of Public Health sent a man named Graff to Dawsonsprings, and unfortunately his name is spelled G-r-a-f-f, without the "t."

The gentleman realizes that there is a species of graft going on with regard to the contract at Dawsonsprings. There is something going on with regard to that contract that smells to high heaven, where a contractor for 2 miles of grading is receiving $62,000 more for the grading than the Treasury Department estimated it would cost to do the grading. And now the gentleman has tried to malign the character of one man that they sent down there to do the work simply because he dared to tell of the rottenness of the department. As to whether he is honest and reliable, I call the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service. I shall ask leave to put into the RECORD the letter of Rupert Blue, the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service. He appointed this man, commending Mr. Graff for his splendid service.

That simply answers the charge of the gentleman. Mr. Graff was all right and would have been all right if he had been willing to do the will of the men from Dawsonsprings who are attaching themselves to the Treasury Department, and especially to the Public Health Service, and are able, apparently, to get just what they want.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter of indorsement of Mr. Graff, the gentleman who has been maligned by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE], may appear in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the letter referred to be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

DECEMBER 29, 1919.

To whom it may concern:

The bearer of this letter, Mr. B. H. Graff, has been employed for a trifle over a year as field engineer of the United States Public Health Service. During this time he has made inspections of many properties in different parts of the United States and reported on them as to their adaptability for hospital uses, the cost of necessary alterations, and the value of the property. These reports formed the basis of the bureau's recommendations in many cases as to the acquisition of the properties and also the basis of negotiations for the purchase or lease of those which were acquired by the Government for this service. These reports were painstaking and thorough, and were found to be particularly dependable as to valuation.

Mr. Graff also negotiated a lease or purchase of several of these properties. During the latter part of his services in the bureau he was in charge of the preliminary survey for construction work and the layout of roads in connection with the large tuberculosis sanatorium which the service is constructing at Dawsonsprings, Ky.

Mr. Graff has shown most praiseworthy devotion to duty and regard for the interests of the service and the Government. His services have been of much assistance in the development of the large hospital program now being worked out by the service.

Respectfully,

(Signed) RUPERT BLUE,
Surgeon General.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay, out of the unexpended balance of the sum of $1,000,000 appropriated by the joint resolution of October 1, 1918, to aid in combating "Spanish" influenza and other communicable diseases, the bills of the proprietors of certain newspapers published in Chicago, Ill., for the publication of a notice giving warning against influenza on October 3, 1918, as follows: The Chicago Tribune, $600; the Evening Post, $366; the Daily Journal, $366; the Herald-Examiner, $448; the Evening American, $504; the Daily News, $610; in all, $2,894.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserves a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. About October 1, 1918, the Public Health Service prepared a notice in the shape of a warning to the American people concerning Spanish influenza. This notice was published almost universally by the daily press all over the country. But I notice from this paragraph of the deficiency bill that certain newspapers in the city of Chicago make a charge against the Government for giving their patrons the benefit of this warning, the same warning which the patrons of every other newspaper in the United States had as a matter of news beneficial to them.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment. For instance, the Chicago Tribune, for giving its patrons the benefit of the warning, attempts to charge the United States Government $600. The Evening Post, for giving its patrons the benefit of that warning which would accrue to their help and assistance, attempts to charge the Government $366. The Daily Journal attempts to charge the United States Government $366. The Herald-Examiner attempts to charge the Government $448. The Evening American attempts to charge $504, and the Daily News $610.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. As I understand, these announcements were placed in the papers as advertisements in a large special place, as advertisements, under the belief at that time that they would be noticed better and quicker by every one than would be the reading material that they have inserted frequently, warning the people against the prevailing influenza.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman from Illinois believe that the space in the Chicago papers devoted to items of news that would accrue to the benefit of their patrons is to be charged for any more than the like space in the New York papers or the space in the St. Louis papers or the space in the San Francisco papers? Is not the space of one newspaper worth just as much to itself and its patrons as the space of every other newspaper?

Mr. SABATH. There is no doubt about that, but this was placed there as an advertisement.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. It had to be placed in a certain way in Chicago, but in no other city of the United States. I would like to ask the chairman a question about it. If the chairman is willing to pay these Chicago newspapers these various extravagant sums for something that was to the benefit of their patrons what excuse is he going to offer for not paying like sums to every other paper in the land for the same service? Their space was used. Their patrons got the benefit of this warning and influenza was combated by reason of this warning. If we pay these Chicago papers, why should we not pay them all?

Mr. GOOD. The situation in regard to these newspaper advertisements is this: There was about $10,000 or $12,000 of the million dollars appropriated to combat influenza used for newspaper advertisements. In all cases excepting these the Secretary of the Treasury approved the bills or the contracts for inserting these advertisements. They were display advertisements of a page or half page—I have forgotten the exact space. But in these cases the Secretary did not approve of the plan and the expenditure until after the advertisements were inserted. Therefore under the ruling they had no authority to pay for them. These advertisements were not paid for, and the others were paid for. That is the reason why this item is carried here as legislation in this bill. There is no question about its being subject to a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the chairman believe that this kind of a warning to the American people was more in the nature of a news item which the readers of every paper had the right to expect from their newspaper rather than have the Government pay for it as an advertisement?

Mr. GOOD. I think practically the whole expenditure was a waste of money.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; a waste of money. That is what it is, and we ought to stop it. I will make the point of order against it——

Mr. GOOD. Wait one moment——

Mr. BLANTON. On the ground that it is not authorized in the law, is new legislation, and that it is not germane to the bill.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order. It is so clearly a waste of public money that I do not think we should take up time with it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas withhold his reservation of the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I withhold it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does not the gentleman believe that his criticism should be directed even more harshly against the department for having paid certain of these bills than against the newspapers that are trying now to get what the other newspapers have already received?

Mr. BLANTON. I took it for granted that my distinguished friend could understand the criticism, apparently veiled to him, which I was making, that these departments ought to be stopped from wasting the public money in any such manner, and that when the newspapers of the country have news items for their patrons they ought not to charge the Government for it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I simply wanted to make it clear that other newspapers received payment for making these publications.

Mr. LITTLE. Did I understand the gentleman from Texas to say "veiled criticism"? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. It was not veiled to anybody except to my friend over there.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If that was a veiled criticism, what would a real criticism be?

Mr. BLANTON. It might have been a little of both.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I want to say to the gentleman that while I was in Chicago a few days ago I heard a great deal of discussion in regard to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. There seemed to be a good deal of sentiment that the two most prominently mentioned Democrats of the Nation were the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. Bryan, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I do not want the gentleman to couple my name with that of Mr. Bryan. [Laughter.] I do not want to be coupled with anything that is not very much alive otherwise, as well as politically.

Mr. GOOD. I am simply telling the gentleman what the Democracy of the Middle West are talking about in this regard, and I hope the gentleman will not destroy his reputation in the country and in the Middle West by criticizing too strongly the inefficiency of the present administration in the executive departments, because I realize that the gentleman has a great future.

Mr. BLANTON. In answer to the gentleman I will say that I notice a discussion of myself in to-day's Washington Times. The person in charge of that newspaper, who the Attorney General of the United States and the United States Senate a short time ago proved conclusively was a common, subsidized pimp of German brewers during the war, tries to make out that I have been wasting the time of this House because from time to time I have forced a quorum to attend to business. I have to bear criticism from such a source as that! If the fellow who is running that paper only knew it, my people in my country believe honestly and sincerely that if I could adjourn this Congress for half of the days of the year, so that it would be in session only half of the time, I would be doing a service to the American people, because the longer we sit here the more money we waste and expend and appropriate, and the biggest fool laws that an intelligent person ever dreamed of we pass and permit to go on the statute books, and my people know I am rendering a service every time I force a quorum, even though sometimes I thereby force this House to adjourn. So much for what is reported through the country. No sheet like the Washington Times can hurt me here or elsewhere. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa contend that this is not subject to the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. The item is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Aqueduct Bridge: For continuing the construction of the bridge authorized in section 1 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the removal of what is now known as the Aqueduct Bridge, across the Potomac River, and for the building of a bridg in place thereof," approved May 18, 1916, $150,000, one-half to be payable out of the Treasury of the United States and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if this is the old bridge over here in Georgetown upon which this Government has wasted so many thousands of dollars during the last 20 years?

Mr. GOOD. This is to build the new bridge authorized to connect Georgetown and Virginia.

Mr. BLANTON. In what way is this a deficiency?

Mr. GOOD. It is to replace the present bridge. It is a deficiency in this sense: We have already appropriated the full amount of the authorized cost, $1,000,000; but the bridge is under construction and will cost approximately, as I recall it, $2,000,000, and only $1,000,000 is authorized. It was authorized before the war. They are working on the bridge, and the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee have already reported out a bill to increase the limit of cost, as I recall it, to $2,100,000. Now, a bill of that kind will have to pass. This appropriation is made in anticipation of that bill passing, in order to give the funds that will be immediately necessary so as to continue the work.

Mr. BLANTON. Was there not a contract let for the construction of that new bridge for a specified sum?

Mr. GOOD. No. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] for information as to that. He is a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. DENISON. I will state that the work was not let on contract. The department asked for contracts, but all of the bids that were offered were so high that the Government rejected them and undertook the building of the bridge itself through the engineers of the War Department.

Mr. BLANTON. Then this is not for an additional amount to pay to some contractor over and above his contract price?

Mr. DENISON. Not at all.

Mr. BLANTON. The Government is building the bridge itself?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; the Government is building the bridge itself, and our Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have already reported a bill to the House authorizing an additional appropriation to complete this work. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I reserve the point of order. I want to ask a question in reference to this. There was quite a contest in the House concerning the authorization for this bridge. There have been a good many propositions at different times here for different bridges across the Potomac River. There was quite a controversy in the House over the amount which the bridge might cost. Now the War Department goes ahead and makes plans that it may be never could have been carried out for the original sum authorized. So the increase is not on account of the war. I suppose we are in a position where we have authorized the construction of a bridge, turned the construction over to the War Department, expended in the neighborhood of $1,000,000, found that we have not yet commenced the work, and we are held by the throat and compelled to appropriate another $1,000,000.

I really am concerned as to the effect of this item in the bill on the previous authorization. I do not know that I can get any information. I do not know that anybody would be authorized to give the information. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have reported a bill, I believe, increasing the authorization. The total amount heretofore authorized has been appropriated. Here comes in an item to appropriate an additional $150,000 not now authorized by law, and the question with me is whether the moment we appropriate the additional $150,000 it does not entirely remove the limitation heretofore provided. If we have appropriated money for a bridge with no limit on the authorization, that is a continuing work or project in process of construction, and there is no limit to the amount of money which may be appropriated therefor. Now, if by this item we exceed the appropriation already authorized and provide for $150,000 additional, does not that constitute a declaration by Congress that this is to carry out a project already under construction, and will it not authorize appropriations hereafter to any extent, regardless of whether we pass the bill reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce or not?

I notice, by the way, that this is called the Aqueduct Bridge. It ought to be called the Georgetown Bridge, but I believe it has a name. Does anybody know the name of it?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is called the Key Bridge.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am glad there is one gentleman in the House, and he from Virginia, who knows the name conferred on the bridge, by whom I do not know, but certainly without any sense. I knew it was called the Key Bridge, but nobody knows why except the gentleman from Virginia and myself.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman can always get the information on this side.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I had the information, but I wanted to demonstrate that my colleague knew nothing about it.

Mr. SABATH. Your colleague got the information on this side.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I rise for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to a serious situation that is going to occur in the office of The Adjutant General if this bill passes and becomes a law as it is now written. The facts I should say, in justice to myself, have come to my knowledge since the bill was considered in the Committee on Appropriations. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, if he will not consent either to introduce an amendment taking care of the situation, or if he will accept an amendment which I would be glad to offer to correct the situation?

The situation is just this: There was an appropriation of $3,500,000 that was made for the purpose of taking care and custody of the draft records, and for the employment of clerical assistance, for the purpose of furnishing to adjutants general of States statements of the services of soldiers who served in the war with Germany.

You will notice that it was for the specific purpose of furnishing information to adjutants general of the various States.

Now, there is a considerable sum—$700,000 or $800,000—that will not be expended or needed for that particular purpose. The Adjutant General and Secretary of War asked the committee not to make a new appropriation but to authorize the expenditure of a certain amount of that sum already appropriated for the purpose of providing clerks to furnish information as to the records of soldiers to the bureaus and those who are lawfully entitled to call for it. If that is not done, it will be necessary for them to discharge 1,290 clerks employed on that work or to transfer them to other work in his office. If that is not done, The Adjutant General states plainly and emphatically that he will not be able to furnish the information to the War Risk Bureau and to the Auditor of the War Department or to the Federal Board for Vocational Training or to the director of finance which is needed in the settlement of claims made by soldiers and in the disposition of claims for medical treatment, allotment, and allowances, and so forth.

I take it that there is not a Member of this House who desires to see that occur, and yet The Adjutant General says that unless he has that authority he will not be able to furnish that information. What will be the result? The soldier will make application to the War Risk Bureau asking for medical treatment, asking for compensation; the Director of the War Risk Bureau can not settle that until he gets the official record of the soldier from The Adjutant General. Likewise, application will be made to the Federal Board for Vocational Training, and the board which will have finally to pass on that application must have official information from The Adjutant General as to the record of that soldier.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. How have they been doing that in the past?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They have had a fund down there and have been able to furnish the information, but The Adjutant General says that the fund is exhausted and unless he gets the additional authorization the clerks will have to be discharged. In addition, the Director of Finance passes on the claims of soldiers for back pay and equipment and other claims, and the Director of Finance must have the official record of the soldier furnished by The Adjutant General. The same is true of the Auditor of the War Department in the settlement of these claims.

Now, the proposition comes to this House, as the Secretary of War and The Adjutant General state, that unless he is given the authority he will not have the force with which to furnish the information. The result will be that the soldiers who need medical treatment, these soldiers who are entitled to have compensation, these soldiers who are entitled to equipment, will be delayed possibly for months, and until the next fiscal year, before they can get their claims acted upon. Every Member of the House will be besieged with letters inquiring why the claims are not allowed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman says that it will be necessary for The Adjutant General to dispense with the services of 1,200 clerks. How many clerks has he?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not recall; I could refer to the hearings.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It takes some little while now to get the information.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; it necessarily does take some time.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not suppose that I get every letter from my district, but I will say that I have been wondering why the great delays in these matters have occurred.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I get a great many requests in relation to various claims of soldiers pending before the War Risk Bureau.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman does not get over an average of five a day.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I get many more than that some days, and when I write a letter to The Adjutant General I get a very prompt response. A very few days brings me a response with respect to the soldier or anything else about which I ask. This Congress made an appropriation of $4,000,000 by way of lump sum to the Secretary of War and he allotted that sum among the various bureaus of his department, and the largest allotment was made to The Adjutant General. These 1,200 clerks have been employed out of that allotment, as I understand it, but that allotment has been practically exhausted, and that is what The Adjutant General means when he says that unless this authorization is given him those clerks now employed under this allotment will have to go out, and he will have no clerks whatever to put upon this work, to furnish this information which is necessary in order to have a speedy settlement of the soldiers' claims. I want to read what The Adjutant General says with reference to the number of clerks he has:

> I now have employed on the records of the soldiers of the World War only 60 per cent more clerks than were employed on the records of the Civil War 30 years after its close. * * * In proportion to the number of men demobilized I have less than one-third the number of clerks that were employed on the records of the Army demobilized after the Spanish-American War. I might add that I am now furnishing in the case of soldiers of the World War information of a kind that was not available until 30 years after the Civil War and for many years after the Spanish-American War. This became possible as the result of changes in the method of keeping the records of The Adjutant General's office, effected during the progress of the war. My request for funds to continue the employment of the present number of clerks would, therefore, not seem to be unreasonable.

I submit these soldiers are entitled to have their claims settled promptly, especially those who are disabled. When the Secretary of War and The Adjutant General come before the committee and say that unless we authorize him to use a part of this appropriation, not to make a new appropriation, but to use a part of the appropriation already made for the employment of these clerks, I think Congress ought to readily accede to it, because if you do not act, then you will be responsible and not the War Department when these soldiers have their claims held up for months. I hope that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] will consent to introduce an amendment which will take care of the situation, or if he will not do it, I would be very glad to do it myself, but I hesitate to do so without his full consent as chairman of this committee.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, under all of the circumstances, I do not see how I can possibly introduce an amendment along the line suggested by the Secretary of War. I think there is nothing perhaps that will come before the Congress at this session that is going to determine whether or not we are to have real, efficient management in the executive departments and the discharge of useless clerks any more than this item that the gentleman refers to will disclose. It is here discovered that the Secretary of War threatens, in a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that he will not answer and can not answer letters with regard to discharged soldiers unless we give this appropriation; and yet, out of the lump-sum appropriation of $4,000,000, he has created in his office a publicity bureau—for what nobody knows—with a man at the head of it drawing $3,900 a year. That publicity man is there now with a force under him. The War Department had during normal times, in rough figures, approximately $2,000,000 for its clerical force in Washington, and that amount is carried now in the bill for this year. In addition to that the legislative bill carried $3,500,000 as a lump sum for securing the draft records for the adjutants general of the several States. In addition to that there is another lump-sum appropriation of $4,000,000 for clerks in the War Department—$9,500,000 for clerks in the War Department for the year. Let us see how that was allotted by the Secretary of War. That appropriation of $4,000,000 was given because Congress wanted The Adjutant General to be able to get the records of the soldiers of this war promptly, and not hold those records open for 30 years. The letter of The Adjutant General is rather misleading, not intentionally. The Adjutant General would have you believe by that letter that for 30 years after the Civil War there was a force employed, whereas, as a matter of fact, a force was not placed in the War Department to compile the records until about 30 years after the close of the Civil War.

Let us see what the Secretary of War did with the $4,000,000 that we gave him for the force to furnish the information that the boys who have been discharged want and should have. The Secretary of War took for his own office $277,000, and yet he has his statutory peace-time organization in addition. He gave to the Surgeon General of the United States $335,000. He gave to the Director of Purchase, Storage and Traffic $418,000. He gave to the Chief of Ordnance $680,000. What are these clerks doing? They are down there now doing the work for officers who will not resign, who are here in Washington, as a rule drawing more salary than they could draw at home—not all, by any means, but in the main—preparing work in the Ordnance Department, sending up to Congress this plan and that scheme. There are pending before the Committee on Appropriations estimates for appropriations this year of $117,000,000 for ammunition and for guns in the fortification estimates, when every sensible man in Congress knows that we are going to pay no attention to those estimates, at least to the extent of making any such appropriation, yet they continue to want money in employing clerk hire in working out these schemes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman deny the statement made by The Adjutant General that he has now proportionately less than one-third the number employed on this particular kind of work than were employed upon the same kind of work after the Spanish War?

Mr. GOOD. The Adjutant General is mistaken there in arriving at those figures. He says he takes into consideration the number of clerks in the Pension Department also; and if the gentleman will get his figures he will see that he takes the number that was employed in The Adjutant General's office and in the Pension Department then, but now he says nothing about the 2,900 clerks in the Bureau of War Risk, reduced now to about 2,000, who were employed on compensation, and if he adds these to his list his argument falls to the ground. Again, The Adjutant General fails to give any credit to labor-saving devices which has so materially lessened the number of clerks that the comparison is worthless.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Here is what he says:

I have less than one-third the number of clerks that were employed on the records of the Army demobilized after the Spanish-American War.

Mr. GOOD. I do not know about that. I thought the gentleman had reference to the general work where he makes the comparison with previous years, and in his comparison of previous years he does include the clerks employed in the Pension Office, but he says in his comparison nothing about the 2,900 clerks in the Bureau of War Risk. If we should make a real comparison, let it embrace all the elements involved.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, certainly they are employed on something else, and if they are not employed they should be discharged.

Mr. GOOD. And with them in the Pension Office the comparison is unfair.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am speaking of this particular work.

Mr. GOOD. I want to go on with this and see where the rest of the $4,000,000 was allotted. It has not all been expended by any means. From 14 per cent, outside of The Adjutant General's office, to 65 per cent has been expended. In the Bureau of the Chief of Ordnance, where he allotted $680,000, there remains $340,000 now, and all of $340,000 could be transferred to The Adjutant General's office, and that would give more than half what he is asking for. But he will not do it, and why? Does he want to punish the taxpayer or the discharged soldier, or both?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will yield——

Mr. GOOD. I yield.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Granting for the sake of argument that it is true that the Secretary of War has made certain allotments to other bureaus in large sums, the fact remains that The Adjutant General is now without funds to do this work, and the question presented to the Congress now is whether we want to delay the prompt settlement of soldiers' claims.

Mr. GOOD. The Secretary of War has funds; let him reallot it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This money has been heretofore allotted.

Mr. GOOD. The Secretary of War can change the allotments by simply signing his name to the paper.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman know the condition of the allotments at the present time? I do not think we can afford——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I ask that five minutes more be granted the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think, I will say to the gentleman, that we can afford, merely because the Secretary of War may or may not have allotted too much to some other bureau, to take the position here that in the face of The Adjutant General's positive statement we will take action which will necessarily delay the prompt settlement of soldiers' claims, especially those who are disabled and in need of relief.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will offer an amendment and his side of the House will support it providing that these unexpended balances of the allotment for the Ordnance Department and in the Secretary's office, where he is conducting the publicity work, shall be used to furnish information for the discharged soldiers, I will support that amendment. But what the gentleman wants us to do is to have this Congress—which has complained and complained severely with regard to the fact that in many bureaus of the War Department clerks have been simply falling over each other because of the large number of clerks—he wants us simply to be compelled to pass a resolution here or a bill that will say, "We were mistaken; that the War Department has not enough force to do the work; what we said was not true." I do not intend to place myself in that position, and I do not believe the House does. I have said the War Department has too many clerks. I believed it when I said it. I believe it now. Now, I want to read to the gentleman what Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a Democrat, said before the Committee on the Budget with regard to this very thing:

Mr. TAYLOR. The people of the country think that after the war is over we ought to eliminate some of the urgency temporary employees. There is not one of these department heads that will ever cut out any appreciable number, generally speaking. How can we make them economize and stop duplication? Congress would be economical if the departments would do their share.

Now, Mr. Burks answered—Mr. Burks during the war was a major, I think, in the office of the Chief of Staff, and speaks knowingly——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Not until I finish reading this. Mr. Burks knows what he is talking about, because he spent two years or thereabouts in the office of the War Department, and he said:

Mr. BURKS. I am glad to hear you say that. A month or two ago I was in the Army, and for the last six months I was connected with the General Staff. I will not mention the particular office because I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. TAYLOR. No.

Mr. BURKS. I saw with my own eyes, day after day, hundreds of clerks who were doing nothing.

Mr. TAYLOR. Everybody sees that. There is one building covering some 15 acres of ground, with three stories, and with 45 acres of clerks in that building, and they probably ought most of them to be sent home.

Mr. BURKS. But at the same time it would have been quite impossible for the head of the division I was working with to determine whether I or anybody else in this organization was unnecessary, for the reason that the information coming to the head of the division was not such as to give him any perspective at all on the amount of work being done or the prospects for the future. He had no perspective on this sort of thing; and when he came to make his estimates for the current year, no doubt, he took the estimates of last year, and he said, "Well, now, here, maybe this thing is going to contract a little, and we had better cut out about 15 per cent and let it go at that." That is probably the way he did it. It emphasizes the fact that you can not get rid of these 25,000 clerks here that are superfluous—

Twenty-five thousand superfluous Government clerks in Washington admitted by a man who was in the office of the Chief of Staff of the War Department, an officer of the Army of the United States; and yet we stand here pledged to economy and by our votes propose to say that the Secretary of War shall continue this waste, inefficiency, and extravagance. I shall not vote for it. I will say to the gentleman I will vote, if necessary; and it may be necessary, it may come to that, that we transfer from the Secretary of War, from the ordnance and other bureaus of the War Department, these clerks who are not needed there to the office of The Adjutant General. I base my statement upon the showing of a man who was in the office of Chief of Staff and who knows.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended two minutes in order to enable me to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I am willing to agree with the gentleman that there are 40 per cent of the clerks in every department in this city who have not got anything on God Almighty's earth to do there, but I want to tell the gentleman this: The secret of the trouble is that we are never going to get rid of these surplus, idle clerks until Members of Congress themselves and the employees' organizations of this city quit meddling in the pie. Every time a department tries to get rid of clerks the clerks go first to their Congressman and then to their clerks' organization, and the Congressman and the organization go back down here and force the department to take them back.

There is where the secret of the trouble is. And until Congress takes some action to send these now useless war clerks home they never are going to be sent home. [Applause.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman tell me that any Congressman on this side of the House could go there and get a man put back to work?

Mr. BLANTON. You have more power with the Republican heads of the departments down there than you imagine.

Mr. GOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, before the war we had in Washington employees in the War Department to the number of 2,911. That was on April 6, 1917. How many do you think we have now? We have 21,216 clerks; and the war is over. The President told us on the 11th day of November, 1918, a year and a half ago:

The war thus comes to an end, and on terms that the German command can not renew it.

And yet you have to-day, or did have on December 31, 1919, 21,216 clerks in the War Department, and the Secretary of War sends his threat to Congress, with all that number of clerks—and only about 1,100 will lose their jobs if we do not grant this appropriation—that he will not answer the letters of Members of Congress, and he will not furnish to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and other bureaus the information about the discharged soldiers unless we will consent to be held up and grant him the request which he makes, and which would be an indorsement of all of the inefficient work that has been going on in the War Department that Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado has so pointedly called to the attention of Congress.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MERRITT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3779. An act to authorize the Ozark Forest road-improvement district of Baxter County, Ark., to construct and maintain a bridge across the White River, near Norfolk, Ark.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6863) to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CALDER, and Mr. SHEPPARD as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the committee to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to be allowed to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not doubt but that there are in a number of bureaus and a number of departments of this Government a great many clerks that are not needed. You gentlemen on that side of the aisle are in authority and have a majority, and I assure you I will join hands with you in any effort you may make to cut out useless clerks. But that does not answer the proposition which is now before this committee.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] says that if I will offer an amendment making available all the money which the Secretary of War has allotted to the Chief of Ordnance and to other bureaus in his department for this purpose, he will support it. Gentlemen, there are two reasons why I can not do that and why it would be improper to do that. In the first place, there is no information here—and the gentleman from Iowa said he did not know—as to what parts of these allotments have been expended up to this time.

Mr. GOOD. I have the information.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Even if the gentleman has it, the gentleman is not in a position to say as a Representative—and a responsible Representative in this House—that it would be either proper or feasible to take those allotments, all of them, from those bureaus.

Mr. GOOD. I offered the evidence of Mr. Burke.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As you gentlemen know, the Bureau of Ordnance has or did have hundreds of plants under its control and under its charge. The same is true of other bureaus with reference to work—war work that came over from the war—and everyone realizes that they must have the clerks with which to handle that excess business until it is disposed of. The Director of Purchase and Storage, having hundreds of millions of dollars of Government property to take care of and to dispose of, must have additional clerks for that purpose. And yet the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] would have this Congress take from the Secretary of War and from those bureaus the clerks that he has allotted for the purpose of carrying on that business. But I repeat that does not answer the proposition with which this committee and this House is confronted now, and that is whether we are going to deny to The Adjutant General the money and the clerks which he says are absolutely necessary in order to enable him to furnish not only you, the Representatives of the people, but the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the Auditor of the War Department, the Director of Finance, and the Vocational Board, the information necessary for the prompt settlement of these claims of disabled soldiers and these claims for equipment, and so forth.

If the cry comes hereafter that these claims are not being settled, then the majority of this House must take the responsibility before the country and before these soldiers for their failure to provide the necessary money.

I am as much in favor of economy as the gentleman from Iowa or any other Member of this House, but I do not want to see this House deliberately cripple any activity of this Government which is necessary, and especially an activity which deals with those soldiers who fought so gloriously for their country during the Great War and who have returned home disabled and who need support and compensation from the Government.

Now, the gentleman from Iowa says that the Secretary of War has delivered a threat to the effect that he will not answer your letters. I challenge that statement. The Secretary of War and The Adjutant General stated to the committee frankly that they could not answer your letters; that they could not give you the information as to official records of soldiers unless you gave them the clerks with which to do that. They said that unless this authorization was given they would be powerless to respond to the requests of Representatives. If you gentlemen are willing to take the responsibility of seeing that these claims are delayed and these soldiers do not receive the attention to which they are entitled, then the responsibility is yours.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. GOOD. I will read to the gentleman a paragraph that seems to me contains even more than a veiled threat:

> Unless relief is afforded either by an additional appropriation by the enactment of legislation permitting the use of the $3,500,000 appropriation as suggested it will be necessary for me to direct The Adjutant General to suspend at once all work connected with records of the demobilized Army. This will mean a cessation of all work connected with furnishing information from these records to the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the Federal Board for Vocational Training, the Director of Finance, the Auditor for the War Department, and other public officials of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is exactly what I said to the gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I submit it to any member of this committee if that constitutes a threat. He said that if you do this thing it will be necessary for him to issue these orders. The gentleman from Iowa talks about the number of clerks employed. It may be there are too many clerks, and I have no doubt that there are too many in many of the departments of this Government, but I deny that The Adjutant General has at the present time too many. The Adjutant General has met the requests of Members of Congress, and has answered twenty-five and thirty thousand communications a day to various bureaus of this Government which have to do with soldiers, and his own letter here shows, and it can not be successfully contradicted, that by reason of the efficiency in that office and the approved methods which he has put in, he has now proportionately less than one-third of the number of employees at work upon the records of the members of the demobilized Army than were employed after the Spanish-American War.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to strike out the last three words.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any reason for our getting agitated over this question. I believe that in the hearing The Adjutant General presented a case justifying action by the Congress. The majority of the committee thought otherwise, and certainly I shall offer no amendment to remedy the situation unless the chairman of the committee decides to approve it.

But the situation is this: The request of The Adjutant General would mean an expenditure for the purpose of furnishing information to the War Risk Bureau and to the Zone Finance Officer of $674,000. The gentleman from Iowa thinks it unnecessary.

I will say here that no man on either side of the House works more energetically and more effectively for real economy than does the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]. If he ever errs it is going to be on the side of too much economy in his anxiety to cut down the expenditures as much as possible. But I am satisfied that if he will carefully consider this matter he will see that it is impossible to remedy this situation, unless an amendment is agreed to, as suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee. Upon the hearings it developed that instead of the Secretary of War being able to use any part of the $4,000,000 fund for this work in The Adjutant General's Office, he had made an inquiry, as the records show, of each bureau in the department, and instead of their having funds available for this purpose it is probable that there will be a deficit in some of the other bureaus. Now, on page 280 of the hearings there is set forth the unexpended balance in each bureau.

The gentleman from Iowa referred to the amount which was allotted to the Ordnance Bureau, which he thinks should be given to the office of The Adjutant General if they really need it. The balance left in the Bureau of Ordnance on January 1 was only $276,000, and therefore if the Secretary of War took from that bureau every dollar that it has, it would not enable The Adjutant General to furnish the information that he is required to furnish to the War Risk Bureau and the Zone Finance Officer for more than two months of the five months that remain of this fiscal year.

The gentleman says that money has been spent extravagantly in the War Department, and states that a publicity department has been established, and that money could be saved by abolishing that. He is mistaken about that. It is not an extravagance. Heretofore in each bureau a clerk has been assigned to the duty of giving out information as to the work of each bureau, answering the inquiries of the press and the people. Recently, in order to economize, one man was detailed in the Secretary's office to give out information as to all bureaus, and as a result it is economy instead of extravagance.

Now, the statement made by Mr. Burke, quoted in the budget hearings, is really not relevant to this matter at all. Men will always differ as to the amount and quality of work done by others in the same department, but the fact to-day is that The Adjutant General is confronted with the fact that he must daily furnish, on the average, sometimes as high as 25,000 answers for requests for the service records of men to the War Department, to the zone finance officer, and to the War Risk Bureau, and during a period of three days 67,000 such answers were required.

The gentleman says that with the cessation of war, when the President declared the war was over, conditions had changed, and we ought to reduce these clerks. But when you stop to think of the character of the work that is done in the office of The Adjutant General you will see that that work has not been reduced. None of these requests from the War Risk Bureau, amounting, I have said, to 67,000 in three days, came until after the signing of the armistice, and this is true of requests from the zone finance officer. This work has arisen since demobilization. The requests have so increased as to demand that The Adjutant General assign clerks to this work.

The gentleman says that the clerks now engaged in the active Army should be assigned to this work. Out of this $4,000,000 fund 517 clerks are allotted to The Adjutant General's Office, in addition to four hundred and some odd who are carried on the statutory roll. But where in 1914 we had an Army of less than 100,000 men, to-day we have an Army of 220,000, and if The Adjutant General attempted to reduce this force of 1,000 clerks he never could attend to the work that the active Army now requires. Therefore he must leave those clerks on the work of the active Army and will be unable to answer these requests of the War Risk Bureau and the zone finance office.

If the gentleman from Iowa can find any unused funds and will draw an amendment making it available, I will join with him, because this does not carry an appropriation. It provides for the use of funds out of this same $4,000,000 fund that has been allotted to draft records and to the office that furnishes information to the Attorney General.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman understands, however, that it will be necessary to make subsequent appropriations for the draft records.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes. I was going to add that. I would not leave the impression that this would not mean an additional appropriation later, because this draft work will have to be completed. But it is only a question as to where The Adjutant General can get this money. He has got to have it. He can not take those 450 or 500 clerks away from the work of the active Army. The gentleman thinks he can get it from the Ordnance Bureau. But the record shows, as I have already said, that only $276,000 was left on the 1st of January in the Ordnance Bureau, and if he tried he could not get along without an addition of between $400,000 and $500,000 between now and the end of the year. The responsibility rests upon every man on the floor of this House. It is not a partisan question. It is a question that every Member of this House is interested in, and I hope that if the gentleman from Iowa can not offer or agree to an amendment such as was suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] before the bill is finally disposed of he will frame some amendment diverting from the bureaus he says has surplus funds the money necessary to take care of this important work that is asked for by The Adjutant General's Office.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] if they are willing to accept this as an amendment, in view of the fact that the Secretary has $1,195,000 of the $4,000,000 unexpended:

The Secretary of War shall reallot the appropriation of $4,000,000 for temporary employees in the War Department in such manner as will provide an allotment of $500,000 for the office of The Adjutant General in addition to the allotments already made for that office for the current fiscal year for work in connection with the records of the demobilized army.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is not the amount of money that he says will be necessary.

Mr. GOOD. I know it is not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman knows full well that there is quite a controversy between the Bureau of Efficiency and The Adjutant General with regard to the inefficient methods that are employed in that work. The Committee on Appropriations has gone into that somewhat, but, of course, can not decide the matter. I do feel in a general way that there might be some reduction in the force in The Adjutant General's Office without a reduction in the results. Now, this gives him $500,000 out of almost $1,200,000 unexpended. Of that I will say to the gentleman that $276,000 is in the Ordnance Department, $26,000 in the Motor Transportation Force, and $15,000 in the Chemical Warfare Division. Why in the name of common sense have we now officers, clerks, and men working on chemical warfare, emergency employees, 18 months after the war is over?

The gentleman knows full well that the amendment he proposes to offer is subject to a point of order. I am perfectly willing and will do all I can to give The Adjutant General the money to furnish the information with regard to the records of the demobilized armies, but I do insist that these other bureaus of the War Department shall not be permitted to continue in this course of reckless extravagance. If the Secretary of War will not make a fair and just allotment so as to continue furnishing information most desired, why does the Secretary of War want to deny the discharged soldiers the service they are entitled to? Is that the way he feels toward them, that he would prefer to keep useless and unnecessary employees in other bureaus while he would discharge the clerks and refuse to give any information as to the discharged soldiers?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I should have no objection to agreeing to support the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] if I had any information at all that would cause me to doubt the accuracy of the statement of the Secretary of War that the amounts allotted to these other bureaus would be expended; but now let me call the attention of the gentleman to the facts. Why they should need money to expend in the Division of Chemical Warfare I do not know, but I can readily conceive that they will need that $15,000. I believe there ought to be some chemical warfare organization in the War Department, and that it is necessary to maintain the bureau, just as it is necessary to maintain the Coast Artillery in time of peace. If you do not maintain them in time of peace, you will not have them when war comes. You can not start after you engage in war.

Manifestly we can not reduce the amount in the Surgeon General's Office, and we have no reason for believing that the $145,000 there can be reduced, or the $29,000 in the office of the Chief of Engineers, or the $27,000 in the Signal Office, and plainly we would be taking charge of the administration of the department and allotting money to one bureau without regard to the necessities of others, whereas the two items named in the estimate submitted by the department can be drawn upon.

I do not agree with the gentleman's statement about extravagance in The Adjutant General's Office. I do not think the gentleman from Iowa means to charge that that particular office has been extravagant. The Adjutant General explained to the committee how each day officers were sent through the different divisions of that office to ascertain whether clerks were at work, and there is no proof to justify any charge that there are any unnecessary clerks in The Adjutant General's Office.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he is willing to support this proposition?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa in all frankness that I do not think this House, with the information that was before the committee and with the information that it has, can afford to undertake to absolutely strip the Director of Purchase and Storage, for instance, the Bureau of Ordnance, and other bureaus of the clerks which the Secretary of War feels it is necessary they should have.

Mr. GOOD. That would not be necessary.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If these clerks are not necessary, the gentleman should take the responsibility of offering an amendment, after due investigation, to cut out these clerks. I do not think we ought to rob Peter to pay Paul.

Mr. GOOD. They have now practically $1,200,000 unexpended of this $4,000,000. Now, if we give the Secretary of War discretion to make the reallotment of $500,000 out of that $1,200,000, he will still have $700,000 left of a lump sum over and above his $1,200,000 unexpended for his regular establishment. Nobody can be injured by doing that.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Did I understand the gentleman from Iowa to say the Secretary of War would have $700,000 additional?

Mr. GOOD. After we take out the $500,000 he will still have $700,000 left.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If he should take back from these different bureaus the money he has allotted to them?

Mr. GOOD. No; if he should take the $500,000 and reallot it, he could take it from any bureau that he saw fit and give it to The Adjutant General to do the work for the demobilized Army, and then he would still have a sum lacking $5,000 of $700,000 for the rest of these bureaus in addition to his regular statutory force.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. To do that he would have to close up other bureaus.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But $314,000 of that $1,200,000 is now allotted to The Adjutant General, and the result would be that you would cut him down to about $300,000 for allotments to these other bureaus.

Mr. GOOD. I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOOD: Page 15, after line 4, insert:

"ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE.

"The Secretary of War shall reallot the appropriation of $4,000,000 for temporary employees in the War Department in such manner as will provide an allotment of $500,000 for the office of The Adjutant General in addition to the allotments already made for that office for the current fiscal year for work in connection with records of the demobilized army."

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will not permit us to find out something about this, I will make the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Well, make it, then.

Mr. BLANTON. It is unauthorized by law, is not a deficiency, and is not germane to the bill.

Mr. GOOD. I ask for a ruling.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to discuss it.

Mr. GOOD. We have already discussed it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order against the amendment. Will the gentleman from Iowa cite the Chair to any law authorizing this appropriation?

Mr. BLANTON. I can give the gentleman a little light. Will the Chairman permit me to ask him a question? If so, I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, I make the point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the amendment simply seeks to give authority to employ more clerks in the War Department. Under the organic law creating the War Department authority is given to Congress to make appropriations to provide the clerical assistance necessary to carry on the business in that department. That is all this is. It has been ruled hundreds of times that any amendment seeking to add to the number of clerks in a department is in order, because certainly Congress has the authority to furnish the department with the necessary machinery in the way of clerks to conduct its business. Therefore it seems to me that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee having admitted that it was subject to a point of order——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations does not decide these matters. It is a question for the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard a moment on the point of order. In the first place, the chairman of the committee admits that the amendment is subject to a point of order. In the second place, there is no law authorizing the Secretary of War, after an allotment has been made, to reallot the various sums among the various departments. In the third place, as a matter of fact, there are employed in the War Department to-day so many clerks that every morning the heads of the departments have to tell them to make five minutes' work last all day in order that they may apparently have something to do. Because of that fact, unless I can ask a question I shall insist on the point of order. It is not authorized by law, it is not a deficiency, and it is not germane.

Mr. WALSH. Are those the only grounds upon which the gentleman bases the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I think that is sufficient.

Mr. WALSH. It is certainly authorized by law for Congress to appropriate for this force. Under a former ruling of the Chair it comes within the rule of deficiencies, and certainly it is germane to the provisions of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas states numerous grounds for his point of order against the paragraph in question, but to the mind of the Chair he does not make the point of order that is apparent on the face of the amendment, unless by saying that it is not authorized by law he means that it introduces new legislation.

Mr. BLANTON. If it is unauthorized by law, it is certainly new legislation. If the Chair did not understand that, I make that point now.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not necessarily follow, but if that is what the gentleman means, the Chair sustains the point of order on that ground.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Page 15, after line 4, insert:

"So much of the appropriation of $3,500,000 not necessary for the care and custody of the draft records and for the employment of clerical assistance for the purpose of furnishing to adjutants general of States statements of service of soldiers who served in the war with Germany shall be available for the employment of the clerical assistance necessary for the purpose of furnishing such information from the records of the demobilized army as may be properly furnished to public officials, former soldiers, and other persons entitled to receive it."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment that it is not germane, that it is new legislation, and that it is unauthorized by law.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Has the gentleman from Texas now included all the points of order that he expects to make on this amendment?

Mr. BLANTON. If they are not sufficient, I expect to make some more if necessary. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have no doubt the gentleman will if he gets a cue from the Chair, as he did a moment ago.

Mr. BLANTON. The only difference is that when I get a line from the Chair I am able to know it and act on it, and sometimes the gentleman from Tennessee might not be able to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, I will leave that to the judgment of the House. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, it seems to me, is not subject to a point of order. It is in no sense new legislation. As the Chair intimated a while ago and as I attempted to argue, the House certainly has authority to add to the clerical force of the War Department. That has been held any number of times; in fact, every time the point has ever been raised. The House certainly has authority to give the War Department the clerical assistance it needs. This does not seek to make any new appropriation, but simply provides that out of the appropriation now in the Treasury the Secretary may use such funds as are not needed for other specific work for clerks to do this work.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman, as the law now stands, would the Secretary of War be authorized to do what the gentleman is seeking to have him do?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Secretary of War would not be so authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. Would he be authorized if this amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee should be placed in the bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Undoubtedly he would——

Mr. BLANTON. Then it is new legislation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I could offer an amendment appropriating $674,000 for the purpose of employing additional clerks in The Adjutant General's Office and it would be in order. Instead of doing that, I am asking the adoption of an amendment which authorizes $674,000 already appropriated to be used for the employment of the same clerks.

I respectfully insist that the question asked by the Chair and my answer by no means determines the point of order. This simply provides for the employment of additional clerks. I take it that the Chair would not hold that an amendment offered to this bill providing for additional clerks would be subject to a point of order, and that is all this does, except that it does not make a direct appropriation, but authorizes money already appropriated to be so expended.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Under the law as it now is, could not the Secretary of War detail clerks from one bureau to another?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Unquestionably.

Mr. CANNON. And is there not authority of law to detail clerks from one department to another?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know what the truth is, but it seems to be admitted that clerks are scattered here and there where they are not needed. Is not this a matter for administration?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think so, and that is the whole point of contention. The Secretary of War states that unless this authorization is given he will not have authority to employ clerks and will not have clerks with which he can do this particular work. Somebody has to answer the question and we have to trust somebody. The Secretary of War is on record as saying that he has not in his department clerks that he can put upon this work to continue to perform this service.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I submit that this discussion is not on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is hearing the gentleman from Tennessee, and it seems to the Chair that it is pertinent to the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. The Secretary of War, it is not controverted, has in his department more clerks than he needs, presumably trained clerks. If he has to employ from the outside new clerks they would have to be instructed, and that would be a matter of months. If it be true that the Secretary of War has useless clerks with full power to detail from one bureau to another, with the President having full power to authorize the detail from one department to another, why can not what the gentleman is seeking be accomplished through administration? I am asking this in the greatest good faith. I think this work is all-important, and it seems to me that with proper administration a new arrangement of Cabinet officers might be wise; but as I am not President and as he does not ask me for advice, I merely make the suggestion.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman from Illinois is assuming that the War Department has too many clerks. I am not willing to make that assumption in view of the direct and positive statement made by the Secretary of War that he has not the number of clerks to detail to this work to perform it.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the gentleman from Tennessee know how many clerks are employed in filing and taking care of the draft records?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As I remember it, there are 1,290 clerks employed in this particular service of furnishing information in respect to the official records to the various bureaus and the Members of the House and the Senate.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will state that, in my judgment, whatever number there may be employed there could be very safely transferred to The Adjutant General's Office to do this necessary work, because Gen. Crowder, when the question was put to him as to what should be done with the draft records—that is, the questionnaires—stated they could be disposed of in one of three ways.

They could be left in the various precincts and counties or they could be turned over to the adjutants general of the various States, or they could be sent to the War Department. The War Department—for some reason never explained to me, and I can see no earthly sense in it—ordered those draft records shipped here to Washington, and no doubt they have hundreds of clerks down there working on that useless task.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. In substance I received a letter from some one, I do not recollect whom, informing me that if I would request the Secretary of War, he would send to me the names of everyone in my district who was enlisted for the draft and everybody who was enlisted in the Army, for my use. I just put that advice in the wastebasket.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That does not involve the use of any great number of clerks, because, as I understand it, these are photostatic copies of the various records.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Did I understand correctly a moment ago that it was possible to transfer clerks from, we will say, for illustration, the Navy Department over to the War Department?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the Executive has the authority to do that. Of course, the Secretary of the Navy could not do it.

Mr. BEGG. But there is authority for the transfer?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Under the Overman Act; yes.

Mr. BEGG. The head of one of the departments in the War Risk Insurance Bureau stated a few weeks ago that he had 400 clerks he tried to fire or tried to find somebody to take, and he was unable to do either. He could not find anybody to take them and he could not find any authority to discharge them. He had nothing for them to do. Would it not be economical and good business policy to absorb some of the surplus?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Suppose they were transferred, from what are they going to be paid? That is just what is wanted. It is desired to give the War Department funds to pay for these clerks.

Mr. BEGG. We could very easily do that, if it was not for the gentleman's own side.

Mr. DENISON. They could be paid from the same fund they are paid from now.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They are discharging clerks in the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr UPSHAW I simply want to ask the gentleman if it is true that The Adjutant General wants more clerks to do the work needed or wants more money to pay those he has?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. He wishes funds to pay those he already has.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this discussion is not on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, by way of a new section, providing that—so much of the appropriation of $3,500,000 not necessary for the care and custody of the draft records and for the employment of clerical assistance for the purpose of furnishing to adjutants general of States statements of service of soldiers who served in the war with Germany shall be available for the employment of the clerical assistance necessary for the purpose of furnishing such information from the records of the demobilized army as may be properly furnished to public officials, former soldiers, and other persons entitled to receive it.

It appears from the language of this amendment that an appropriation of three and a half million dollars was heretofore made for a specific purpose and that it is now desired that the Secretary of War may use it for a different purpose.

It seems to the Chair that the entire purpose of the amendment is to authorize the Secretary of War to do something which, without the amendment, he has not authority to do. If such is the effect of the proposed amendment, it is in contravention of the rule. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BANKHEAD: Page 15, after line 4, add the following: "For additional clerical assistance in the Office of The Adjutant General, $674,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is new legislation, it is not authorized by law, and not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman briefly.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be heard for two minutes on the merits of the proposition.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee and Mr. BANKHEAD. I object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not do that.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, clearly it is new legislation, clearly it is unauthorized by law, clearly it is not germane to this deficiency bill, and I submit it without argument.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the Chair desire to hear from me on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be very glad to hear the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, we are making an appropriation here under this specific title for the War Department. It is true there is no specific item in this section to which this is offered as an amendment for the office of The Adjutant General. As I understand it, we are appropriating here for deficiencies in all branches of the Government service, including the War Department. This is a specific amendment for additional clerical assistance in the office of The Adjutant General of the Army, which certainly comes under the War Department service. Under the ruling heretofore made by the Chair on the question of what constitutes a deficiency I do not think it is necessary to discuss that phase of the point of order. Congress certainly has authority to appropriate money for clerical assistance in any branch of the War Department of the United States under general law, and this is simply adding an item to the general deficiency as represented here as needed by the argument which has preceded the offering of the amendment and in the hearings before the committee and by the letter from the Secretary of War and The Adjutant General, which are already of evidence in the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. In just a moment. Certainly it is germane to an appropriation for the War Department. Because, forsooth, the committee did not include any particular item or fixed item for the office of The Adjutant General of the Army does not under the rule preclude the offering of the amendment for a purpose of that sort. I will now be glad to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that the amendment which he offers is germane to the paragraph that is under consideration?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, I hope it is; that is the argument I am making.

Mr. WALSH. Providing for the Aqueduct Bridge under the Engineer Department?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am adding a separate and distinct item.

Mr. WALSH. But he is offering an amendment to the paragraph under consideration.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If it makes any difference, I will offer it as a new section. It does not seem to me that goes to the merit of the argument. I do not think that changes——

Mr. WALSH. It will not cure it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The philosophy of the argument at all. If it is good, it is good as an amendment just as in a separate paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. It can not be offered as a germane amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is all I desire to say on the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard? If not, the Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] offers an amendment, on page 15, after line 4, as a new paragraph, providing for additional clerical assistance in the office of The Adjutant General. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] makes the point of order that it is new legislation, that it is not provided for by law, that it is not a deficiency, and that it is not germane.

Mr. BLANTON. And not germane to the preceding paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. As to the first three contentions of the gentleman from Texas, the Chair believes that the proposed amendment is not new legislation, that it is for a deficiency, and that it is for a purpose authorized by existing law.

The question of germaneness remains and is, in the opinion of the Chair, the sole and controlling question in connection with this amendment. Some 40 years ago, Mr. Carlisle, later an honored Speaker of this House, when occupying this chair as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, made a ruling on the subject of germaneness which has been quite generally followed since that time. I quote briefly from the ruling of Mr. Carlisle, found in Fifth Hinds' Precedents, 5825, where he said:

> While a committee may report a bill embracing different subjects, it is not in order during consideration in the House to introduce a new subject by way of amendment.

This is, of course, only an application of the rule as it now exists that no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of an amendment. He further said:

> The rule does not prohibit a committee reporting a bill from embracing in it as many different subjects as it may choose; but after the bill has been reported to the House no different subject can be introduced into it by amendment. When, therefore, it is objected that a proposed amendment is not in order because it is not germane, the meaning of the objection is simply that it—the proposed amendment—is a motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration.

It is not always easy to determine just what is a new subject. Does the proposed amendment introduce a subject different from that under consideration? Let us examine the context of the bill. The preceding section is under the head of "War Department, Engineer Department," and provides for an additional appropriation for the Aqueduct Bridge. The following item is also under the head of "War Department for public buildings and grounds." There is no reference in the bill anywhere to The Adjutant General's Office and no provision is made for it in this bill, so far as the Chair is able to determine. It would seem to be the contention of the gentleman from Alabama that because the committee could have brought in an item on this bill providing for an appropriation, therefore any Member on the floor of the House has the same right to bring in the same item by way of amendment.

The present occupant of the chair can not bring himself into accord with this argument. I agree with the ruling of Mr. Carlisle that a committee may bring in a bill containing any number of items entirely in order for the committee to bring in, but which an individual on the floor of the House can not offer by way of amendment. One reason for this is that the committee holds hearings and considers the evidence pro and con on such matters as may be brought to the attention of the committee by the estimates in the regular way. After considering the estimates the committee makes up its bill. The bill is reported to the House, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and printed for the information of the Members. Under the rules of the House Members have a right to assume upon examining the bill that it contains the matters that are going to be considered when the bill is brought before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration, and that no different subject will be considered. In order to protect the Members in this right the rules prescribe that no new subject shall be brought in under color of an amendment.

It seems to the Chair that, in order to insure orderly procedure in the transaction of the business of the House, to protect Members against surprise by reason of new subjects being brought in under color of amendments which have not received the consideration of any committee and which other Members have not had an opportunity to examine, questions of germaneness should be somewhat strictly construed.

The Chair quotes from a ruling made by Chairman John J. Fitzgerald, in which he quotes from and follows the ruling of Mr. Carlisle. Chairman Fitzgerald said:

> The object of the rule requiring amendments to be germane—and such a rule has been adopted in practically every legislative body in the United States—is in the interest of orderly legislation. Its purpose is to prevent hasty and ill-considered legislation, to prevent propositions being presented for the consideration of the body which might not reasonably be anticipated, and for which the body might not be properly prepared.

It seems to the Chair that the reasoning of Chairman Fitzgerald is preeminently sound, and the precedent made by him one to be followed in the interest of orderly legislation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the Chair indulge me a moment in order that we may have a clear understanding of the interpretation? Is the Chair of the opinion that an amendment could be offered from the floor by the committee covering this subject, or that it would have to be reported by the committee in the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. A member of the committee on the floor, in the view of the Chair, would have no greater privilege in this regard than any other Member of the House. The committee in reporting out a bill, however, could bring in many propositions that might not be in order if presented by a Member on the floor of the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then, according to that interpretation, no item except that which is specifically brought in in the bill, under the head of the War Department, would be germane?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not accept the interpretation of the gentleman, but does hold that an item which introduces a new subject would not be in order if presented by a Member from the floor. Believing the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama to be one that would introduce a subject different from that under consideration, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. To move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the debate on yesterday relating to the Secretary of the Treasury, and his action in the Speedway Hospital matter, a great deal of material was put into the RECORD, so much material indeed that it is hard to pick out the wheat from the chaff. To separate the real issue from the extraneous matter.

I desire to include as a part of my remarks certain extracts from the original act of authorization, and the contract which was filed on yesterday so as to direct the attention of anyone who may be interested in arriving at the right of this controversy, to the very crux of the matter. I wish to include in my remarks, and I ask unanimous consent that this may be done, subsections a and b, of the original act, No. 326, Sixty-fifth Congress. These subsections give the authorization in detail, and fix the limit of $3,000,000 upon the contract. In subsection a the Secretary of the Treasury is empowered to take over certain land and execute a contract for the construction of certain hospital buildings, at a total limit of cost not to exceed $3,000,000. In subsection b it is further provided that whatever he may do in respect to carrying into effect the authorization of subsection a, he must keep within the limits of cost authorized in that subsection.

Juxtaposition with these subsections I desire to include further, as a part of my remarks, section 9 of the contract that was introduced on yesterday by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the way indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Following are subsections a and b:

a. At Cook County, Ill., by taking over the land and executing the contract for the construction thereon of hospital buildings specified therein of a certain proposed contract executed by the Shank Co., August 31, 1918, and in accordance with such contract and the plans and specifications identified in connection therewith August 31, 1918, by the signature and initials of Brig. Gen. R. C. Marshall, jr., Construction Division Quartermaster Department, United States Army, by Lieut. Col. C. C. Wright, and the Shank Co., by George H. Shank, president, at the cost stated therein, namely, $2,500,000, with such changes in said plans and specifications as may be required by the Secretary of the Treasury to adapt said specified buildings to the needs and purposes of the Public Health Service, at a total limit of cost not to exceed $3,000,000.

b. In carrying the foregoing authorization into effect, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to execute the contract with the Shank Co. hereinbefore specified, with such verbal changes as are made necessary by a change in the contracting officers, and to assume all obligations in said contract contained, and to purchase materials and labor in the open market, or otherwise, and to employ laborers and mechanics for the construction of such buildings and their equipment as in his judgment shall best meet the public exigencies, within the limits of cost herein authorized.

The following is section 9 of the contract:

9. It is understood that the contract price hereof is based upon well-established union scales of wages for labor as of August 26, 1918, and upon the prices for materials which the owner agrees to advise the contracting officer of through the delivery to his representative upon the ground, within 15 days from the date hereof, of a complete schedule of all materials to be used in the construction of said buildings and structures and the price at which the same are contracted for, together with such other data as the contracting officer may require in connection therewith at the time, and the delivery of such schedules shall be of the essence of the agreement relating to said materials contained in this clause. Should the owner during the course of the construction of said buildings and structures be required by any increase in such union wage scales or in the market price of such materials to expend more money for the completion of said buildings and structures than that upon which its present contract price is based, then it shall first notify the contracting officer of such fact and, upon 24 hours' notice to the owner, the contracting officer may from time to time elect to furnish and furnish such materials to the owner in quantities provided for in the plans and specifications, in which event there shall be deducted by the contracting officer from the contract price hereof a sum equal to the total value of any such materials so furnished to the owner based upon the prices set forth in said schedule. In the event the contracting officer does not within 24 hours after the receipt of such notice of increased cost of materials elect to furnish and within a reasonable time furnish the same, then the owner shall proceed to purchase such necessary materials, and the amount of such increase so required to be paid by the owner shall be reimbursed to the owner by the Government in addition to the contract price herein named. All savings made by the owner through the purchase of materials so required in the construction of said buildings and structures at prices less than those appearing in the schedule shall be credited upon the contract price hereof, and the contracting officer shall deduct from any sums due the owner an amount equal to all such savings. After approval by the contracting officer of increases in wages to laborers, the owner shall be reimbursed in the amount necessarily paid by it on account of increased wages. In case any controversy shall arise hereunder as to the amount of such increase in the cost of labor or of materials, then such amount, if any, shall be determined by the contracting officer. The owner shall not, however, make any departure from the standard rate of wages being paid in that locality without the prior consent of the contracting officer and shall not attempt to secure labor at the expense of other Government work.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Now, Mr. Chairman, if there is any point to the criticism that was leveled on yesterday at the Secretary of the Treasury, it was that he had failed, either contumaciously or ignorantly, to do something which the Congress had authorized him to do. Congress authorized him to enter into a contract in relation to the construction of this Speedway Hospital, and expressly fixed the limit of his authority in that respect to an expenditure not to exceed $3,000,000. See subsections a and b. If the Secretary of the Treasury had been presented with and asked to sign a sufficient contract, in conformity with subsections a and b, and he had refused to sign such a contract, then the Secretary of the Treasury would be properly amenable to the criticism that has been directed against him by the gentleman from South Dakota and the gentleman from Iowa. As the matter stands, he is entitled to an apology from these gentlemen. On the other hand, if the Secretary of the Treasury has refused to sign a contract imposing upon the Government a contract obligation in excess of the cost limit of $3,000,000, then, so far from being a proper subject of criticism, he deserves to receive and should receive the applause and approbation of the Members on both sides of the Chamber, as a faithful and honorable public servant, worthy of our plaudits. [Applause.]

I have put these citations into the RECORD to enable the Members on both sides of the Chamber—Democrats and Republicans alike—to arrive at the merits of this controversy, relieved of all encumbering and extraneous matter.

The burden of the indictment in this matter was upon the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], and in the effort to carry that burden he introduced into the RECORD on yesterday a contract which he invited the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to cause the Secretary to sign, should the Secretary of the Treasury without further authorization sign that contract, containing section 9 providing for an increase in the cost limit of the authorization to an indefinite extent that in the result might amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars, he ought to be impeached. [Applause.] I make that broad statement, because that section 9, of that contract boldly and unblushingly provides for a liability to the contractor, that as stated, may be greatly in excess of the definitely prescribed cost limit of $3,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I ask for two minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. So far from undertaking to complete the contract with relation to the hospital within the original cost limit of $3,000,000, the contractor submits a contract under which, should it be signed by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Government has to pay whatever amount may be added to the original cost limit by the expanding cost of labor and materials. Section 9 as cited, is precisely to that effect. So, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Dakota has failed to make good his charge of ignorance, or contumacy. No contract conforming to the authorization has been presented to the Secretary of the Treasury. He has very properly refused to sign any other. If it is desired that he should sign a contract carrying a greater cost limit, a bill or joint resolution to that effect should be introduced and passed. To the present time the attitude of the Secretary of the Treasury has been that of a high-minded, honorable public servant, and it deserves the fullest degree of commendation, not criticism. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

The appropriation contained in section 4 of the act approved December 5, 1919, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901, and for other purposes," shall be paid one-half out of the Treasury of the United States and one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for 10 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. VARE. On the subject of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the chairman a question, if I may, on that.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I want to ask the chairman one question, if I may?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. I wanted to ask the chairman what effect the passage of this paragraph would have upon the action of this House, taken recently, in passing a bill doing away with the old half-and-half system?

Mr. GOOD. It would save the United States about $14,000 a year.

Mr. BLANTON. What effect would that have on the bill that the House passed? I mean the bill that the House recently passed and sent to the Senate?

Mr. GOOD. It does not affect that at all. There was a mistake in the bill that was passed some time ago and became a law in regard to the Metropolitan police. It provided that the park police, who are under the control of the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, where the salaries have been paid one-half out of the Treasury of the United States and one-half out of the District revenues, should all be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. This provides that one-half should be paid, as formerly, out of the District revenues.

Mr. BLANTON. If we do not pass this paragraph, and if the bill passed by the House some time ago doing away with the half-and-half system is passed by the Senate and becomes a law, then will the police be paid in accordance with this paragraph?

Mr. GOOD. No; because the law provides specifically that the total salary of these men shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. Why should the police of Washington be paid half out of the money of the people of the United States?

Mr. GOOD. That is the law now. But if we do not adopt this the park policemen will be paid wholly out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. All?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And it will not be changed by this bill that we have passed, which the House passed? The gentleman knows what was in that bill doing away with the half-and-half system?

Mr. GOOD. I can not tell the gentleman what will be in the law when it is finally enacted.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the policemen will be paid half and half?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This only makes provision for the present year.

Mr. BLANTON. In that case, Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my reservation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE], does the gentleman desire to discuss some item in the bill?

Mr. VARE. I desire to discuss the bill generally, and in particular one item.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, the second general deficiency bill now pending before this body carries a total appropriation of $88,684,342.14, and the report of the committee indicates that there has been a reduction in round figures of $29,000,000.

No Member of this House is more willing to give the committee credit for economy than I am. I am in favor as a general policy of carrying out that principle, namely, that the funds of the Public Treasury shall be conserved. But in order to reduce this bill by $29,000,000 I can not overlook the fact that in reaching that figure there has been eliminated, or rather there has been withheld from this bill, an appropriation of $9,300,000 requested by the Secretary of the Navy. In his letter to the Speaker of the House under date of January 21 the Secretary of the Navy includes recommendations from Admiral Coontz, Admiral Taylor, Admiral Griffin, and Admiral Parks showing the extreme importance of making this appropriation at this time.

This House last year included these very identical items. The distinguished chairman of this committee, Mr. GOOD, stood on the floor of this House and urged their adoption, and the items were placed in the bill, but were taken out by the Senate.

As a Member representing a great navy-yard district, I have seen these battleships returned from military service, and I have seen them anchored in the reserve basin at the Philadelphia Navy Yard. They are there now. The great battleship named in honor of the State of Connecticut, which the chairman now presiding over the committee so well represents, is in the reserve dock. If a call were issued to-morrow, she could not move, not because of a shortage of the crew but because she has been disabled, and she has been lying there disabled for the last eight months. The battleship named in honor of the State of Louisiana is there, and she is disabled. Likewise the battleships Michigan, Minnesota, Kansas, and New Hampshire, and more than 100 others, including destroyers and ships of the first class.

In addition to the ships now in commission, during the coming fiscal year 17 dreadnoughts, 13 predreadnoughts, 8 armored cruisers, 18 protected cruisers, and other ships of smaller classes will be placed into service. It will be necessary to keep them in fighting condition. The appropriation for repair of vessels is one absolutely necessary for the proper maintenance of the Navy as a fighting machine. It is imperative that our Navy be kept in first-class condition at all times. Any depreciation impairs its potential strength and our national safety.

We hear much of the charges that the Navy was not in proper condition to enter the war zone when the United States declared war on Germany. If that charge be true and it is attested to by one of the foremost admirals in the Navy, Admiral Sims, the condition resulted from such a lack of foresight in the Navy Department as we would demonstrate here in Congress to-day if we fail to pass the amendments to be offered here. Where is the Member of this House who has talked about preparedness year after year? Where is the man who will stand up here and say that it is good economy to allow these valuable ships to be in a state of deterioration in the face of the highest recommendation that we have to have the same repaired?

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. VARE. I regret that I can not yield at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. VARE. The Philadelphia Inquirer of a recent date, speaking on the policy of economy, said as follows:

A MISTAKEN PIECE OF ECONOMY.

Economy is a word above all others for Congress to heed just now, but false economy is too often extravagance. The refusal of the Appropriations Committee of the House to sanction the request of the Navy Department for $10,000,000 for repairs to ships is an example of this. Were there no other items that could be cut instead?

A fleet on paper is no fleet at all. To lay up capital ships for lack of repairs, to discharge thousands of skilled workmen on whose labors the efficiency of the Navy depends, is to strike at a vital spot in the national means of defense.

Cutting the coat to fit the cloth need not be a bungling job.

The Navy has found it difficult to get enlisted men to serve who are skilled in trades. This has contributed to the poor condition of the ships in many cases. With the proposed increase in pay already passed by the House, I believe this will be overcome. It does not aid the present condition, however. The ships of the Navy are not in condition to meet any foe in their full strength. Unless they are in such condition as to be able to enter a battle when supplied with a crew of fighting strength our full measure of national protection is reduced.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am extremely interested in a proper policy of economy. I consulted the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee to-day in the presence of Admiral Taylor, and they both told me that unless this appropriation is made now it will have to be made later this year. So where, therefore, does the economy come in? It seems to me that this is a good business proposition. The appropriation ought not to be made next year. It ought to be made now, so these ships can be placed in proper repair. My friend, the distinguished Republican leader from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], a short time ago in the city of Philadelphia made the statement before 400 or 500 of our distinguished citizens that this naval appropriation had to be cut. There was no testimony there at that time. He had not visited the Philadelphia Navy Yard. He had not seen these great battleships tied up there for want of sufficient repairs. When the proper page of this bill is reached the following amendments will be offered to make proper provision.

On page 18, after line 20, insert the following:

Maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks: For general maintenance of yards and docks, including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $2,500,000.

On page 20, after line 2, insert the following:

Bureau of Construction and Repair: For preservation and completion of vessels on stocks and in ordinary, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $3,250,000.

On page 20, after line 2, insert the following:

BUREAU OF STEAM ENGINEERING.

Engineering: For repairs, preservation, and renewal of machinery, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $2,500,000.

On page 20, after line 2, insert the following:

Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts: For fuel; the removal and transportation of ashes and garbage from ships of war, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $1,050,000. The limitation in expenditures from the appropriation, "Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, fiscal year 1920," for pay of classified employees is increased by the sum of $800,000.

The following communication from the Secretary of the Navy to the Speaker of the House emphasizes the need of these appropriations:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 21, 1920.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The serious situation with reference to the military efficiency of the Navy impels me to write earnestly inviting the attention of Congress to the necessity of the deficiency appropriation of $10,314,962.18, requested by me in my letter to you of the 18th day of December, 1919, and which passed the House last summer, but which failed of passage in the Senate. The conditions are much more serious now than they were when presented at that time and are set forth fully in the accompanying letters from the chiefs of the Bureaus of Operations, Construction and Repair, Steam Engineering, and Yards and Docks. It will be seen from these letters that unless an appropriation is available, there will be a serious loss of the military efficiency of the Navy. These officers whose letters I am inclosing are charged with the responsibility of keeping the fleet in readiness for any emergency that may occur and their letters show the necessity for this appropriation. I need not say to you that the necessity of discharging 13,900 skilled artisans, whose service to the Navy in the war was one of the important factors of its efficiency, would be a matter of grave concern and that without this appropriation it will be my painful duty to discharge these men because there will be no funds to pay them. I am sure that the Congress, when they read these letters from the naval officers who have given this matter great study, will agree with me that this is a matter of immediate importance and prompt action will be taken.

Sincerely, yours, JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF NAVAL OPERATIONS,
Washington.

From: Chief of Naval Operations.
To: Secretary of the Navy.
Subject: Essential deficiency funds.

1. There are transmitted herewith letters from the chiefs of the Bureaus of Construction and Repair, Steam Engineering, and Yards and Docks, setting forth the urgent need for additional funds with which to carry on the essential maintenance work of the Navy.

2. The present unsettled conditions throughout the world demand that the ships of the Navy be kept in efficient condition for action. The number of ships now capable of operating effectively in case of emergency is dangerously small. This condition is a direct result of a lack of funds with which to prosecute vigorously the required repair work on vessels whose material fitness has been lowered through the excessive and continuous demands of war service.

3. Although every effort has been made to reduce maintenance charges by disposing as rapidly as practicable of the vast accumulation of shipping that it was imperative to incorporate into the Navy to meet the needs of a wholly unprecedented war, it has not been possible to adjust to the money available the work necessary on the remaining vessels required for service, as might have been done in a period of peace. The situation, therefore, which now confronts the Navy, in case additional funds are not made available by February, is a reduction of the number of ships which can be made promptly available for operation to a point which will seriously compromise our national security, and also a marked reduction of the force of civilian employees now at work in our navy yards. An estimate of the number of artisans, mechanics, and other yard employees involved in such a reduction has been made and amounts to 13,900 men.

4. This situation was clearly foreseen, as is indicated by the steps taken last August to secure an extension of the maintenance appropriations. It has now developed to the point where further delay in securing additional funds will affect disastrously both the material efficiency of the fighting forces of the Navy and also, in so doing, the valuable work organizations of thousands of skilled mechanics now employed in our navy yards.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,
Washington, January 3, 1920.

To: The Secretary of the Navy.
Subject: Funds.

1. In connection with the item of $3,250,000 additional under the appropriation "Construction and repair of vessels, 1920," contained in the estimates forwarded with letter of the Secretary of the Navy dated December 16, 1919, the bureau notes that the allotments made under this appropriation for the months of July and August were based on a table of expenditures for the fiscal year, drawn up to provide for continuing the work under the appropriation throughout the year without exceeding the amount appropriated—$31,000,000.

2. It appeared to the department early in the fiscal year that the progress being made with work on vessels of the fleet was not sufficiently rapid to meet the requirements of the military situation, and in letter of the Secretary of the Navy of August 14, 1919, this bureau was instructed to increase its monthly allotments to navy yards so as to permit proceeding with the urgent work on naval vessels as rapidly as practicable without a material increase in the force, it being understood that such increase in the allotments would necessitate incurring a deficiency or making a marked reduction in expenditures in the latter part of the fiscal year.

3. In accordance with these instructions, allotments in excess of the amounts estimated as practicable without exceeding the appropriation have been made, and unless additional funds are provided it will be necessary by about the end of January to reduce greatly the allotments to navy yards if a deficiency is to be avoided. The bureau's estimates indicate that it will be practicable from the funds remaining available at the end of January under the present appropriation to provide during the last five months of the fiscal year for the current charges incidental to the operation of the fleet, the payment of classified force and other charges that are necessary to prevent interruption of new building work, the charges necessary to prevent deterioration of vessels, and a small amount to cover emergency work on vessels of the fleet, but it will be necessary to stop all general overhaul.

4. In connection with the overhaul of vessels of the fleet, it is noted that there is a large accumulation of work resulting from two causes—first, the necessity for the postponing during the continuance of hostilities of work which was not of immediate urgency, and, second, the necessity for undertaking on the more modern vessels of changes the necessity for which was made evident or emphasized by experience gained during the war. While the deterioration and reduction in military efficiency that results from postponing work of this character can be accepted during hostilities when keeping the vessel in condition for immediate service is of vital importance, the undue postponement of work under peace conditions puts the Navy of the United States at a disadvantage as compared with other navies and should be accepted only when the reasons for postponement are extremely urgent.

5. A general statement of the condition of work on the principal types of vessels of the fleet and the progress possible with and without additional funds is given below:

(a) Dreadnoughts: Of the 15 dreadnoughts actually in service the overhaul on 2 has been completed, the overhaul on 2 can be completed and 1 about half completed from the funds now available, the overhaul of 4 has been well advanced and could have been completed from the funds available had it not been found necessary to withdraw them from the navy yards before all work had been accomplished, and no work can be done on the remaining 6. With the additional funds work can proceed on all these vessels that can be made available.

(b) Predreadnoughts: Of the 13 predreadnoughts which it is expected to keep in condition for active service, but without undertaking changes necessary to keep them strictly up to date in a military sense, the work on 3 has been partly advanced, but in general the work has not yet been started, due to concentrating on more modern vessels. With the additional funds it will be practicable to proceed with the overhaul of all these vessels, but without the additional funds work will have to stop.

(c) Armored cruisers: Of the eight armored cruisers which it is expected to keep in condition for active service, the work on one has been completed. Practically nothing has been done on the other seven, and little, if any, work can be undertaken unless additional funds are provided.

(d) Destroyers and destroyer tenders: As it is contemplated to keep only about half of the total number of destroyers in active service with the fleet at any one time, it is the bureau's intention to undertake the changes necessary to improve the military efficiency of these vessels on those not with the fleet, replacing the vessels with the fleet in rotation. With the additional funds the work on a certain number of these vessels could be completed, but unless additional funds are provided no work of this nature can be undertaken. The expenditures for the maintenance of these vessels, owing to the large number, 288, involves a considerable sum, although the expenditure per vessel is small. Owing to the limited number of destroyer tenders available, it is very important that they be kept in efficient condition, and practically no work can be done on these vessels unless additional funds are provided.

(e) Submarines and submarine tenders: The conditions affecting the work on submarines and submarine tenders are in general the same as those affecting the work on destroyers and destroyer tenders.

(f) Fuel and supply ships: Under present conditions and with the number of vessels available, the overhaul of these vessels so as to place them in efficient condition is of great importance. Little work other than routine docking can be undertaken unless additional funds are provided.

(g) Miscellaneous vessels of the train: Two of the hospital ships and 12 of the mine sweepers required for fleet operations should be placed in efficient condition. Rather extensive repairs to mine sweepers are necessitated by the work in connection with the removal of the North Sea barrage. The work on the mine sweepers required for immediate service can be undertaken from the funds now available, but no work can be undertaken on the remaining vessels of this class.

(h) Cruisers, gunboats, and miscellaneous vessels not operating with the fleet: Unless additional funds are provided, no work other than absolutely necessary maintenance work can be undertaken on these vessels.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF STEAM ENGINEERING,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1920.

From: Bureau of Steam Engineering.
To: The Secretary of the Navy.
Subject: Deficiency appropriation.

1. At the beginning of the fiscal year a tentative monthly allotment was made of funds for labor at navy yards chargeable to appropriation "Engineering," this allotment providing for a gradual reduction in the force employed, in order to keep expenditures within the appropriation. Following representations of the Chief of Naval Operations as to the necessity for completing as quickly as possible the repairs to capital and other ships either undergoing or awaiting repair, the department on August 14, 1919, directed the bureau to increase its monthly allotments for labor with a view to expediting repairs, but without a material increase in the number of men employed. This continued until about December 1, 1919, when the provision of $2,500,000 for the Bureau of Steam Engineering as contained in the deficiency bill was stricken out in the Senate.

2. Up to this time allotments had been made on the basis of an expenditure of $32,500,000 per annum instead of $30,000,000, but the failure of the Senate to agree to the deficiency appropriation of $2,500,000 made necessary a further reduction in allotments to yards for labor which, if continued, would still further delay work on ships under repair by reason of the reduction in the number of employees. Upon presentation of the situation the department, under date of December 4, 1919, authorized the bureau to proceed on the assumption that the original appropriation of $30,000,000 would be increased by $2,500,000, and allotments are being made accordingly. If this rate is continued and the deficiency requested is not granted, it will be necessary to make a large reduction in the number of employees paid from this appropriation, as the expenditures for the first half of the year have exceeded the pro rata allotment by $1,250,000.

3. The necessity for the additional appropriation arises from the fact that Congress appropriated only $30,000,000 instead of $35,000,000 requested in the estimates of the bureau, which were very carefully made on the basis of the fleet to be maintained and the general condition of the machinery. Subsequent inspection of the ships by the Board of Inspection and Survey has in almost every case shown the necessity for greater repairs than were contemplated when the estimates were prepared.

4. As a result of the reduced appropriation, it has not been possible to proceed with repairs as expeditiously as it was desired, and thus far only five battleships have been overhauled and returned to service, some without the complete accomplishment of some important fire-control work, the necessity for which had been demonstrated from experience gained during the war.

5. Of the remaining battleships in full commission 14 are now at navy yards, some under repair and others awaiting their turn to be taken up when funds are available.

6. One armored cruiser has been repaired and returned to service, another is under repair, and six others are at navy yards awaiting their turn, the only work in progress on them being that necessary for care and preservation.

7. The condition with respect to cruisers and destroyers is similar to that of the armored cruisers, except that in the case of destroyers it is possible to substitute new ones as personnel becomes available and put those in need of repairs in reserve or out of commission, with the repairs held up indefinitely, a condition which is very undesirable and which leads to further deterioration.

8. Work on destroyer and submarine tenders and on vessels of the train is necessarily subordinated to that on capital ships, but with the large number of destroyers and submarines operating with the fleet it is more than ever necessary that the tenders should be in condition, because their presence assists materially in keeping down the cost of repairs, and estimates for this class of vessels were made with this in view. Unless the tenders are available, the volume of repairs to be done at navy yards is automatically increased.

9. The reduced condition of the enlisted personnel, especially in the artificer branch, has made it necessary to do in navy yards much overhauling and repair work which has heretofore always been done by the ship's mechanics and has served to correspondingly increase the expenditure for repairs.

10. Even if the appropriation requested is granted it will not be possible to complete the repairs now in sight during the fiscal year; much of the work must extend well into the next year and the vessels be unavailable for that period.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS,
Washington, D. C., January 15, 1920.

From: Bureau of Yards and Docks.
To: Secretary of the Navy.
Subject: Deficiency estimates.

1. In connection with the item of $2,500,000 additional under appropriation "Maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks," in the supplemental estimate of appropriations required by the Navy Department and Naval Establishment for the service of the current fiscal year, submitted to the Speaker of the House December 15, 1919 (H. Doc. 532), the bureau submits for consideration the following statement of facts:

Estimates and appropriation for maintenance, 1920.

Estimated by bureau before signing of armistice	$15,000,000
Estimated by bureau subsequent to signing of armistice	12,500,000
Estimated later by bureau (hearings, Dec. 3, 1918)	10,000,000
Recommended by Secretary Dec. 30, 1918	7,500,000
Appropriated by Congress July 11, 1919	7,500,000
Deficiency estimate Aug. 23, 1919 (H. Doc. 204, 66th Cong., 1st sess.)	5,000,000

NOTE.—In H. R. 9205, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session, the House passed an item appropriating $2,500,000, which was stricken out in the Senate. In conference the House receded, and the appropriation was therefore not made.

ALLOTMENTS AND EXPENDITURES.

At the beginning of the fiscal year there were 90 activities for which allotments were required. Upon the theory that some of these would be discontinued during the year, or materially reduced, it was decided to allot approximately 55 per cent of the appropriation for the first half of the year, leaving 45 per cent for allotment during the second half. Accordingly the bureau allotted $4,198,095.05 (55.9 per cent) for the first six months. These allotments were made in three installments, the first for the month of July, the second for the months of August and September, and the third for the months of October, November, and December.

The bureau received many reports that the allotments made would be insufficient, and requests were made for additional funds. Such requests were in most cases necessarily denied; some of the more urgent, which showed real emergencies, were allowed in part, which brought the allotments up to 55.9 per cent.

Reports of actual expenditures and obligations during the first five months of the year showed that the allotments made by the bureau had been, in many cases, overexpended, or overobligated. These reports indicated that expenditures during the first six months would be $4,598,172.96, as against $4,198,095.05 allotted. It was expected that $3,425,000 (45 per cent of the appropriation) would be available for allotment during the second six months, but the overexpenditures during the first six months made it necessary to curtail allotments to $2,901,827.04 (38.7 per cent). The bureau has allotted $1,429,500 for the months of January, February, and March, and reserved $1,472,327.04 for April, May, and June and for emergency allotments during the six months.

REQUIREMENTS OF YARDS AND STATIONS.

For the first six months the yards and stations estimated $7,040,182.62 and were allotted $4,198,095.05. For the second six months they estimate $5,063,442.02, and in addition the Bureau of Navigation asks for $873,824.32 for naval training stations, under the provision of the current appropriation act making this appropriation available, to supplement the regular naval training-station appropriations. This makes a total of $12,977,448.96 estimated for the year as against $7,500,000 now available, or $10,000,000 if the deficiency appropriation now asked for is granted.

The bureau has received many telegrams and letters setting forth the necessity for more funds under this appropriation, and quotes some expressions therefrom to illustrate the views of the officers in charge of the activities for which the funds are used:

New York: "The public works division will practically cease to function."

Philadelphia: "The amounts requested are very conservative and should not be reduced."

Hampton Roads: "Had the commandant maintained the expenditures within the allotments the cessation of all operations at the naval operating base would have resulted."

Boston: "Earnestly request bureau authorize additional sums requested, which are absolutely essential for proper operation of yard."

Puget Sound: "All work enumerated in above reference is of maintenance character, very urgently needed and necessary to meet the demands of rapid overhaul of Pacific Fleet."

Mare Island: "Yard strongly renews recommendation that monthly allotments be materially increased."

Portsmouth: "This amount is utterly inadequate for the needs of this yard."

GENERAL.

The pay of men on leave and for holidays is an item deserving particular mention. The leave and holiday pay of all workmen carried on yards and docks pay rolls comes out of this appropriation, although the pay of the men for working days may be charged to other appropriations. For instance, if it becomes necessary to put a gang of 50 men on a job for repairs to a building damaged by fire or storm, the pay of the men for working days would be chargeable to appropriation "Repairs and preservation," but the pay for any leave taken by any of these men or for any holiday that might occur would be chargeable to appropriation "Maintenance, yards and docks." It should be borne in mind that the Bureau of Yards and Docks is what might be termed a service bureau; that is to say, it serves the other bureaus of the department with public utility services. If it fails to render prompt and efficient service, the work of the other bureaus is adversely affected. Failure to give prompt transportation service, for instance, in connection with a ship-repair job, and consequently, while the Government is saving more or less by not expending the money on transportation facilities, it is paying out probably more than is saved due to the increased cost of the ship repair job. This appropriation to a very large extent provides for the expenses which in a large commercial institution would be termed "overhead charges," and in the case of navy yards, as in the case of a commercial establishment, if the overhead is not charged to the fund provided for the purpose, it must be charged to some other funds, so that there is no ultimate saving by not charging it to the proper funds in the first place.

It is a well-known fact that the cost of labor and material has very materially advanced since prewar times. Due allowance for this should be made in comparing prewar appropriations and expenditures with those of this time.

A further consideration must be urged in requesting an increase in "Maintenance" appropriations. This is the immense increase in naval shore property during the war. The property investment has more than doubled. Shore facilities in 1916 were appraised at $208,894,467. This had increased to $473,971,595.47 at the end of the last fiscal year.

C. W. PARKS.

I hope that Members of this House will be broad enough in their views and that the chairman of the committee himself will be broad enough in his views to treat this subject in the same fair way in which he treated other items in the earlier part of the bill which were subject to points of order, and agree to increase these items to their full amount.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to some of the observations made by the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. VARE]. I notice in this morning's Philadelphia paper that the gentleman is taken somewhat to task because he was not present at a meeting of the Appropriations Committee when the item about which he has been talking was under consideration, and it was stated that it was lost by one vote, and thereby some 2,000 workmen in Philadelphia would probably be out of work.

Now, this navy-yard item is a propaganda to keep a lot of men at work whether the work is absolutely necessary at this time or not, and they are bringing pressure to bear upon the Appropriations Committee to put this item in the bill, when properly it is a matter of consideration by the Naval Affairs Committee of this House, and I am informed that the Naval Affairs Committee of the House are giving this matter consideration.

Mr. VARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. VARE. I will state to the gentleman that I was here all last week and personally visited the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. I was taken sick last Thursday at the Washington Terminal and sent the chairman of the Appropriations Committee an additional telegram, which he will admit he received. I will go further and say that when I received a long-distance phone call notifying me of the meeting last Saturday morning I was sick in bed in my home. I dictated an additional telegram from my sick bed last Friday night, which the chairman of the Appropriations Committee has in his files.

I will go further and say that the gentleman should not take too seriously things that the Philadelphia newspapers sometimes print.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman just quoted one here himself.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that gentlemen ought to thrash out Philadelphia politics among themselves and not here on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the committee will rise informally to receive a message from the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. I do not care to suspend to receive a message from the Senate. The messenger can wait until I have finished my five minutes. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to hear the explanation of the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. VARE], because I know that certain matters are under consideration by his committee, and he is usually present.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that there is absolutely not a word of truth in the statement in any paper that there would have been any different result if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] had been present and voted to put this item in the bill. It would have gone out just the same.

Mr. WALSH. Then, Mr. Chairman, apparently the vicious attack made upon the distinguished gentleman from Philadelphia is unwarranted; but nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, this demand for this sort of legislation, which is going to cost the taxpayers $10,000,000, is nothing but the result of a propaganda. You talk economy here one day, and the next day you are met with propaganda to keep some men at work. Does anyone suppose that these skilled workmen can not find employment elsewhere? I will tell you why they want to find employment in the navy yard. It is because they find work in navy yards much easier than in private employment.

Mr. VARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. VARE. When the gentleman has a leaky roof, does he wait until a rainy day to have it repaired or does he fix it while he has efficient men to do it?

Mr. WALSH. There is no analogy in that whatever. The gentleman would have the committee understand that if these repairs were not done instanter, and unless we had a contingent fund of $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 always on hand in order to do this work, we would lose a lot of money. I submit that is not the case in this instance, and that these men desire to retain these positions for the simple reason that working for the Government in the navy yard is not as hard work as working in private employment. Then we will be met with the demand for increases in pay because these men have to work so hard for Uncle Sam. They never have to work so hard but what they are willing to come in and ask for an additional appropriation of $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 in order that they may keep their places.

Mr. VARE. The gentleman from Massachusetts was present last year when this bill passed. He presided in the chair. He saw this House pass a similar bill. That being the case, and these ships having lain idle for six or seven months longer, are they not in greater need of repair now than they were then?

Mr. WALSH. I say that takes action of the Naval Affairs Committee. How do we know but what they may say that a lot of these ships will be put out of commission and that they ought to be sold? This committee has no particular knowledge of the facts, notwithstanding the Secretary of the Navy may have urged such an appropriation. Gentlemen from other districts have these navy yards, and it is true of some of my distinguished colleagues that they become very active when this question comes up for consideration, because the men live in their districts. There may some of them live in my district. My district adjoins the waters of Boston Harbor; but I do not intend to submit to dictation in this matter, and I do not intend to vote for millions of dollars out of the pockets of the taxpayers simply to keep men at work at the behest of organized propaganda. Let them find work in other employments. There is abundant opportunity and at higher wages.

Mr. VARE. Relative to the question of my presence at the meeting of the committee I wish to read the following telegrams I sent to the gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the first from Union Station, on January 22, and the second from my home in Philadelphia the following evening:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 22, 1920.

Hon. JAMES W. GOOD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives:

I had to go to Philadelphia to-night. I want to remind you of my intense interest in the naval item of the deficiency bill and thank you for your support.

WM. S. VARE.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., January 23, 1920.

Hon. JAMES W. GOOD,
Chairman Appropriations Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

I am unable to attend meeting of the committee Saturday morning, being confined at my home with severe cold. Since coming to Philadelphia I find there are 150 ships awaiting repair at the Philadelphia Navy Yard. It is surely in the line of economy that these ships be repaired. I trust the committee will allow the full amount requested by the Navy Department in the bill now being reported.

WILLIAM S. VARE.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes on this same question.

Mr. GOOD. I shall be forced to object. When we reach the Navy items it will be time enough to discuss them. We have not reached them yet, and this is all out of order.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman kindly explain why he has allowed the debate to proceed thus far?

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE], a member of the committee, explained that he had not spoken on the bill, and the chairman could not object to a member of the committee who had not spoken at all speaking out of order. When we get to the items relating to naval affairs the gentleman can speak. Let us proceed in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

SIGNAL SERVICE OF THE ARMY.

Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system: For defraying the cost of such extensions, betterments, operations, and maintenance of the Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system, including the same objects specified under this head in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, the sum of $95,000 is made available from the appropriation for the "Signal Service of the Army," for the fiscal year 1919, to continue available during the fiscal year 1921.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, my colleague has reserved a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve a point of order. I simply want to ask the chairman a question. How did it happen that you take money away from the Signal Service of the Army to use for this military cable and telegraph system?

Mr. GOOD. This is a request made by the War Department that out of an appropriation, as I recollect, something like $105,000,000 they be permitted to use $95,000 of the unexpended balance to lay this cable. The committee called the attention of the officers who appeared before us to the fact that this was not a deficiency and that it might well wait. It was the contention of the War Department that this cable, which is a self-supporting institution, is getting in bad shape and that they ought to be permitted to commence to get the materials at once. There are about 100 miles of cable giving out and showing great weakness, and they say that unless it is replaced they might lose the use of the cable altogether.

Mr. CALDWELL. I understand that, but the question I wanted to ask is whether the money appropriated for the ordinary expenses of the Signal Service of the Army should be used in this case? Have they more than they want for the service, or is it a fact that they will have to cut out something that the Military Committee has seen fit to authorize?

Mr. GOOD. No; they have an unexpended balance of $25,345,824.57, and the War Department is asking for this.

Mr. CALDWELL. I understand, but when appropriations are made through the Committee on Military Affairs these matters are figured out carefully. We have provided enough money for their activities, and what I wish to know is have we provided a surplus?

Mr. GOOD. I understand they have a sufficient balance to take care of all the anticipated demands that will be made for the balance of the fiscal year.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, further reserving the point of order, of course the gentleman knows that this is a matter taken care of in the military appropriation bill. I would like to ask whether the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs was consulted about this in any way?

Mr. GOOD. I do not think he was.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman further states that in his judgment it is not a real deficiency.

Mr. GOOD. It is an emergency, and there is no money with which to do the work.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it not possible that the Committee on Military Affairs, when it makes its annual appropriation, now in a few weeks, will make a part of the appropriation immediately available and take care of the matter in that way?

Mr. GOOD. That was my idea in regard to the proposition when it was presented, but the officers were so insistent, saying that they must order their material right away, that it would take approximately a year to get this cable, and insisted very strongly on the appropriation. The committee did not want to take jurisdiction of the subject for the reason that the gentleman from Illinois has expressed. I am not particularly alarmed about it personally, and it may be that some of the officers are more exercised over it than the committee. But it is subject to a point of order, because it changes a designation of an appropriation already made and provides for the expenditure of a part of it in 1921.

Mr. McKENZIE. I think that this very item is a pretty fair argument for a budget system. When these men go to the Committee on Appropriations a few weeks before the military appropriation bill will be reported and get this item put in a deficiency bill without any knowledge on the part of the Committee on Military Affairs if it had not seen the item in this bill, it seems to me is a good argument for the budget system. But, Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the gentleman says the evidence of a deficiency was not very apparent, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. McKENZIE. My point of order is that it does not represent a deficiency; that there is no deficiency in fact, nor will there be a deficiency existing by the 1st of July.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly apparent that the Committee on Appropriations did not have jurisdiction to make this appropriation for the next fiscal year, as it purports to do here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

For the medical and hospital department, including the same objects specified under this head in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, the sum of $1,500,000 is made available from the appropriation "Medical and Hospital Department" for the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not like this proposition of taking from the appropriation for the Army——

Mr. GOOD. Let me say to the gentleman that my recollection is that we appropriated for this year the sum of $4,500,000 for medical service in the Army, and three million and a little over has been expended. It will take $3,000,000 to take care of the sick soldiers and supply the medical treatment for them, and they have a balance of only about $1,500,000 in this appropriation.

Mr. CALDWELL. I understand, but you are taking the appropriation out of what you might need for another year.

Mr. GOOD. For the preceding year. There is a large unexpended balance of the appropriation for the medical service.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS.

For one-half cost of purchasing the bridge across the Missouri River at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., $17,500: Provided, That this sum shall not be available for expenditure until local authorities shall have paid over to the Secretary of War a like amount to complete the purchase of said bridge and shall have agreed to reimburse the United States for one-half of the cost of repairing and maintaining the same: Provided further, That the ownership of the bridge shall be and remain in the United States, but the public shall have free use thereof for purposes of transit under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the item.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is new legislation and is not a deficiency and is unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Texas make the point of order against the item. It is clearly legislation. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANTHONY: Page 16, line 5, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"For bridge across the Missouri River connecting the two tracts of land composing the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., $35,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is new legislation, is not authorized by law, and is not germane to the bill or to the preceding paragraph or to any paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kansas on the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the Chair I would state that the Government took possession of the bridge in question during the war under the authority of legislation enacted by Congress authorizing it to take property for the purposes of the prosecution of the war. It formally and duly took over the bridge in question. The question that has been before the War Department has been the determination of the proper price for the bridge. The Secretary of War and the representatives of the owners of the bridge have reached an agreement on the subject, and the Secretary of War has accepted a contract of $35,000 for the bridge in order to settle the claim of the owners against the Government for taking over the bridge. The amendment that I offer is to appropriate the money to complete the payment under the contract made.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman cite the Chair to legislation authorizing this?

Mr. ANTHONY. The general legislation enacted by Congress authorizing the War Department to take over property necessary for the prosecution of the war, under which the War Department took over the bridge in question.

The CHAIRMAN. Has there been a previous appropriation for this purpose?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; but the Government has expended some $7,000 since they took possession of the bridge in putting in a new floor.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Was the seizure of this bridge under the provisions of the Hay bill or under some other statute?

Mr. ANTHONY. Under the general war powers conferred by Congress on the War Department.

Mr. CALDWELL. If it was seized under the provisions of the Hay bill, in order that the seizure might be effective it was necessary that an appraisement be made and that three-quarters of the price be paid.

Mr. ANTHONY. Steps were taken through the formal channels authorized by law and notice was posted by the United States marshal for the district that the Government had taken over the property.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to find any specific legislation authorizing the purchase of a bridge across the Missouri River or the building of a bridge across the Missouri River. If there is any authority for it, it must be under the general powers of the Government during the war.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me call the Chair's attention to the fact that this is a proposition for the Government of the United States to go into partnership with certain people in Kansas to build a bridge partly at their expense.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is before the Chair and does not require explanation. The provision is for a bridge across the Missouri River. It does not state specifically whether it is to be bought or built, or whether the Government is to go into partnership with anyone. The provision is a bald one, for a bridge across the Missouri River. The Chair, being unable to find any specific authority for it, is not willing to so construe the amendment as to indicate that the general war powers conferred upon the War Department were such as to authorize this committee to appropriate on this bill for a bridge of this kind for which no previous appropriation has been made.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does not the Chair take cognizance of legislation which was passed conferring those war powers on the War Department under which the department had acted?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unwilling by his ruling to hold that the action of the War Department in taking over a bridge, whatever that may mean, thereby placed this committee in a position to appropriate money on a deficiency bill to pay for it in face of a point of order. With such authority as has been laid before the Chairman and such as he is able to find, he is unable to hold the amendment in order. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

The Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to expend from the unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made under the title "Armament of fortifications" for the construction of storage facilities, including necessary appurtenances, for ammunition and components thereof for cannon, small arms, machine guns, and trench warfare, and for other ordnance matériel, not exceeding $6,600,000, which amount shall remain available during the fiscal year 1921: Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is hereby authorized to expend such part, not exceeding $95,000, of the amount herein authorized as may be necessary for the purchase of land in the vicinity of Ogden, Utah, to be used as a site for an ammunition storage depot: Provided further, That the construction work hereunder shall be done by contract, let to the lowest responsible bidder, and no bid shall be accepted for any building to cost in excess of $2.45 per square foot for an unlined building or $2.90 for a lined building.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. I want to ask the chairman a question. Why should Congress in a deficiency bill provide an appropriation of $6,600,000 that could be made available through the year 1921? Has not Congress through its more appropriate committee during the year 1921 plenty of time to make this provision if it becomes necessary?

Mr. GOOD. If this item is carried and the appropriation made, it will be necessary to carry on the work largely in 1921, and the only reason it was undertaken here was because of the very urgent request of the War Department, especially the Ordnance Bureau, that its storage ammunition magazines should be constructed so as to remove the ammunition now on hand to places where, if there should be an explosion, it would not cause the loss of life and property that it will cause if left where it is now stored and there is an explosion.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman think it a wise idea for Congress in a law to fix a maximum limit of $2.45 per square foot for an unlined building and $2.90 per square foot for a lined building when the gentleman knows that whenever we fix the maximum amount that may be spent that immediately becomes the amount that is spent.

Mr. GOOD. I think that is true, but I think when the gentleman learns just what the facts are he will see the wisdom of doing that very thing. As I recall, the amount estimated for the unlined building was $4.50 a square foot. They said that is what it would cost. We went into the question to ascertain what magazines of this kind which were built during the war cost under the cost-plus system. We found that during the war similar magazines were built under the expensive cost-plus system at an average cost of $2.45 for unlined buildings and $2.90 for lined buildings.

Now they say that to get these buildings it will be necessary to pay a great deal in excess of this; and it was the opinion of the committee that if these magazines were to be constructed now certainly they should not be constructed at a cost in excess of the maximum cost under the cost-plus system, and that is why we put on the limitation; and by putting on the limitation we reduced the appropriation by $1,600,000.

Mr. BLANTON. But suppose in the year 1921 the Republican steering committee of the House and the Republicans of the Senate cease to spend all of their time on bills regulating the height of buildings in Washington and begin to consider the height of the cost of living, and are possibly able to reduce the price per square foot below $2.45 for an unlined building and below the price of $2.90 for a lined building, then would the gentleman want us to get the benefit of that and not want us to have to pay that, because we are going to have to pay the very price we put into this law as a maximum, and the gentleman knows that?

Mr. GOOD. Having suggested to the gentleman that in some parts of the country he was a close second for Mr. Bryan for the Democratic nomination for the Presidency, I did not know he was going to come right back and concede the Republicans would have the control both of the House and Senate in 1921. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLANTON. It will be the greatest calamity that ever happened to the American people. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is new legislation, is unauthorized by law, and not a deficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman to withhold the point of order or the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. The Chair has sustained it.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think we can gain anything by discussing it. I think we ought to go on with the bill.

Mr. WELLING. I want to be heard on the proposition for a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order, but the gentleman must address himself to the point of order. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. BLANTON. I will not object to the gentleman talking out of order, but I make the point of order.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the Chair will hold that this is new legislation. The very first sentence of this paragraph provides that "the Chief of Ordnance is authorized to expend from the unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made under the title 'Armament of fortifications.'"

Mr. BLANTON. How much of this is to be spent in Utah?

Mr. WELLING. Oh, my friend, that does not make any difference how much is to be spent in Utah. I am talking about the merits of the point of order that has been urged against this provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman direct his attention to the proviso in this section?

Mr. WELLING. Well, the proviso is probably subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. That makes the whole paragraph subject to the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman is directing attention to the entire paragraph. The entire paragraph unquestionably ought to be stricken from the bill.

Mr. WELLING. I want to appeal to my friend to let me have 5 or 10 minutes, under a reservation of his point of order, to explain this provision.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear the gentleman from Utah on any proposition, but the gentleman will recognize that if one single word of this paragraph is subject to the point of order it makes the whole paragraph subject to the point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Utah be permitted to address the House for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears none.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph in the bill provides for the proper storage of $474,875,000 worth of ammunition that has been provided during the war. During the war period we shipped this ammunition to the arsenals which were located along the Atlantic seaboard: the Raritan Arsenal, which is near Port Amboy, N. J.; Delaware Ordnance Depot, between Wilmington and Philadelphia, in New Jersey; the Curtis Bay General Ordnance Depot, which is near Baltimore; Big Point General Ordnance Depot, near Norfolk; and the Charleston General Ordnance Depot, near Charleston, S. C. As we prepared the ammunition that was used in the war, all of which was to go overseas, it was forwarded to these depots in shipload lots. It is now located there, and I want to invite the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that it is stored there in such large quantities as to imperil life and property. The people who live near those arsenals to-day are protesting against the large amount of explosives that are located there contrary to the law in every State where it is located. Now, the War Department is going to be obliged, unless this provision for these new arsenals is made, to remove this material to temporary storage quarters at a cost to the department that will exceed the amount that is asked for in this appropriation bill. It is clearly in evidence here in the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations that the Government has been asked to provide for facilities for storing these heavy explosives in places that will be safe for the people who live there.

Now, I want to say in justice to the people who live in my State that no human being from that State has ever appeared before that committee or anybody else and asked for an appropriation that goes to Ogden, Utah. The engineers of the War Department decided this matter themselves. The Ogden depot was selected because it was the proper location for one of these arsenals without any regard to local sentiment. I submit that the purchase of land for the arsenal at Ogden is clearly, under the rulings of the Chair for days past, subject to the point of order, but I want to appeal to the gentleman from Texas to withdraw the point of order and to permit these arsenals to be built, because if they are not built where they belong it will cost the Government of the United States much more to provide temporary storage for this material than is being asked for in this paragraph.

Ogden city is the most important railroad center in the intermountain country. It is within 24 hours of Portland and Seattle in the Northwest by direct rail route. It is but 800 miles from San Francisco, just west of us. It is on the main line to San Pedro and Los Angeles in the Southwest, and from it we can effectively reach in 24 hours our Mexican border or the Pacific coast. There is ample justification for the action of the Army engineers in this case, and any obstacle to the movement is the poorest sort of economy.

If the item goes out of the bill to-day under the House rules, it can be safely predicted that it will be again inserted before the bill becomes a law.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WELLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman believe that in the course of orderly procedure and passing sane legislation there should be some limitation to the kind of appropriations and legislation put into an urgent deficiency bill that come out on the floor of the House?

Mr. WELLING. The gentleman assumes that everything that does not agree with his own particular notion is insane legislation. The Appropriations Committee has prepared this measure, and I assume they knew as much about what ought to have gone into the provisions of the bill as the gentleman from Texas or anybody else. It is an appropriation that is needed now, for the reason that if these arsenals are not begun as soon as work can be started next spring they will not by any possibility be completed in time to take care of the ammunition before the end of 1920. It is now being stored in violation of the State laws where these ordnance depots are located on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. BLANTON. And yet the gentleman who guides the destinies of this committee now holds it is unlawful to go into this bill.

Mr. WELLING. I believe it is subject to a point of order, but I do not believe just because it is subject to a point of order we ought to delay a needed improvement which the War Department engineers have found to be urgent at this particular time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already sustained the point of order, and there is no reason to change the ruling. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval Records of the Rebellion: Not exceeding $15,500 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the continuation for the fiscal years 1913 and 1914 of the publication of an edition of 11,000 copies of the official records of the Union and Confederate Navies, in the War of the Rebellion, which were continued and made available until June 30, 1918, by the act approved September 8, 1916, are further continued and made available until June 30, 1921.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that paragraph be passed for just a few moments until the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] returns. He has gone to the telephone. He is interested in the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the paragraph will be passed over.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval Establishment—Bureau of Yards and Docks.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. It comes on line 20, and so I think it had best be offered at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TINKHAM: Page 18, after line 20, insert the following:

"Maintenance, Bureau Yards and Docks: For general maintenance of yards and docks, including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $2,500,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order for the purpose of asking a question. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] how he supposes that certain labor organizations in inland States—1,800 miles from Washington—could know anything about this amendment he is going to offer, so that Members of Congress sitting here in their seats within the last few hours get not one telegram but several, not requesting but telling them to vote for this particular $9,000,000 that the gentleman wants, part of which is to be spent in Philadelphia? How do you expect they find these things out?

Mr. TINKHAM. Five months ago the Secretary of the Navy sent recommendations to the Appropriations Committee concerning these very items. Five months ago these items were considered by that committee. Four months ago the first deficiency bill was reported and contained these very items, and was passed by this House and these items were debated. The items were defeated in the Senate. Then, when the second deficiency bill came up, the Secretary of the Navy sent recommendations for these items again to the Committee on Appropriations. The subcommittee on deficiencies again gave hearings on them. Then, the subcommittee on deficiencies refusing to report the items, the Secretary of the Navy transmitted, on the day after the subcommittee had refused, a communication containing the recommendations from four of the bureaus, from the admirals in charge, recommending these appropriations or items as absolutely necessary for the national defense.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. TINKHAM. Wait a moment. And those recommendations were published in nearly all of the newspapers of the United States. That is the way the knowledge has come not only to the people but to the Members of this Congress who are at all familiar with the operations of Congress during the last five months or are familiar with the official records.

Mr. BLANTON. For instance, how would people down in, say, Oklahoma or Kansas know that this amendment was coming up to-day?

Mr. TINKHAM. Because it was in all of the newspapers of the country that these items were necessary for the national defense. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that it is new legislation, not germane, and that it is not authorized by law.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on that point of order.

Mr. TINKHAM. May I ask the honorable Representative from Texas to reserve his point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. I make the point of order it is not germane to the subject matter.

Mr. TINKHAM. May I ask the honorable Representative from Texas to reserve his point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] requested to be heard on the matter.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If the gentleman contends this amendment is not in order, I want to be heard on it.

Mr. TINKHAM. Does the honorable Representative from Texas reserve the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. The regular order was demanded, and therefore I made the point of order. Otherwise, I would have reserved it.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order made against his amendment.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, what has been the point of order that has been made by the honorable Representative from Texas?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had better direct what he has to say to the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] also. The gentleman from Illinois made a point of order.

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the Chair state what the point of order was?

The CHAIRMAN. That the amendment was not germane.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I am wondering whether the Chair was anticipating whether some one would make the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] made the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. I made the point of order that it was not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] asks unanimous consent that the amendment may be again reported. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. TINKHAM. Now, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts as to the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Before the gentleman speaks on that, I make the further point of order that it is not germane to the preceding paragraph of the bill which it follows.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, is that the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas as to the germaneness?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] made the point of order as to germaneness. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, the question of germaneness is merely a question of relativity, and the question of relativity depends on the keenness and logicality of the mind of the man that is determining it.

Now, it is with great interest that I note on page 2220 of the RECORD, in a decision by the Chair in relation to an item in this bill, that the Chair said:

It is clear to the Chair that an estimate having been brought in by a department of the Government, the estimate having been considered by the Appropriations Committee, and it having been found by that committee to be necessary to add to the appropriations heretofore made an additional sum to carry on the activities of this particular department to the end of the present fiscal year, it was properly included in this bill as a deficiency item.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in order properly to rule on the question of germaneness raised, the actual facts in relation to this item should be distinctly and clearly understood by the Chair. It is this: That this item is the very item that has been recommended by the Navy Department of the Government to the Committee on Appropriations as a deficiency item. That is item No. 1.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman contend that because it is within the province of the committee considering the recommendation of the head of a department to incorporate it in its recommendation that it is also proper for a Member on the floor to offer it after the committee refuses to include it in its bill?

Mr. TINKHAM. My answer to the honorable Representative from Illinois is that if the Navy Department in a deficiency bill is given a deficiency appropriation and then there is a subtitle covering a bureau of that department which is given an appropriation, then an amendment under that subtitle, if it is not germane, limits the rights of the House to only increase or decrease the actual amount reported for the particular subject designated and curtails the rights and liberties of the House as it has never been before curtailed by any decision. As I understand it, for 50 years—take for example a river and harbor bill—there has been a right where a bill contained an appropriation for several rivers to add an item for another river. And if the Chair should rule that it is not germane for me to offer the amendment which I have offered when the title had been reported by the Committee on Appropriations and then under that title a deficiency had been reported for a bureau within the department, that no amendment could be made except to increase or decrease the appropriation recommended, then practically all right of amendment is taken away from the House and the right of amendment is reduced to the smallest and most circumscribed limits.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. TINKHAM. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman fails to grasp the fact that the river and harbor bill is not a general appropriation bill, and that the rule applying to amendments offered to a general appropriation bill do not apply to a river and harbor bill.

Mr. TINKHAM. In reply to the honorable Representative from Illinois I would say that, in the first place, amendments to appropriation bills are usually allowed, and there is no decision that I know which subtracts from the liberality of germaneness in relation to them. In fact germaneness in relation to appropriation bills has always been interpreted as more liberal than the question of germaneness in relation to legislation.

Mr. MADDEN. What I do maintain is that the rule applicable to the river and harbor bill is not applicable to any general appropriation bill, and I think the gentleman himself would be compelled to concede that.

Mr. ELSTON. Can the gentleman state what the difference is?

Mr. MADDEN. One is a general appropriation bill, to which the rule refers, and the other is a legislative bill where the committee preparing it has the power to make appropriations.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I will.

Mr. CRISP. I will answer the inquiry propounded to the gentleman from Massachusetts by my friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], the question being, Has the Committee on Appropriations more power to insert a deficiency item in this deficiency bill than the Committee of the Whole or the Whole House on the state of the Union? I answer very clearly, according to my opinion, that the Committee on Appropriations has no more authority than the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. [Applause.] In other words, the standing committees of the House are simply creatures of the whole House, and certainly the creature has no more authority than the creator; and if the Committee on Appropriations has the right to include a deficiency item in a general deficiency bill, then undoubtedly the whole House has that same right. And if the Committee on Appropriations has authority to include in the bill a certain item, then, in my judgment, it is in order for any Member of the House to offer such amendment, for the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union certainly has as much power as the Committee on Appropriations.

I want to say, so far as I am concerned, that I recognize no difference in the rules of the House in the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill and any other appropriation bill. The river and harbor appropriation bill is one of the regular appropriation bills, the same as any other.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I know the gentleman from Georgia is an authority on parliamentary law, one of the greatest in this House.

Mr. CRISP. I thank the gentleman. He is my partial friend.

Mr. WALSH. But he is mistaken in regard to the river and harbor bill. Under the rule it has been decided that it is not one of the general appropriation bills.

Mr. CRISP. I am not aware of that decision; and if that is the decision, I am in error.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to ask another question of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. TINKHAM. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Is the gentleman from Georgia willing to admit that in the consideration of an item the Committee of the House is entitled to take into consideration the statement of a head of a department which submits an estimate to the effect that the estimate is not a deficiency?

Mr. CRISP. Answering the gentleman about that, I have given the matter no thought. I endeavored to answer the direct inquiry propounded to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] by my friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. Now, this being a general deficiency bill, and including a number of items that are deficiencies for the Navy Department, the Post Office Department, and various other departments of the Government, I do think it would be in order to offer an amendment providing for a deficiency in some other branch of the different services when you are considering the bill dealing with deficiencies for the Navy Department. In my judgment the crux of this whole matter is whether or not the amendment is a deficiency.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman were sure that it were not a deficiency, then his argument would not apply?

Mr. CRISP. I am not prepared to say it is a deficiency. That is a question of fact, but undoubtedly if the matter is not a deficiency it would not be in order even if proposed by the Committee on Appropriations or by a member of this committee here in this House on a deficiency bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to straighten out this thing about the river and harbor bill. No rule of the House ever made a river and harbor bill an appropriation bill, but by long practice it has become one of the appropriation bills, and the Speakers have applied to the river and harbor bill the same rules that are applied to appropriation bills, as a matter of practice and not as a matter of rule.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the former Speaker of the House be kind enough to yield to me?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I think I may say with a good deal of safety that during the long period of the distinguished service of the gentleman as Speaker of the House he frequently ruled that the same points of order that could be made against an item in a general appropriation bill would not apply if made against an item in the river and harbor bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The trouble about that is that the Speaker of the House never presides in the Committee of the Whole in the consideration of one of these appropriation bills. When I was Speaker, somebody else always presided in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] has very correctly stated the situation, in my judgment, with respect to the right of the Committee of the Whole to make, by amendment to the pending bill, any deficiency appropriation that the committee might have made, but failed to make. I do not wish to misquote the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], but I understood him to claim that there is one rule as to germaneness in reference to appropriation bills, and another and different rule for river and harbor bills, general claims bills, and public building bills. Does the gentleman make that contention? I understood him to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the rule of germaneness applicable to appropriation bills did not apply to bills of a different character.

Mr. MADDEN. The statutory rule which makes a river and harbor bill distinct in itself is the rule to which I had reference. It may not be incorporated into the rules of the House.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I understand perfectly well that the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee and the jurisdiction of the other committees are separate and distinct. That distinction is made by the rules; but there is no distinction in parliamentary law between the rule of germaneness as applied to an appropriation bill and the same rule applied to other bills, with one exception, which is made by the rules, and that is revenue bills. As stated by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], the rule for all of these bills is precisely the same, save only that there is a special rule of germaneness provided by our rules for the consideration of revenue bills.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman will find, I think, that it has been held that the river and harbor bill is not one of the general appropriation bills, and is not subject to their restrictions as to legislation.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The question of legislation is not involved in this discussion.

Mr. WALSH. That goes to the question of germaneness.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Not necessarily.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman referred to the special statute that takes care of certain features of a river and harbor bill when the question of jurisdiction is raised.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But that has nothing to do with the general principles of germaneness.

Mr. WINGO. That statute was with reference to jurisdiction.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have not raised any question under the general head of legislation on an appropriation bill. To do so would call for a totally different line of precedents, and would lead the discussion away from the matter under consideration. I maintain that the rule of germaneness as found in the Manual, applies alike to appropriation bills and to general bills of a different character.

It was stated by the Chairman in a ruling recently made that it was not in order to introduce a different subject matter by amendment. This is the exact language of the rule but this language does not carry the meaning attributed to it, either by the Chairman, or the gentlemen who contend that the pending amendment is not in order. This language does not mean that when a proposition is carried in a bill, another proposition directly related to the matter under consideration, is a different subject matter, and therefore not in order as an amendment. To so hold would be to hold out of order 90 per cent of the amendments that have been held to be germane.

The rule of germaneness so construed would have a very limited application. In the very case cited by the Chairman some minutes since, if he will turn to the opinion he will find that the Chair had in mind a proposition that was not akin to the subject under consideration, was not related to it save in the most remote degree, and was therefore a different subject matter. I recall that precedent perfectly well. The bill under consideration was a deficiency appropriation bill, and the amendment offered from the floor proposed to repeal the law which made the superintendent of public printing an appointive officer. This amendment was in no wise germane to an appropriation bill. There was no kinship whatever between the matter proposed by the amendment and the subject matter before the committee. The facts of that case very clearly show what the Chairman had in mind and what Mr. Speaker Carlisle had in mind and what the rule has in mind, by the words "a different subject matter." Every amendment in a sense is a different subject matter, since if it was already in the bill there would be no occasion for an amendment. The words "different subject matter," as used by the rule, mean another proposition not related to or akin to the subject matter of the bill; therefore, a totally different subject matter. The rule of germaneness deals with propositions different from those contained in the bill, but sufficiently akin to be admitted as amendments. The Chair must determine the degree of kinship or relationship. If the thing proposed is remotely akin, then it will not be in order. The content of the amendment may be an entirely different subject matter by name, but so akin to the subject matter under consideration as to be within the law relating to germaneness, and therefore in order. May I take an illustration from a precedent that is often cited? A bill is under consideration to admit the territories of Virginia and Kentucky to statehood. It is entirely in order to add Maryland, another territory, by way of amendment to that bill. Yet there is nothing in the bill about Maryland. The name of Maryland nowhere appears. On the face of the bill it deals exclusively and by name with Virginia and Kentucky.

Apply the principle insisted upon in this discussion, namely, that a different subject matter can not be added to a bill by amendment, and the amendment proposing Maryland would not be in order. If the Chairman interprets correctly the words "a different subject," then the Chairman, who, in the case cited, admitted Maryland as a germane amendment, and all the presiding officers who have adopted and followed that ruling were in error. Yet the veriest tyro in this body knows that in the case supposed, which is cited in the manual as a leading case, the inclusion of the third Territory was held to be in order. What is the principle upon which that precedent rests, a precedent apparently in conflict with the ruling of Speaker Carlisle. The subject matter as to content was the Territories of Virginia and Kentucky. The amendment proposed a different subject matter, the Territory "Maryland" not referred to or contained in the bill. Plainly you would say out of order under the ruling cited by the Chairman, yet that amendment was admitted, and the ruling has been cited and followed a hundred times. The principle is very plain. The subject matter of the bill, the purpose of the bill, was the admission of Territories. The amendment proposing another Territory for admission was plainly akin to the main purpose of the bill. Hence it was germane to this general purpose, and therefore in order. No one questions the propriety of that ruling. It is firmly established as a ruling case. But if the case cited was pending to-day for decision, the same objection that is now made to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts could be made with far greater propriety to the amendment proposing the addition of Maryland to the Territories included by name in the bill. There is a much more apparent kinship between the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts and the bill which he seeks to amend than there was between the bill and the amendment in the precedent cited.

I will add a few illustrations derived from the practice of the House in the consideration of the general claims bill, the general rivers and harbors bill, and the general public building bill. Suppose this present contention is correct, this interpretation of the rule well taken, what will happen when these bills are under consideration? Bear in mind that this is an assault upon the power of the House and the Committee of the Whole. It is a limitation of their authority, compelling them to consider only the matters brought in eo nomine by the committee, and excluding all additions of other matter by amendment, however closely that matter may be related or akin to the matter reported by the committee.

First as to the general rivers and harbors bill. Under the present contention no additional river and harbor project could be added to the bill, because it would be a different matter, inasmuch as the committee had declined to include it in the bill. Yet in the past these additions have been constantly made by amendment. Many years ago a river and harbor bill was before the committee. An amendment was offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] providing for three dams on the headwaters of the Missouri River to impound those headwaters, and thereby promote navigation by increasing uniformity of flow in the river. There was nothing of this character in the bill. It was a different subject matter. Mr. Burton, of Ohio, a very able parliamentarian, insisted that the amendment was not germane, but he was overruled.

Mr. Burton, who had charge of the bill, made the very point of order now made to the Tinkham amendment, namely, that it was not germane. He insisted that his bill had nothing to do with dams, that he was not undertaking to impound waters for any purpose, and that the amendment therefore was foreign to the bill. Yet that amendment was held in order, and the ruling placed upon the very obvious considerations that the bill related, in large part, to the improvement of navigability in the rivers, and the amendment of Mr. MONDELL, whether wise or unwise, in fact had an evident kinship, or relationship on its face to the subject of the bill. Hence under the rule it was germane. (Hinds', Vol. V, sec. 5803.) To a bill generally providing for rivers and harbors an amendment providing an additional harbor is germane. (Hinds', Vol. IV, sec. 4120.)

Mr. TINKHAM. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. TINKHAM. Was not this the decision on that point of order? The Chairman said:

> The Chair thinks that this amendment is germane to the subject matter of the bill and the subject matter over which the Rivers and Harbors Committee has jurisdiction.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Absolutely. That is the proposition I now maintain, and under no other contention could the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming have been held in order.

I will take an illlustration from the public building bill. It is competent for the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report a bill including many public buildings. Suppose they appropriate for public buildings for 50 cities, and leave out, say, the cities of Chicago and New York. The committee, for reasons sufficient to itself, chooses to make no appropriations for buildings in those cities. In the bill, we will say, in section 1 is Richmond, in section 2 Philadelphia, in section 3 Savannah, and so on.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman contend that it is within the power of the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee to make appropriations?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Oh, no; authorizations. I thought the gentleman had a real question to ask. [Laughter.] As suggested, suppose the committee had left Chicago out of the bill and had made authorizations for the other cities, what would be the attitude of the gentleman from Chicago in respect to offering an amendment to provide for Chicago? Would he hold that such an amendment would be out of order? The question answers itself. He would move to include the city of Chicago. Would that amendment be in order? Plainly. A bill for a number of public buildings can be amended by adding another. (Hinds' Precedents, Vol. V, p. 429, bottom of page, and p.

430, top of page; see also Vol. V, sec. 5840.) But that amendment would not be in order under the present contention. Chicago would be a different subject matter from any contained in the bill. Hence in that view neither Chicago nor any other city could be added to the collection of cities the committee chose to include in its bill. Such amendments, however, have always been held in order, in spite of Speaker Carlisle's ruling, on the ground that they were germane to the subject matter in and purpose of the bill, and hence were not different subject matters in the sense contemplated by that eminent parliamentarian.

Take the general claims bill, that conceivably might include 10,000 claims. The committee reports a general bill, but includes only 50 claimants by name. Amendments adding other claimants would in each case, in a sense, introduce new subject matters to the cases included in the bill. Would these amendments be in order? Not if the present contention is sound. Yet such amendments have always been held to be in order. (Hinds' Precedents, Vol. V, p. 429, bottom of page, and p. 430, top of page, sec. 5840.)

Any claim that the committee might have included in the bill can be added by amendment. The fact that the committee does not report a claim does not deprive the House or the Committee of the Whole from adding that claim to the bill. As the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] says, the hand can not be bigger than the body. The committee by failure to include a proper claim in a bill can not keep the committee from adding it by amendment.

The illustrations, Mr. Chairman, that I have given all show that a different subject matter can be added to a bill if it belongs to the general jurisdiction of the committee and might have been reported by the committee. It must therefore be apparent that the true meaning of the words "different subject matter" is a totally different subject matter, not related to or akin to the subject matter of the bill. If the amendment falls under this head, or the kinship is too remote, it will not be in order. Speaker Reed, discussing question of germaneness, said:

> It is impossible to lay down any precise rule on this subject and much depends on the good sense of the presiding officer.

In that connection, he quoted the rule that no motion or proposition different from the subject under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

Yet this same Speaker Reed, when a bill was before the House relating to Federal elections and the functions of Federal courts, admitted an amendment establishing a system of jury commissioners. (Hinds' Vol. V, sec. 5922.) There was nothing in the election bill about jury commissioners. Hence it would seem that an amendment providing them was a different subject matter. But on the principle of germaneness the amendment was admitted.

Take the situation which confronts us to-day. The Chair has held that this is a general deficiency bill in the broadest sense in which it is possible to rule to that effect. This is a deficiency bill in the sense that it not only deals with actual deficiencies created either by action of the departments in excess of their authority in expending more than had been appropriated, or by action of the departments exercising the discretion given to them to contract under exigent conditions further than the amount actually appropriated for would allow them to go.

The Chair has held further that although no actual deficiency has been created, yet where it has been shown by a department that a public work which has been appropriated for can not be completed by that appropriation by reason of the expanding cost of labor, or of material, and more money is required to carry out the project, then that is a deficiency.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman contend that it is within the power of the head of any department of the Government of the United States to create a condition beyond the amount of the appropriation that has been set apart for the conduct of his department by the establishment of new enterprises or the development of new projects?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That has been already ruled on.

Mr. MADDEN. And that would be called a deficiency?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. If that contention is good, then there is no limit to the power of the departments.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have been contending somewhat to that effect heretofore. I do not undertake to say, mark you, that the executive department can make us appropriate for a project, but if it thinks that the project is in the public interest and ought to be expanded in the public interest, and an additional appropriation is needed to expand it, then, as I understand the rulings heretofore made, this supplementary appropriation is a deficiency, and can be included in a deficiency bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Regardless of whether it is a deficiency in fact, but merely a deficiency in the mind of the department, it must be appropriated for in a deficiency bill, according to the gentleman's contention?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the bulk of the items in this bill are not deficiencies in fact. A member of the committee tells me that none of them is. This committee is clothed with the authority of appropriating under the conditions cited for all the matters that have been defined as deficiencies in the very broadest sense. This section deals with the Naval Establishment, the Bureau of Yards and Docks. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is for the maintenance of yards and docks, $2,000,000, or whatever the sum may be. In the contention over this point of order I would like for some one to undertake to say that this amendment is not related to the subject matter of the bill and is not related to the particular subject matter now under consideration, namely, yards and docks.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman maintain that the maintenance of yards and docks includes the employment of men to make guns and machinery of all kinds?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No; not at all.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what this appropriation is sought to be made for.

Mr. TINKHAM. Not at all.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will leave the gentleman from Massachusetts to defend his amendment against that charge.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. The manufacture of guns in the Navy does not come under the Bureau of Yards and Docks.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am not contending that it does.

Mr. HICKS. I said that in answer to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am contending that with respect to the maintenance of yards and docks a deficiency exists for which the committee could have included an appropriation. The amendment is relevant and germane. I contend that the committee on deficiencies could have made this appropriation, and if they could have made it, that the amendment can be offered to this portion of the bill.

I have taken some time in this discussion, Mr. Chairman, because the subject of germaneness is an exceedingly important one. The rights of this House in this connection are exceedingly important. The effect of this point of order, if it be sustained, would be to exclude a very large percentage of the amendments that will be offered in this body.

I will give the Chair a more recent illustration. A few days ago a river and harbor bill was before the Committee of the Whole. The committee reported a lump-sum appropriation. An amendment was offered for some specific projects which were not provided for eo nomine in the bill. There was no reference in the bill to the Mississippi, or the Missouri. Doubtless the Committee on Rivers and Harbors sought to report the bill in a form to exclude, if they could, under the rules the amendments that they knew would be offered. All of the arguments made to-day against this particular amendment were made against the Denison amendment. The river and harbor bill made a lump-sum appropriation, while the amendment proposed to appropriate for development of certain specific objects, not exclusively for maintenance. When the amendment was offered the point of order was made that it was not germane. It was overruled, I think, by the gentleman now occupying the chair.

Later it was renewed in a more amplified form before the Speaker of this body, Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] offered a motion to recommit, and affording practically a general river and harbor bill with a multiplicity of items not included in the committee bill. The same point of order now raised was raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the same objection in respect to germaneness was urged, namely, that the bill related to one subject matter, and the amendment introduced a different subject matter.

The Speaker very properly rules that there was that sufficient kinship, or relationship, between the matter in the motion to recommit and that in the original bill to make the same in order. He so ruled, and a vote was taken on the merits of the amendment proposed. Mr. Chairman, for the reasons that I have given in extenso, I submit that this amendment is in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] to the fact that he does not seem to be in line with the decision of Mr. Speaker Carlisle, to which the present presiding Chairman referred this morning, when the gentleman from Georgia says that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has every bit of the authority that the deficiency appropriation committee has in bringing a bill before the House. Now, the decision of Mr. Speaker Carlisle is that the deficiency appropriation committee can put various and sundry items into a deficiency bill that have no relevancy to each other, and yet when that bill comes before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, even though it has in it various and sundry items with no relevancy to each other, yet no Member from the floor, not even a member of the committee having charge of the bill, can offer any amendment not germane and introducing a new subject.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield.

Mr. CRISP. I have the very highest respect and the greatest admiration for Mr. Speaker Carlisle. He was one of the great Speakers of this House, a great parliamentarian, and I do not arrogate to myself anything like the ability or knowledge of parliamentary law, or on any other question, which he possessed, but I never can subscribe to the doctrine that one committee of this House—21 members; in fact, 12 members, a majority of the committee—has more power than the other 423; neither can I ever subscribe to the doctrine that the creature has more power than the creator. Now, I know there is a theory, and I know there is a tendency, to try to prevent anything coming up on this floor that has not been considered by a committee, for, you say, you might have ill-advised legislation.

Mr. BLANTON. Was the gentleman from Georgia present when the very efficient chairman gave the reason of Mr. Speaker Carlisle?

Mr. CRISP. I was not.

Mr. BLANTON. He gave this reason, and I would like the gentleman to have the benefit of it: When a committee reports out a deficiency bill the Members of Congress know what is in that bill, and if they do their duty they prepare themselves to meet and either defend or oppose every item in that bill. They are put on notice as to what is coming up; they are not required to anticipate that either the committee or some other Member of Congress will bring in an entirely new subject or entirely irrelevant matter for them to consider and take them by surprise. That was a very good reason which Mr. Speaker Carlisle gave and which the Chair adopted as a ruling, and I take it the gentleman from Georgia will agree with me that the gentleman who now occupies the chair is one of the best parliamentarians in the House, except when it comes to counting the Members to make a quorum; his arithmetic is bad then sometimes; but as to his being a good parliamentarian, he is one. Now, to end the matter, in view of the fact that I want this matter to come out of the bill, I want this amendment kept out of the bill—in view of the fact the distinguished gentleman from Illinois has made a good point of order which is going to force the amendment to come out, I would rather that it came out so far as I am concerned on a Republican point of order than on a Democratic point of order, so I withdraw my point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CRISP. May I ask the indulgence of the gentleman to complete the statement which I was making?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up the time of the committee only to the extent of completing the answer which I was making to the gentleman from Texas. I think it is a reason why the House might reject an amendment that has not been considered by the committee, but I still assert, in my humble opinion, that one of the standing committees of the House has no greater power than the House collectively, except in one instance, and one only, and that is under the last clause of the Holman rule, and the committee only have greater power there because the rules of the House expressly say so, and the rule must be strictly construed and not enlarged. Under the last clause of section 2 of rule 21—the Holman rule—there is a provision that legislation is in order on an appropriation bill if the legislation is germane and will reduce expenditures, provided it is recommended by a committee of the House or by a joint committee or by the House members of a joint committee. Now, the committee having jurisdiction of the legislative subject matter might propose legislation that will retrench the expenditures which would be in order, where if the amendment were offered on the floor by an individual Member it would not be in order. That is so simply because the rule expressly says so. But, saving that one proposition, I do not believe that a committee has greater power than the House itself.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, and Mr. MANN of Illinois rose.

Mr. CRISP. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Just for a second. Does not the gentleman at least lose sight of the fact that the Committee on Appropriations is appointed by the House. We are not in the House here. This is another committee of the House, and the doctrine that the creator has greater power than the creature really has not very much to do with the fact that we are in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, which is as much a creature of the House as the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CRISP. Answering the gentleman from Illinois, I think the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, which consists of 435 Members, has more power——

Mr. BLANTON. Sixty Members, usually.

Mr. CRISP (continuing). And is superior to the Committee on Appropriations, just as the House itself is superior to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. I will.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Does the gentleman agree with me that this matter turns on the meaning of the words "a subject different from that under consideration"?

Mr. CRISP. You mean germaneness?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes; germaneness.

One of the decisions that was cited by the Chairman this morning in another ruling is found in Fifth Hinds', section 5825. A deficiency bill was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole and an amendment was offered to repeal the law making the Superintendent of Public Printing an appointive officer. Upon that state of facts the Chairman ruled that an amendment bringing in a totally different subject matter, one not related to the subject under consideration, was not in order. The amendment plainly was not related to the subject under consideration, and obviously presented a different subject matter. The Chair therefore correctly ruled that it was not in order. He could not have ruled otherwise.

Mr. CRISP. No.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. A former Speaker of this body, Mr. Reed, in his booklet on parliamentary law, quotes the rule relating to bringing in different matter by amendment. This provision has been retained in our House Rules for a long time, and in no wise changes the rule of germaneness. This rule is as follows:

> No motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

Yet the same authority who cited this rule, when presiding in the House during the consideration of a bill relating to Federal elections and the functions of Federal courts, admitted an amendment providing for jury commissioners, a matter that was not in the bill. According to the contentions that some of our friends are making, did not that amendment present a different subject matter?

Mr. CRISP. It did.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. And yet under the rule of germaneness Mr. Speaker Reed held it to be in order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] spent a greater portion of his time on the question of germaneness, and he made an argument with reference to germaneness which in all its aspects, I admit, would apply to a general appropriation bill of the House. Now, in order that an item should be germane to a deficiency bill it must come within the requirements of the rule as to germaneness relating to general appropriation bills or any other subject matter. His reference to the river and harbor bill, I submit, is not analagous to this case, because in treating the river and harbor bill in the Committee of the Whole it is considered as a legislative proposition and not as one of the general appropriation bills of the House. The point of order having been made that the item provided for in an amendment is not a deficiency, in my judgment makes it incumbent for somebody upon the committee to assure the Chair that the item of appropriation provided for a deficiency in the appropriation heretofore made for that particular class of work. Now, if we can provide for these various departments of the Government in deficiency bills, there certainly is no necessity for having the regular general appropriation bills passed for the various branches of the Government. This matter was brought before the Committee on Appropriations at the last session, and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy appeared before the committee, and the chairman of the Appropriations Committee on opening the hearing on September 10, 1919, made this statement:

Mr. Secretary, the committee had concluded its hearings when we received your letter of to-day with regard to this estimate of $18,600,000 for the Naval Establishment, the items being $5,000,000 for the Bureau of Yards and Docks, $2,000,000 for the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, $6,500,000 for the Bureau of Construction and Repair, $5,000,000 for the Bureau of Steam Engineering. Officers of the Navy Department have appeared before the committee and have explained in detail the situation and the necessity for this appropriation. If I understand the situation correctly, there is no deficiency?

Mr. ROOSEVELT. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. And your present program, unless additional funds are granted by Congress, has so regulated the work of the yards that there will be no deficiency?

Mr. ROOSEVELT. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The estimate is made on the theory, I take it, that if the money were granted you would then make your allotments so as to employ more men to repair more of the vessels of the Navy?

Mr. ROOSEVELT. We would try to complete the repairs on the war vessels this year instead of having them drag over two years.

It seems, Mr. Chairman, unless the proponent of the amendment can show that the conditions are materially changed and that this is an actual deficiency in the appropriation made for the purposes to which the amendment refers, which was carried in the general naval appropriation bill for the year 1920, it is not proper.

Mr. DUPRÉ. What is the date of the hearing the gentleman read from?

Mr. WALSH. September 10, 1919.

It is not proper to add this to a general deficiency bill.

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to my honorable colleague from Massachusetts.

Mr. TINKHAM. Does he know that the Chair ruled day before yesterday that an anticipatory deficit of this character was in order in a deficiency bill and in this bill?

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the distinguished gentleman that I did not know that, and I do not think the gentleman can point to the RECORD and show where the Chair made any ruling upon an anticipatory deficit. The gentleman is mixing deficits and deficiencies, I think, in his consideration of the matter.

Now, this is for the same purposes as those which are carried in the general appropriation bill, which covers a multitude of items under the head of "Bureau of Yards and Docks," and it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that to bring in this amendment under cover of a claim for deficiency, unless it can be clearly shown that a deficiency exists, or that obligations have been incurred which have created a deficiency which would exist prior to July 1, this year, it can not actually be made on this bill. If it is for the purpose of instituting new work, or for the purpose, as some of the telegrams say, to keep a lot of men at work [applause], then that is not an actual deficiency such as is contemplated by the rule.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the honorable Representative allow me to read the decision of the Chair?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. TINKHAM. I will say to my honorable colleague from Massachusetts that on pages 2219 and 2220 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on January 29, the Chair ruled as follows:

The act cited by the gentleman from Massachusetts and explained with clearness by the gentleman from Virginia does not, as it seems to the Chair, enter into the consideration of this point of order. The act referred to was passed for the purpose of controlling heads of departments in the disbursement of appropriations, and not to affect in any way the rules of the House or the proceedings of the House in making appropriations. Therefore the Chair does not feel called upon to construe the act.

The point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts is that the paragraph in question does not present a deficiency. He distinguishes between a deficiency and an anticipatory or anticipated deficiency. The Chair is not able, however, to follow this line of argument to any satisfactory conclusion, being unable to distinguish between a deficiency and an anticipated deficiency or an anticipatory deficiency. If the paragraph does not present a deficiency in the parliamentary sense of the word as used in this House, it has no place in the bill.

It has been shown that this appropriation sought to be made in this paragraph is authorized by existing law. It is also shown that it was appropriated for in a previous act, now current law. The question now is whether the present paragraph is a deficiency item appropriate to be included in a deficiency bill.

A deficiency, as used in this House, as was so ably explained by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT], means a deficiency in an appropriation heretofore made. In the practice of the House deficiency bills have always carried the items for the expense of carrying on the different departments of the Government for the time intervening before the end of the current fiscal year. It has been the practice in the House that each appropriating committee, other than the Committee on Appropriations, shall bring out one appropriation bill each fiscal year. The Appropriations Committee brings out the sundry civil bill, one District appropriation bill, one fortifications bill, one legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, one pension appropriation bill, and such number of deficiency bills as may be necessary to take care of the deficiencies arising from lack of sufficient appropriations in all the other bills for carrying on the various activities of the Government to the end of the fiscal year.

It is clear to the Chair that an estimate having been brought in by a department of the Government, the estimate having been considered by the Appropriations Committee, and it having been found by that committee to be necessary to add to the appropriations heretofore made an additional sum to carry on the activities of this particular department to the end of the present fiscal year, it was properly included in this bill as a deficiency item. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. TINKHAM. I will.

Mr. ELSTON. What "gentleman from Massachusetts" is referred to in the quotation just mentioned?

Mr. TINKHAM. The same gentleman that the honorable Representative from California is now questioning.

Mr. ELSTON. The one I am looking at or the one I am pointing at?

Mr. TINKHAM. The one you are pointing at now.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will my distinguished colleague now point out where the Chair has made any ruling upon an anticipatory deficit?

Mr. TINKHAM. In reply I would state that he has ruled that any money necessary to carry on the department in accordance with the recommendations of that department can be met by an item in a deficiency bill. The Navy Department came before the subcommittee on deficiencies of the Committee on Appropriations and said that the Bureau of Yards and Docks and other bureaus could not for the rest of the fiscal year do the work that was necessary and absolutely essential unless certain sums were provided. The amendment which I have offered is in conformity with their request and is to meet those necessary appropriations for expenditure until the first of the next fiscal year.

In accordance with the ruling of the Chairman, it is plainly competent; and if it is not competent in a deficiency bill, then it will be admitted by those who have heard the various items read in this deficiency bill that practically 5 per cent of the items are not competent, because they are to meet expenses to be incurred in the future, although they are recommended by the several departments.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question to his colleague?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] desire to be heard further?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. I simply wanted to direct a question to the gentleman from Massachusetts, the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts who has the floor [Mr. TINKHAM]. It is this: The opinion of the Chair, to which the gentleman has just called the attention of the committee, had reference to an item in the deficiency bill, reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and to which the gentleman from Massachusetts raised a point of order. Of course, the case at issue now is not at all on the same basis as the question in connection with which the gentleman read the ruling of the Chairman.

Mr. TINKHAM. The honorable Representative from Illinois is entirely mistaken. The point of order was raised in relation to the Council of National Defense and in relation to an item which provided for the pay of certain employees and the extension of their work for the balance of the year. The appropriation now before the committee for yards and docks is for the pay of men and the extension of work, namely, repair work in the Navy Department. They are absolutely of a piece, identical, and one and the same, so far as purpose and policy are concerned.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, on January 5, 1920, when the Assistant Secretary was again before the Committee on Appropriations, he was asked by the chairman if there had been any change in the situation which had developed since they conducted their hearings on September 10, 1919, relative to these estimates for yards and docks, supplies and accounts, construction and repair, and steam engineering, and the Secretary said he thought he could stand absolutely on what he said before. So that the situation, from the point of view of repairs, is just as serious as it was then. The committee was interested in the lay off of men that would be entailed if they did not get it.

Now, I submit that it is incumbent upon the committee or the gentleman from Massachusetts, who offers the amendment, to adduce some facts showing that this is an actual deficiency in the sum which was appropriated in the general appropriation bill for these specific objects.

Mr. DEWALT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I could add anything to the information of the Chair, because my remarks are addressed entirely to him, as he is the party who rules on the question, as to the question of germaneness, nor possibly could I enlighten the Chair at all as to the question of whether or not this is a deficiency. But in order to determine the question, Mr. Chairman, we must first find, or attempt to find, what is being done.

Now, what is being done or attempted to be done? First, we have a deficiency bill which includes on this page the item of a naval establishment and a subitem thereunder of "Bureau of Yards and Docks." Now, bear in mind that the line subsequent to the line at which this amendment is proposed contains these words, to which I call specific attention:

The limitation specified in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920 on expenditures for pay of classified employees from the appropriation "Maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks," is increased by the sum of $400,000.

Now, let us bear in mind, first, that here is a specific provision, naming the sum of $400,000 for the maintenance of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, and it provides that the limitation specified in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year of 1920 on expenditures for pay of classified employees is increased by this sum of $400,000.

Now, the very next thing that we desire to do, it seems to me, is to inquire what this amendment is. What is the amendment as proposed? It is entitled—

Maintenance Bureau of Yards and Docks—

And it says—

for general maintenance of yards and docks—

The very subject mentioned in this bill—including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920—

Referring again to the same act which is referred to in the body of this bill to which this amendment is proposed to be made. Now, what follows? That this shall be an appropriation of $2,500,000. Here it is named at $400,000. It shall be increased by $400,000. Now, what is increased by $400,000? By referring to the act, which is mentioned not only in the amendment but in the act itself, in the deficiency bill, we find that the maintenance of the Bureau of Yards and Docks in that act provides certain things for general maintenance of yards and docks, including not exceeding four naval barracks abroad, and so forth. And then it says:

For incidental labor at navy yards.

Now, conceding, if the Chairman pleases, for the sake of the argument, that this is for labor at these yards, I still say that it is germane to this bill, because it specifies in the bill itself that there shall be an additional enlargement of this appropriation, to wit, $1,500,000, by $400,000 more, and this provides for incidental labor at the navy yards. Therefore they both treat of the same subject, to wit, the maintenance of the yards and docks in the Navy Department, and more specifically they treat of labor in those yards. Now, whether that labor be for the repair of ships or whether it be for the maintenance of docks or for other work to be done there, certainly it is included by the very wording of the act itself.

Now, I think that in itself, in addition to what the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] has said, is conclusive proof of the fact that it is germane.

The next question is, Is there a deficiency? The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has said that it is incumbent upon the proponent of this amendment to show that there is a deficiency. This Chairman has not ruled that to be necessary. He has ruled that when the department has said that it has a project on foot and that an appropriation has been made, and that in the course of events it is determined by the department that the present appropriation is not sufficient in amount, the deficiency bill can carry another amount enlarging that appropriation. That is the effect of the present Chairman's ruling, made a few days ago. Therefore, if that ruling is correct and if the Chairman desires to be consistent with that ruling, then it follows that there being an appropriation of $400,000 for the Bureau of Yards and Docks, an increase of $400,000 over the amount specified in the naval act of 1920, which specifies that it shall be $1,500,000, this is simply an increasing of that amount more than $400,000, and it becomes not only germane, but if the department thinks it necessary for the enlargement of the project it becomes a deficiency.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I ask the Chair to bear with me for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from South Carolina briefly.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] stated that the proponent of the amendment must show that there was a deficiency; and in order to show that there was not a deficiency, he read from the statement of Assistant Secretary Roosevelt. In that statement the chairman of the committee, in the hearings on page 1 of last September, asked:

If I understand the situation correctly, there is no deficiency?

That question is often asked by members of the Appropriations Committee of representatives of the departments who seek deficiency appropriations, for the reason that we seek to prevent them from incurring obligations in violation of the statute. Now, if the gentleman from Massachusetts had read further, on the very next page the question was asked:

It is accumulated work in the way of repairs that you want to do this year?

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Yes; and unforeseen work which we did not know about last spring, at the time of the hearings before the Naval Affairs Committee.

Clearly showing that unforeseen work which could not have been anticipated, in the repairs of ships of the Navy, arose and demanded the expenditure of funds greater than the original allotment, thereby incurring a deficiency in the only way it can be incurred, as the Chair very properly said two days ago.

Now, since that time the hearings will show, on page 324——

Mr. DUPRÉ. What is the date of the second hearing?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Only a few days ago.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The hearing was on January 5.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The statement was by Admiral Parks in response to a question of the chairman:

That was an expenditure for the whole year?

Admiral PARKS. No; that will be required from now on.

This is in reference to an additional item in this bill referring to training stations, which gave to the department the right to draw on this fund to the extent of $800,000, which they propose to do, and thereby reduce this fund and increase the deficiency for yards and docks. Now, let me read to the chairman what was said by Mr. Roosevelt again:

Mr. ROOSEVELT. It means that during the last six months they must cut down. They only have now 40 per cent of the entire appropriation, and the question came up a week ago, just before the first of the year, as to whether they should cut immediately, on January 1, or divide the remaining 40 per cent of the money that was left by six.

Admiral Coontz, on page 325, shows that they had left on December 1 only $3,321,000 out of a total appropriation of $7,500,000. Admiral Parks stated that unless this fund was given to them they would have to cut down the work because unforeseen repairs necessitated the expenditure of so large a part of the money.

The chairman very properly said two days ago, "It is clear to the Chair that an estimate having been brought in by the department of the Government, an estimate that has been considered by the committee to have been found by it necessary to add to the appropriation heretofore, made an additional sum to carry on the activities of this particular department, that it was properly included in this sum." So the only way that the Chair can sustain the contention of those who argue in favor of sustaining the point of order is to say that the Committee on Appropriations has a greater power than an individual Member in this House.

Now, if the Post Office had an actual deficit in the work authorized by law and they came before the Appropriations Committee, and by a vote of one the committee determined not to include it, would the Chair hold that a Member of this House in the Committee of the Whole could not offer an amendment providing for a deficiency of that kind in an appropriation bill? If this is an appropriation bill providing for deficencies in the various appropriation bills as set forth by the Chair two days ago, any Member of this House has the right to offer an amendment providing for taking care of a deficiency in any department of the Government, and to rule otherwise is to make the Appropriations Committee a czar over the membership in this House; and this is true of every other committee that ever undertakes to exercise the power and deny it to other Members of the House. I hope the Chair will not make any such ruling, for the future welfare of this House.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that in a deficiency bill we could make an appropriation for completing or enlarging or continuing the enlargement of a public building?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; if there was a deficiency in an appropriation authorized by law and the amount estimated did not exceed the limit of cost, I know of no reason why you could not.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to discuss the point of order and have made no preparation to discuss it, but as the discussion has gone on it has occurred to me that there are certain phases of the question before the House that have not been presented.

The Chair held, in effect, as I understand it, that it was difficult for him to differentiate between a deficiency and an anticipatory deficiency. One can readily understand the difficulty of the Chair in that regard. I would be similarly confused; but if the Chair will allow me, this is not a question between a deficiency and an anticipated deficiency, or an anticipatory deficiency, it is a question whether this is a deficiency at all. I am inclined to think an anticipatory deficiency, or an anticipated deficiency, may be provided for on a deficiency bill. We frequently provide for deficiencies that have not actually occurred.

The question is, What is a deficiency? If the Congress provided a certain sum of money for the operation of the navy yards of the country and in making this appropriation made provision with regard to the number of men to be employed during the season, or the number of ships to be repaired, or the units of work the yards should perform, and it developed during the year that with the appropriation made it would not be possible to employ that number of men or repair those ships or to perform these units of work, the department would be justified in coming before the Appropriations Committee before there was an actual deficiency and in the anticipation of a real deficiency that was in sight ask for a sum needed, and the committee would be justified in granting it as a deficiency.

But it must be a deficiency and not a mere request on the part of a department to be allowed to spend more money and do more work, hire more men, or perform more units of work than were contemplated at the time the appropriation was made.

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. TINKHAM. Is the gentleman aware that nearly all the items that have been passed in this bill are of the character which he states should not be carried in a deficiency bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I am not willing to agree to that at all. I am taking in a way the gentleman's view that there may be such a thing as an anticipatory deficiency. There are such in this bill, but they are deficiencies nevertheless, deficiencies that are certain to occur with the running of time, with the performance of those acts, the doing of that work, the performance of these duties that the Congress directed should be done.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. As I understand the gentleman's view, if it required the employment of additional people to do additional work, he would not regard it as a deficiency; but assuming that, as in this case, even though this amount was granted, that the department will have to reduce the number of employees, and yet the department could not repair its ships, then the gentleman would regard that as a deficiency, would he not?

Mr. MONDELL. Not at all.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Why does the gentleman make the distinction as to the employment of additional operatives?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, let us assume that a million dollars is appropriated for a navy yard, and that means the employment through the 12 months of the year of 1,000 men, but that there are 2,000 men employed. It is plain to anyone that there must be a reduction some time or the intent and purposes of the Congress could not be met, because while the Congress expected to spend a certain amount of money at that point the Congress did not feel under any obligation to employ a given number of men. If it had, it would have so stated. It would have said, "You must employ so many men at a given rate," and then if there was not sufficient money appropriated there would be a deficiency.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman misunderstood me. What I intended to tell the gentleman was that if this appropriation were granted the representatives of the department said it would not mean the employment of additional men, but that, in any event, with this appropriation that there would be a reduction of men.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman will allow me to make a statement, applying it exactly to the situation referred to. If the Congress, as it did in this case, appropriated a certain sum of money for the navy yards, and a sum of money which would not keep employed for the year all of the men employed on the work for which the appropriation was made, it is perfectly patent that Congress intended that the force be reduced. If the Congress had not intended that the force be reduced it would have appropriated more money, in view of the fact that it would take more money to keep all of the men who were employed at the time the appropriation took effect employed for the entire year.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up the time of the committee unnecessarily.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Take this situation: The Congress appropriates for a department money with which to do certain work, which it did in this particular instance. Before the year expires, by reason of an advance in the cost of that work, the particular work can not be done within the appropriation, and the department comes to the Congress and tells it so.

Mr. MONDELL. There is a deficiency.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is this situation exactly.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman know the evidence is that it costs them two and a half times as much and that that is why they are here?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Here is a member of the committee who affirms that statement.

Mr. MONDELL. Not at all. I wish the gentleman from South Carolina would stick to his original line of argument. He argued just a moment ago that what they desired to do here was to do work that they had not anticipated doing, and he read from a statement that was made that they found there were ships that needed repairs that they had not intended to repair.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman would do me an injustice.

Mr. MONDELL. I am doing the gentleman no injustice.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I read the statement of Secretary Roosevelt, but I did not say, it is true, that the hearings show, as they do, through Admiral Taylor and Admiral Parks, that the cost of repairing ships to-day is two and a half times as great as it was when this amount of money was asked for. They gave other reasons, and I did not mean, by failing to state all the reasons given for the deficiency, to exclude them.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, nothing of that kind was presented.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman say it was not presented in the hearings?

Mr. MONDELL. I can not yield. The gentleman may make his argument if he desires to present it, and the Chair will listen to him. That is not the situation. No gentleman has made that argument, and it would not be conclusive if it were made, although that is one of the factors that have to do with the question of a deficiency, but it is only one of the factors. It is not a controlling factor by any manner of means. The Secretary was asked directly whether it was a deficiency and he said it was not a deficiency in his opinion, and it is not.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. What did the Congress do in this case? Congress appropriated a certain sum of money for this work in the navy yards, and when that money was appropriated it was apparent to everybody that it would be impossible to employ all the men then employed in all the navy yards the entire year for that sum of money and keep them busy. Gentlemen here who are now pleading for more money, if they felt it their duty to keep all these men employed, should have asked for an increased appropriation at that time.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. That was the time to secure an appropriation sufficiently large to keep the war force of the navy yards going in time of peace. Of course, gentlemen know perfectly well that if they had made that statement before the House and had endeavored to increase the appropriation on that argument they would not have gotten anywhere [applause], because the House would not have agreed that we must keep the war force at work continuously in time of peace.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Let me finish the line of argument I was upon.

Mr. DUPRÉ. All right.

Mr. MONDELL. What did the Congress do? It appropriated a certain sum of money. It knew perfectly well at the time it appropriated the money it was not going to be sufficient to keep all the men in the navy yards busy the entire year. That is patent to everyone who is familiar with the facts. Further, the Congress must have known that that sum of money would not repair all the ships in the Navy that might have been injured or put out of commission during the war. No one made any argument in favor of an appropriation that would unquestionably repair all the ships. Congress appropriated a certain amount of money for that purpose, with the expectation that it would go as far as it would. [Applause.] And it would do just as much as could be done with that amount of money and no deficiency is created.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. When the Secretary comes before the House and says, "We have found that there are some ships that we did not have in mind, that we had not thought about, that we would like to have repaired in these navy yards——

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MONDELL. It does not change the situation because the gentlemen living in the vicinity of navy yards, and anxious to help us reduce the expenditures in the other lines, are insisting that these navy yards shall be continued in full force at the highest price, no matter what economy is practiced elsewhere. [Applause.]

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the point of order.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Is it not a fact that during last September Secretary Roosevelt is quoted in these hearings as having said that there was no deficiency, and this selfsame Appropriation Committee brought in here a deficiency appropriation of $10,000,000, and it only failed because of a conflict between the Senate and the House?

Mr. MONDELL. They were misled at that time by the Navy Department; they have learned better since then.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Briefly.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I only want to set myself straight——

Mr. MONDELL. I can not yield; the House is becoming impatient.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I simply want to say——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming has the floor.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. But he yielded to me.

Mr. MONDELL. This is not a question of an anticipatory deficiency or an anticipated deficiency. It is not a deficiency at all. It is a request for an additional sum of money for a purpose for which Congress has already appropriated, and it is simply an effort to increase the general appropriation for this purpose under the guise of a deficiency. It does not belong on this bill. [Cries of "Rule!"]

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. TINKHAM. I desire to discuss the question of germaneness. [Cries of "Rule!"]

Mr. Chairman, I have certain authorities which I desire to submit to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman briefly in closing.

Mr. TINKHAM. I desire to bring to the attention of the Chair a reference to Hinds', 5910:

On January 31, 1899, the bill (H. R. 11022) for the reorganization of the Army was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and Mr. William P. Hepburn, of Iowa, offered as a new section or paragraph prescribing frequent target practice by enlisted men and providing for the giving of medals for the best records.

Hon. James Hay, of Virginia, made the point of order that the amendment was not germane to the bill.

After debate Chairman Sereno E. Payne, of New York, overruled the point of order.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if in a bill reorganizing the Army it is germane to offer a new section prescribing frequent target practice, then, after listening to the honorable Representative from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT], showing that the purpose of my amendment is for the exact purposes as covered by the item now contained under yards and docks, it seems to me absolutely impossible for the Chairman to rule that it is not germane.

Now, I want to bring to the attention of the Chair another example from Hinds', 5912:

On January 27, 1903, the House as in Committee of the Whole was considering a bill (S. 2387) to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States, when Choice B. Randall, of Texas, offered the following amendment:

"That it shall be unlawful for any of the judges of the United States court to accept or receive any gifts, free transportation, or frank from any corporation or person engaged in operating any railroad, steamboat line, express, or telegraph company. Any violation of this provision shall be punished by a fine not less than $100 and not exceeding $5,000."

Hon. John J. Jenkins, of Wisconsin, made the point of order that the amendment was not germane.

After debate, the Speaker, David B. Henderson, of Iowa, said:

"This question is one that troubles the Chair a little, but when we consider that this bill deals not only with the salaries but also with the subject of expenses, the issuing of passes, franks, and other things that keep down the expenses would seem to be germane. At all events, the Chair will overrule the point of order and admit the amendment of the gentleman from Texas."

Now, Mr. Chairman, in closing I, of course, admit that it is a question of relativity absolutely when the question of germaneness of an amendment is raised, but on the particular amendment under discussion I want to draw to the attention of the Chair that the question he is to decide is a most important question on which there are no precedents of exact application, and that his decision involves vitally the rights and liberties of this House. I adjure him to make no narrow decision and to give no contracted construction to a matter of this importance. For by his decision he may bind this House by restraining bonds which gravely imperils its right of action and decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] offers to amend, on page 18, after line 20, by inserting the following:

Maintenance Bureau of Yards and Docks: For general maintenance of yards and docks, including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $2,500,000.

To this the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] makes the point of order that it is not germane, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] makes the point of order that it is not a deficiency.

First, taking up the question of deficiency, it appears that the Secretary of the Treasury, under date of December 18, 1919, transmitted supplemental estimates of appropriations required by the Navy Department and Naval Establishment for the service of the current fiscal year. In this estimate is an item as follows:

Bureau of Yards and Docks: For general maintenance of yards and docks.

Then follows the exact words of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM]. The total amount asked to be appropriated under this item of the estimates was $2,500,000. The amount appropriated under this item in the last Navy appropriation bill was $7,500,000.

It is urged that at a hearing on this bill the Assistant Secretary of the Navy admitted that it was not a deficiency. The Chair has examined the hearings in this regard carefully, as he has examined the estimates and as he has examined the section of the bill in connection with which this amendment is offered. It is not an easy matter for the Chair to determine what is a deficiency, but from such examination as the present occupant of the chair has been able to give the subject, he is constrained to hold that in the parliamentary sense of the term "deficiency" this is a proper item to be brought in on a deficiency bill, and in order as an amendment, provided that it be germane.

Turning next to the question of germaneness, the Chair heard with interest the argument of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] and of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], two of the ablest parliamentarians in the House and whose opinions the Chair regards very highly. On this occasion, however, the Chair is unable to follow these gentlemen to the logical conclusion of their argument. It seems to the Chair that if he should follow their reasoning in his ruling it might become a very dangerous precedent for the House to follow. It would enable any Member of the House at any time when a deficiency appropriation bill is pending to arise and offer an amendment for an appropriation for any conceivable activity of the Government authorized by law. If it could be shown that a deficiency exists, it would be in order, according to the reasoning of the gentlemen, and would force consideration of a new subject without its having been referred to a committee, without its having been considered by a committee, and without the House having any notice whatever in advance of the consideration of such an item. The Chair is unwilling to follow the judgment of the gentlemen to that extent. The Chair is willing, rather, to follow the precedent set by Mr. Carlisle, when he made the ruling referred to in an earlier ruling to-day, to the effect that the committee having proper jurisdiction of a matter does have a right to bring in matters that no Member from the floor would have a right to bring in as an amendment.

The question here is whether this particular amendment is germane to this bill. In the naval appropriation bill, now current law, under the heading of "Bureau of Yards and Docks," appears the item "Maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks," and then follows language embodying the same substance as the language contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM]. To that paragraph was appended a proviso, which the Chair will read:

Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for clerical, inspection, drafting, messenger, and other classified work in the navy yards and naval stations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, shall not exceed $1,500,000.

The Committee on Appropriations has reported in this bill a paragraph for the purpose of changing this limitation, increasing it by $400,000, which means that out of an appropriation of $7,500,000 made in the current naval appropriation bill, instead of $1,500,000 being used for the purposes indicated in the limitation, under this bill $1,900,000 may be used. One reason given by the Chair in the ruling which has been referred to several times to-day was that the House should not be taken by surprise, and that in all reasonable ways the membership of the House should be put on notice as to what business is to be transacted.

The Chair still adheres to that ruling. The Chair, after hearing all the able arguments made to-day, still believes that his ruling, made on that occasion, was sound, and he intends to adhere to it in this ruling. So far as that portion of the former ruling has a bearing upon the present point of order, the question is whether this amendment could properly be said to take the House by surprise. What is the amendment? It is proposed to insert in this bill the substance of the very language of the paragraph which is now in the law and to which the very limitation in which this bill seeks to make a change is attached as a proviso. It seems to the Chair that this committee having inserted in this bill a limitation to a paragraph in the current law which makes an appropriation, and having sought to change that limitation, which would change the amount of the appropriation therein made that may be used for certain purposes, surely there can be no question as to the germaneness of an amendment which is not only related to but which embodies the substance of the original appropriating paragraph. There could be no question of surprise. If anyone has read the limitation in the current law, which it is sought to change in this bill, he has surely read the paragraph in the law to which it is a limitation and that paragraph is the substance of the proposed amendment. Surely it can not be contended that it is not germane when it is sought to insert as an amendment the language to which the limitation now in the bill for the purpose of being modified is a proviso of limitation in the current law. Therefore, believing that this amendment is germane to the provisions already in the bill and that it does not introduce a subject different from that under consideration in the bill, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, may I propound a parliamentary inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRISP. There is no way that I know of whereby anyone can appeal from any particular part of the decision of the Chair, but I would like to make this parliamentary inquiry: In the opinion of the Chair is it within the province of the Chair to decide whether an amendment offered by a Member from the floor is a surprise or not? And if it is not a surprise he will permit a Member of the House to offer an amendment, but if the Chair decides that such an amendment is a surprise to the House he will rule against the offering of such an amendment? Is that the effect of your decision just rendered?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that in the case of an amendment which is germane to anything in the bill and which does not contemplate the introduction of a new subject under color of an amendment, the Chair will hold it to be in order.

Mr. CRISP. The Chair stated that it had first to be considered by the House committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think he made any such statement.

Mr. CRISP. I think, if the Chair will look at his notes he will find he did.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would not want to make such a statement. That is one of the things that might influence the Chair.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. It being marketing day, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman withhold that?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I simply desire to get an agreement as to the debate. Then I shall move that the committee rise.

Mr. BLANTON. I will withhold, but I would like the chairman to include me for five minutes.

Mr. GOOD. I want to see if we can agree with regard to the time that will be allotted for the debate on this amendment.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I want five minutes, and one of my colleagues wants five minutes.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have at least an hour and a half. It is a very important matter.

Mr. GOOD. I assume that there are going to be four other amendments to be offered in regard to this?

Mr. TINKHAM. Three.

Mr. GOOD. Three other amendments. They are of the same character, so far as the general discussion is concerned.

Mr. TINKHAM. That is correct.

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent that the time on the whole subject be confined to one hour.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, let me interrupt the gentleman from Iowa simply to ask him if every Member on this floor who is interested in navy yards has not the right to offer an amendment appropriating money in some degree for this very identical purpose; and, if that is so, whether that would take a considerable time?

Mr. GOOD. I was going to make this unanimous-consent request, that the time for debate on this whole subject be limited to one hour, the gentleman from South Carolina to control 40 minutes in favor of the amendments, and I will control 20 minutes opposed to it.

Mr. BLANTON and Mr. MILLER objected.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the entire time to be given to the discussion be limited to an hour and a half, to be equally divided between those for the amendments and those opposed; that the gentleman from South Carolina shall control the time in favor of the amendments and that I shall control the time for those opposed to the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. CALDWELL. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. WALSH. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. I object.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important question, a question that, I think, a great many of the Members, especially those that have employees in yards in their districts, are interested in. It involves about $9,300,000. I think there ought to be a limited time for debate. Personally, I shall oppose the amendments, and I do now oppose them. I do not think that these amendments ought to carry, and therefore I move that all time for debate on the amendments be limited to 1 hour and 30 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to withdraw his motion. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. We can not reach any agreement, and there is no use in wasting further time.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12046, the second deficiency bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether we are to take up this bill on next Monday or Tuesday. I understand the gentleman from Iowa is going to make a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. GOOD. No; I do not intend to make a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. The Unanimous Consent Calendar will come up on Monday, but there is only about a page, and the Chair would think that it would not take more than an hour or two, and then the Chair would recognize the gentleman from Iowa if he desires recognition.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks on this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO THE NAVAL ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following appointments to the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy:

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, Mr. VARE, Mr. KRAUS, Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina, and Mr. KETTNER.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, the following leave of absence was granted:

To Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee, for 10 days, on account of important business.

ENFORCEMENT OF THE IMMIGRATION LAWS.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the enforcement of the immigration laws.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the enforcement of the immigration laws. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, in a speech made in this House on January 23, 1920, on the enactment and enforcement of immigration laws necessary to the protection of America as the home of Americans, among other things, I said:

> The history of the dealings of Congress with immigration is the record of difficulties caused by shipowners, contract-labor importers, and other obstructions embarrassing all efforts to protect the country against incoming criminals, prostitutes, paupers, and anarchists.
>
> In the record of this House and reports of committees and joint committees, and commissions created by both Houses, I have not found one statement that these laws are generally and effectually enforced. Again and again in the record of a period of more than 40 years is found the complaint of the violations or evasions of contract-labor laws.
>
> Just now your committee is besieged with appeals from industrial employers not to close the door against incoming labor. This fact, considered with the other facts, should advise American labor that these people are still to be brought here to take their places. The interests of labor require that it be protected from the importation of an endless supply of European pauper labor.
> Gentlemen, this problem needs the thoughtful, practical attention of Congress and the country. I am making this statement to bring this serious situation before you and the people. When I became a Member of this body I resolved to do something more than talk about this momentous question, with its bearing upon us and our children who are to succeed us. I sought and obtained a place on the committee which has this subject in charge and have attended every meeting of the committee. As a member of the subcommittee I spent several days in New York, the port through which most of these immigrants enter the country, studying the problem there and seeking to provide a remedy for it. I shall continue to give my best thought, attention, and labor to it and urge upon the committee, upon Congress, and upon the country such measures as will save our country from threatened ruin by the changing of America from a home for Americans to a Babylon of strange voices, strange faces, strange un-American ways, a place from which the spirit of America has taken its departure—another Europe, another Orient.

Since I used the language quoted the attack upon our immigration laws has intensified. For several days now a large delegation have been before the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization asking that the laws be suspended or modified so as to admit to Texas approximately 200,000 pauper laborers annually and a corresponding number to neighboring States. The delegation consist of plantation owners, a labor agent for several large beet-sugar manufacturing corporations located in some 10 different States, sulphur-mine owners, lawyers, and others representing various interests. Coal-mine owners join in the request. As first proposed the measure would have admitted them only to Texas, Arizona, and New Mexico. A substitute or amendment was then proposed which would have extended the proposition to several other States. Still later it was proposed to give it still wider range, both as to the territory to be affected and the sources from which the immigrant laborers were to be admitted. All of them wanted several hundred thousand admitted annually by the suspension or removal of the literacy test, the $8 head tax, and the labor-contract law. One attorney from New York said he represented certain farming interests of the Southwest, but could not, or would not, tell the committee what or how many farms he represented or the names of the owners.

I am reliably informed that a delegation on the same mission have been before the Senate Committee on Immigration for several days.

As a Member of the House and its Immigration Committee, I am actively opposing the proposition for several reasons, among which are the following:

I know from first-hand knowledge that interested men and corporations are now clamoring for pauper labor from Europe, China, Mexico, and elsewhere, and that these special interests are strong enough in congressional votes and influence to make the clamor a very dangerous one. Many Members represent constituencies a majority of which is of foreign birth and the first generation children of such. Others represent great city or manufacturing districts. Many, for these or other reasons which seem to them sufficient, are opposed to all restriction of immigration. This demand for pauper labor has been heeded too much during the past 20 years. The story is always substantially the same. "We need the labor. The people we want are harmless. Do not let in the undesirable, but let in the ones we want."

If the law is broken down for accommodation of one class or section it will, of course, be destroyed for other classes and sections. The question is whether we shall maintain our immigration laws, at a time when their maintenance is more than ever necessary, or shall now weakly surrender them to give these and other men and interests pauper labor. With me, the question answers itself.

These Mexicans are very ignorant, degraded, and undesirable as citizens. One of these gentlemen said before the committee that the Mexicans were better as citizens than "poor white trash," by which I think he meant very poor white working people. I have known white people in the lowliest condition during my entire life, but I have never known any that as a class were not infinitely better as citizens or otherwise than average Mexicans.

I know that as a class Mexicans do not make good citizens. Let honest man and women reflect on what they have known in the past about politics in certain sections where these "good citizens" held the balance of political power. If 200,000 of these people are admitted to Texas annually they will soon become so numerous that they will swing the balance in close and vital contests, and cause Texas to turn her face backward toward things that are now hateful to most Texans.

The official figures show that 2 out of every 3 of these people who have come into Texas under war emergency orders during the last two and one-half years have not returned to Mexico. These figures are too small because of the admitted fact that tens of thousands were smuggled across by swimming the Rio Grande. In the vernacular of southwest Texas, they are called "wet backs." More than one of these gentlemen frankly, and with apparent pride, admitted that he had paid labor brokers so much per head for these "wet backs" delivered into his custody on the Texas side, a safe distance from immigration stations and officials. One explained that in order to keep them from running away while indebted to him for the price paid for their delivery, and for other advances, the employers had kept their shoes and trousers from them at night. Many similar side-lights were thrown on the character of these people and the manner of dealing with them, but they were all in line with what all Texas and all informed people have known about them since the people of Texas first came in contact with them in the days of Santa Anna and Sam Houston, in the days of the Alamo, Goliad, and San Jacinto.

Our immigration laws are going to be subjected to a severe strain during the next few years. The outside world is full of poverty-stricken human beings whose labor many special interests want. America has what a hungry world wants, a meal to satisfy its hunger. I pity suffering men and women everywhere, but I want our country preserved for a home for ourselves and our children. My position is fixed.

I did not object to any temporary emergency measure necessary to win the war, even to the admission of a comparatively few of these laborers while the boys were away, but this is a question of permanent peace policy, a question whether we shall save America as a home for these same boys, their brothers, their sisters, and their sweethearts.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 3779. An act to authorize the Ozark Forest road improvement district of Baxter County, Ark., to construct and maintain a bridge across the White River near Norfolk, Ark.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3418. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the lading or unlading of vessels at night, the preliminary entry of vessels, and for other purposes," approved February 13, 1911.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, February 2, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting as chairman of the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission a clause of proposed legislation to permit the acquisition of 47,708.50 square feet of land not now included within the taking lines (H. Doc. No. 639); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the president of the Capital Traction Co., transmitting report of the Capital Traction Co. for the year ending December 31, 1919; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of proposed legislation authorizing the relief of certain disbursing officers; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of proposed legislation to provide for the relief of members of the United States Naval Reserve Force who were given temporary appointments in the Regular Navy prior to July 1, 1918; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

5. A letter from the President of the East Washington Heights Traction Railroad Co., transmitting a report of that company for the year ending December 31, 1919; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

6. A letter from the president of the Georgetown Gas Light Co., transmitting a detailed statement of the business of the Georgetown Gas Light Co., together with a list of stockholders, for the year ended December 31, 1919; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. McKENZIE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3037) to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer free of charge certain surplus motor-propelled vehicles and motor equipment to the Department of Agriculture, Post Office Department, Navy Department, and the Treasury Department for the use of the Public Health Service, and certain other surplus property to the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 593), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FORDNEY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12193) providing for the relief of populations in Europe and in countries contiguous thereto suffering for the want of food, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 594), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 2, 1920.

Rev. John Paul Tyler, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Command Thy benediction upon us, we beseech Thee, O Lord, God of our fathers, Lord of all the earth, as we enter upon the activities of this new day and this week. Grant us grace to look to Thee for wisdom and guidance, that with unselfish devotion to the cause of Thy righteousness in the earth we may give ourselves to the tasks before us.

We beseech Thy blessing upon our Nation, upon our world. We pray for the President of our United States, that if it be Thy gracious will he may soon be restored to perfect strength and health again. For every home represented here, for the loved ones wherever they may be, we pray Thy blessing, O Lord. So lead us and guide us, and keep us true and faithful unto Thee, that at last when we come into Thy presence we may hear Thy voice saying, "Well done." And this we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. LODGE and by unanimous consent the reading of the Journal of Saturday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Monday next, February 9, one week from to-day, I shall ask unanimous consent to suspend Rule XIII with a view of taking up the treaty with reservations. I trust unanimous consent will certainly be given, but in case it should not I give the necessary notice for suspending Rule XIII.

Mr. POMERENE. I did not hear the date the Senator named.

Mr. LODGE. Monday, February 9—one week from to-day.

Mr. ASHURST. Why postpone it so long? Why not to-morrow or the next day?

Mr. LODGE. I did not do it without consideration. Many Senators are absent. I want to give them time to return, and so notice will be given.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the notice be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Mr. LODGE. I hereby give notice, in accordance with the provisions of Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, that on Monday, February 9, 1920, I will move to suspend paragraph 1 of Rule XIII, in order that the Senate may be given an opportunity to reconsider its final vote upon the resolution of ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany, including the covenant of a League of Nations, and the subsequent action taken to prevent a reconsideration of such vote.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, as I did not hear clearly, what he said. Is this simply a notice to suspend the rule?

Mr. LODGE. I said I should ask unanimous consent to suspend the rule with a view of bringing the treaty and reservations before the Senate, but if the request for unanimous consent was refused, as I sincerely hoped it would not be, I would then move to suspend the rule; and I gave the notice for that purpose.

Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD the letter of Lord Grey, which appeared in the papers yesterday.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Sunday, Feb. 1, 1920.]

LORD GREY DEFENDS AMERICAN RESERVATIONS; NO OBJECTIONS TO INCREASING UNITED STATES VOTE IN LEAGUE—"OUR OBJECT IS TO MAINTAIN STATES OF BRITISH DOMAINS," NOT TO OUTVOTE AMERICA, HE WRITES—SAYS SENATE HAS REASON AND RIGHT TO PREVENT COUNCIL REPRESENTATIVE COMMITTING COUNTRY TO ACTION OPPOSED BY CONGRESS—PRAISES AMERICAN PEOPLE'S SPIRIT.

LONDON, January 31.

Lord Grey of Fallodon, the British ambassador to Washington, now in England, has written the following letter to the London Times:

"Nothing, it seems to me, is more desirable in international politics than a good understanding between the democracy of the United States on one hand and democratic Great Britain and her self-governing dominions, and I hope we may add Ireland, on the other. Nothing would be more disastrous than misunderstanding and estrangement.

"There are some aspects of the position in the United States with regard to the League of Nations which are not wholly understood in Britain. I am in hope that as a result of my recent stay in Washington I may be able to make the position better understood. I venture to offer the following observations. They represent only my own personal opinion; nothing more. They are given simply as those of a private individual.

AMERICANS REGRET IMPASSE.

"In Great Britain and the allied countries there is naturally impatience and disappointment at the delay of the United States in ratifying the peace treaty and the covenant of the League of Nations. It is perhaps not generally recognized here that there is also great impatience and disappointment in the United States. Nowhere is the impasse caused by the deadlock between the President and the Senate more keenly regretted than in the United States, where there is a strong, even urgent, desire on the part of public opinion to see that a way out of that impasse be found which will be both honorable to America and helpful to the world.

"It will be well to understand the real difficulties with which the people of the United States have been confronted. In the clear light of right understanding, what seemed to be disagreeable features of the situation will assume a more favorable and intelligible aspect. Let us first get rid of one misunderstanding. No charge of bad faith or of repudiating signatures can be brought against the action of the United States.

POLITICS NOT SOLE DIFFICULTY.

"The Senate, by the American Constitution, is an independent body, an independent element in the treaty-making power. Its refusal to ratify the treaty can not expose either itself or the country to a charge of bad faith or of repudiation; nor is it fair to represent the United States as holding up the treaty solely from motives of party politics, thereby sacrificing the interests of other nations for this petty consideration.

"It is true that there are party politics and personal animosities in the United States. An American who saw much of England between 1880 and 1890 said that the present condition of politics in the United States reminded him of what he had observed in London when Gladstone had first advocated home rule for Ireland. Party politics and the personal animosities arising out of them operate in every democratic country. They are factors varying from time to time in degree, but always more or less active, and they operate upon every public question which is at all controversial. They are, however, not the sole or even the prime cause of the difficulty in the United States about the League of Nations.

REASONS FOR RESERVATIONS.

"Nor is it true to say that the United States is moved solely by self-interest to a disregard of higher ideals. In the United States, as in other countries, there are cross currents and backwaters in national life and motives. It would be well, therefore, for reasons both of truth and expediency, to concentrate on the real underlying causes of the Senate's reservations in ratifying the covenant of the League of Nations.

"There is in the United States a conservative feeling for traditional policy, and one of those traditions, consecrated by the advice of Washington, is to abstain from foreign, and particularly from European, entanglements. Even for nations which have been used to European alliances, the League of Nations is felt to be something of a new departure. This is still more true for the United States, which has hitherto held aloof from all outside alliances. The League of Nations is not merely a plunge into the unknown, but a plunge into something which its historical advice and traditions have hitherto positively disapproved. Hence this desire for some qualification and reservation.

GRAVE CLASH POSSIBLE.

"The American Constitution not only makes possible but under certain conditions renders inevitable a conflict between the Executive and the Legislature. It would be possible, if the covenant of the League of Nations stands, for a President in some future years to commit the United States, through its American representative on the council of the League of Nations, to a policy which the Legislature at that time might disapprove.

"That contingency is one which can not arise in Great Britain, where the Government is daily responsible to the representative authority of the House of Commons, and where, in case of conflict between the House of Commons and the Government, the latter must either immediately give way or public opinion must decide between them and assert itself by an immediate general election. But in the United States it is otherwise. The contingency is within the region of practical politics. They have reason and, if they so desire, the right to provide against it.

LEAGUE NEEDS AMERICA.

"What, then, may be fairly expected from the United States in this great crisis of world policy? For crisis indeed it is. If the participation of the United States was enormously helpful in securing victory in the critical months of 1918, its help will be even more essential to secure stability in peace. Without the United States present the League of Nations may become little better than a league of allies for armed self-defense against a revival of Prussian militarism or against the military sequel to bolshevism in Russia. Bolshevism is despotism, and despotisms have a tendency to become militarism, as the great French Revolution proved.

"The great object of the League of Nations is to prevent future war and to discourage from the beginning the growth of aggressive armaments which would lead to war. Without the United States it will have neither the overwhelming physical nor moral force behind it that it should have, or if it has physical force it will not have the same degree of moral force, for it will be predominantly a European and not a world organization, and it will be tainted with all the interracial jealousies of Europe.

DEFENDS AMERICAN PEOPLE.

"With the United States in the League of Nations war may be prevented and armaments discouraged, and it will not be in the power of the fretful nations of the world to disturb the general peace. With America outside the League of Nations the old order of things will be revived, old consequences will recur, there will again be some great catastrophe of war in which it will find itself compelled to intervene for the same reason and at no less or even greater cost than in 1917.

"It would be a mistake to suppose that the American people are prepared or wish to withdraw their influence in world affairs. Americans differ among themselves as to whether they could or ought to have entered the war sooner than they did. It is neither necessary nor profitable for foreigners to discuss this point now. What is common to all Americans and to all foreigners who know the facts is the unselfish, wholehearted spirit in which the American Nation acted when it came into the war.

NOT PLAYING SMALL PART.

"The immediate adoption of compulsory military service, and, even more, the rationing of food and fuel in these millions and millions of households over such a vast area—not by compulsion, but by purely voluntary action in response to an appeal which had no compulsion behind it—is a remarkable and even astonishing example of national spirit and idealism. That spirit is still there. It is as much a part of the nature and possibilities of the American people as any other characteristic.

"It would be a great mistake to suppose that because the citizens of the United States wish to limit their obligations they therefore propose to themselves to play a small part in the League of Nations. If they enter the league as a willing partner with limited obligations it may well be that American opinion and American action inside the league will be more fruitful than if they entered as a reluctant partner who felt that her hand had been forced. It is in this spirit, in this hope, and in this expectation that I think we should approach and are justified in approaching the consideration of American reservations. Difficulties and dangers which Americans foresee in it will probably never arise or be felt by them when they are once in the league; in the same way, the weakening and injury to the league which some of its best friends apprehend from American reservations would not be felt in practice.

SHOULD ACCEPT CONDITIONS.

"If the outcome of the long controversy in the Senate will be to offer cooperation in the League of Nations, it would be the greatest mistake to refuse that cooperation because of the conditions attached to it; and when that cooperation is accepted, let it not be accepted in a spirit of pessimism. The most vital considerations are that the representatives should be appointed to the council of the League of Nations by all nations that are members of the council; that the representatives should be men who are inspired by the ideals for which we entered the war, and that the representatives should be instructed and supported in that same spirit of equity and freedom by the Governments and the public opinion of the countries who are now partners in peace. If that be the spirit of the council of the League of Nations, fear that the representatives of the United States in that council will not take part in realizing the hopes of the league are unfounded.

"There is one particular reservation which must give rise to some difficulty in Great Britain and her self-governing dominions. It is that which has reference to the six British votes in the assembly of the League of Nations.

VOTES OF BRITISH DOMINIONS.

"The self-governing dominions are full members of the league. They will admit, and Great Britain can admit, no qualification whatever of that right. Whatever the self-governing dominions may be in theory and in the letter of the constitution, they have in effect ceased to be colonies in the old sense of the word. They are free communities, independent as regards all their own affairs, and partners in those which concern the empire at large.

"To any provision which makes it clear that none of those British votes can be used in a dispute likely to lead to a rupture in which any part of the British Empire is involved no exception can be taken. That is the only reasonable interpretation of the covenant as it now stands. If any part of the British Empire is involved in a dispute with the United States, the latter will be unable to vote, and all parts of the British Empire, precisely because they are partners, will be parties to that dispute and equally unable to vote. But as regards their right to vote where they are not parties to the dispute, there can be no qualification, and there is a very general admission that the votes of the self-governing dominions would in most cases be found on the same side as that of the United States.

"It must not be supposed that in the United States there is any tendency to grudge the fact that Canada and the other self-governing dominions of the British Empire have votes, but any person with the smallest understanding of public audiences must realize the feeling created by the statement that the United States, with several million more English-speaking citizens than there are in the whole of the British Empire, should have only one vote, while the British Empire has six votes.

"It may be sufficient to observe that the reservation of America does not in any way challenge the right of the self-governing dominions to exercise their votes, nor does it state that the United States will necessarily reject a decision in which those votes have been cast. It is therefore possible—I think it is even more than probable—that in practice no dispute will ever arise. Our object is to maintain the status of the self-governing dominions, not to secure a greater British than American vote, and we have no objection in principle to an increase of the American vote.

"GREY OF FALLODON."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I also ask to have printed in the RECORD the views of James Bainville, the well-known French authority on foreign affairs, on the subject of the reservations passed by the United States Senate to the peace treaty and the League of Nations.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN SENATE'S ACTION DISCUSSED—FRANCE, SAYS MR. BAINVILLE, FEELS THAT UNITED STATES' DESIRE FOR INDEPENDENCE IS REASON FOR RESERVATIONS BEING PASSED.

PARIS, FRANCE.

The views of James Bainville, the well-known French authority on foreign affairs, were recently obtained by a representative of the Christian Science Monitor on the subject of the reservations which had been passed by the United States Senate to the peace treaty and the League of Nations.

"I believe there must be a certain amount of curiosity in the United States," Mr. Bainville declared, "to know how the reservations on the peace treaty voted by the American Senate are considered in France. It goes without saying that the French Government is naturally rather embarrassed. It had expected or it had made others expect that the treaty would be ratified as it stood. It could not have acted otherwise out of courtesy to President Wilson and as a matter of policy. Had our Government expressed a doubt as to its ratification without reservations, it would have tended to have encouraged the opposition in the Senate, which was impossible to do without appearing to interfere in the internal affairs of the United States.

SITUATION UNDERSTOOD IN FRANCE.

"As for the attitude of the public, that is quite a different affair. The French people have been rather slow in understanding what was happening at Washington. To-day it understands the situation, and the general sentiment may be expressed, 'Well, those people are right.'

"An old proverb says 'A man's house is his castle.' This expresses the love of independence which exists so strongly in the hearts of all Frenchmen that they respect it in others. When President Wilson arrived in Paris last year and was received at the French Chamber of Deputies, he made a speech in which he said that the society of nations would exact of each of its adherents a sacrifice of part of its independence. These words caused a certain amount of surprise and displeasure here. The French had not given then much thought to the conditions of the league. Accustomed to alliances, the league appeared to them as a sort of alliance more extended than those already existing. But in an alliance one only contracts limited engagements to which it is necessary to remain faithful, otherwise each one is quite free to do as he likes.

COVENANT EXAMINED.

"Those persons who had been struck by the words of President Wilson then proceeded to examine the covenant, and they discovered that it went very far, indeed. Article 10, in particular, made us reflect. The obligation of defending against all aggressors the frontiers and liberty of other nations, even though they were in Jugo-Slavia or Afghanistan, was a prospect which far from enchanted many Frenchmen. Obliged, in order to guard the Rhine, to continue conscription and a standing army, we asked ourselves whether we would not be exposed, being the first one ready, to be the first to leave and to play, in some part, the rôle of 'soldiers of the League of Nations.'

"Therefore it appeared to us as most natural that the American Senate should pass reservations to article 10 along with other reservations. 'A man's house is his castle.' Whoever subscribes to unlimited or ambiguous engagements is no longer master at home. This is as true of the United States as of France. We have no right to interfere in the discussions which have broken out in the United States. But should you definitely adopt those reservations, France will see no objection to it. Independence is a word which the Americans are not alone in loving. And we understand that the Senate at Washington defended the rule of independence on our account as well as on that of the United States.

FRUITS OF VICTORY.

"But this point being accepted and the ground cleared, much still remains to be done. One must retain the fruits of the victory gained in common and insure the execution by Germany of the treaty she has signed. No one ignores the fact that she has signed it with the firm intention of avoiding her obligations and the consequences of her defeat, if she possibly can. The diplomatic incidents in the month of December are there to prove to us that the German people has neither reformed nor repented.

"An Italian thinker, familiar with history, who is accustomed to consider things with a clear perspective—Guglielmo Ferrero—wrote recently that Germany would only respect her given word on condition that she remained as weak as she was on November 11, 1918, when she had been obliged to lay down her arms, and that the Allies remained as united as they had been during the war. If these two conditions, which are in reality but one, are not fulfilled, Germany will strive to put everything into the melting pot again, and all the sacrifices made by the Anglo-Saxons and Latins will run the risk of being rendered absolutely useless.

NECESSITY OF WATCHING GERMANY.

"Here are, therefore, the two elements of the political situation: On the one hand, a very violent repulsion expressed by the reservations of the Senate to contract unlimited and undefined engagements, and, on the other hand, the necessity of watching Germany, of discouraging any idea of resistance, and of preventing the return of anything that might resemble even dimly her criminal aggression of 1914.

"This double reason leads one to conceive of a practical combination which would conciliate both the sentiments and traditions of the associated nations with their interests. These profoundly human and natural sentiments and traditions render impossible, or at least superficial and fallacious, all vast and ill-defined engagements, such as those implied by article 10. On the contrary, the interest of all the entente powers calls for engagements as limited as they are precise, in order to render their common victory as strong as possible.

"In order that the peace of Europe and of the world should be maintained, it is necessary and essential that Germany should be made powerless to disturb it. Experience has taught us that everything absurd or disagreeable that happens in the Balkans never becomes disastrous or turns into a universal conflagration unless Germany interferes with it, unless she feels herself sufficiently strong, sufficiently able to meddle in it successfully.

OBLIGATIONS TOO HEAVY.

"It is therefore not necessary to provide that the associated powers in the League of Nations should in all cases assume the obligation of interfering in all quarrels and complications in any part of the world. This obligation is far too heavy, and were it expressed upon paper and duly sealed by the great powers, it would remain a dead letter.

"But is it necessary to render this obligation superfluous whilst obtaining the desired result, viz: The tranquillity of humanity, by limiting the power of that great defaulter, Germany?

"To this end we wish and desire a sort of European league, the foundations of which have perhaps been laid in London by Mr. Clemenceau and Mr. Lloyd-George. This league would group all the occidental powers needed to guarantee the full execution of the treaty by the German Government and people. This engagement, essentially defined and limited, would be conformable to the spirit of the reservations passed by the American Senate. It would not entail any nation alienating independence or finding itself forced against its will into vague, far-away complications. This is why the United States could join such a league of guaranty without offending any of the political concepts which are honored in the land of George Washington."

SALE AND TRANSPORTATION OF WHEAT.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have a great many petitions and telegrams from people in my State with reference to a very important matter which concerns not only the people of North Dakota but of the entire Northwest. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed to explain it for not to exceed 10 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from North Dakota will proceed.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, on the 4th day of March, 1919, an amendment to the food law was enacted which will expire by limitation on the 1st day of June, 1920, if not sooner repealed. It is a law which provided for a sum of $1,000,000,000 for the Government of the United States to purchase wheat. It was believed by a great many people that the guaranteed price of wheat should be maintained, and a great many people feared that the price would go below the price which the Government had fixed for the year 1919. This, of course, proved not to be true.

It is a fact that there is a short crop of wheat throughout the entire world with the exception of the United States. Here we produce about 918,000,000 bushels, which gives us a surplus for exportation of a little more than 300,000,000 bushels.

The law was passed, the appropriation was made, but up to October of last year only 77,000,000 bushels had been purchased by the grain director, Mr. Barnes, which shows conclusively that the grain was being purchased by individuals or by corporations; that there was absolutely no need of this fund; that there was absolutely no need to appoint the grain director, because if the law of supply and demand had been permitted to operate, the price of wheat would have been much higher than it was up to the time when these hearings were held.

Mr. President, I do not wish unduly to criticize Mr. Barnes. He is a public official, and he has undoubtedly felt that it was his duty to keep down the price of wheat, because wheat is an article of food which nearly everyone must have.

Let me say at the outset, Mr. President, that if the farmers of the United States would give the wheat to the miller for nothing, if the farmers would haul their grain to the mill and not charge a single penny per bushel, there could not be a difference of more than 2 cents on a pound loaf of bread, based upon existing prices. I am making this statement in order to inform the public that it is not the price of the unmanufactured wheat which is the cause of the high price of bread.

I wish to read one telegram—although I have a great many of them, and I assume that my colleague has received a great many also—addressed to me—

BROCKET, N. DAK., February 1, 1920.

Please use all influence you have with Railroad Administration, and see if they will not furnish cars for grain loading. Elevator is full of grain, and we can not get cars.

EQUITY ELEVATOR & TRADING CO.,
By A. J. ANDERSON, Agent.

In this connection I wish to read a bulletin sent out by the grain corporations:

OFFICE OF THE GRAIN BULLETIN,
Minneapolis, Minn., January 28, 1920.
General letter, No. 8.

To subscribers:

The scarcity of cars in the Northwest demands the attention of the individual shipper. The large quantities of high-priced wheat at country points, the declining markets, and the short time left of Government control all tend to heavy financial loss to individual owners.

Every effort has been put forth to get cars into the Northwest without result. The only source of relief now is to wire your Senator and Representative at Washington, impressing on them this need of cars to prevent further loss to you, and asking them to take it up with the Railroad Administration immediately.

Yours, very truly,
THE GRAIN BULLETIN.

Mr. President, it is evident that there is a propaganda going on for the purpose of getting whatever grain may be left, at a much-reduced price, and it will be absolutely of no benefit to the consumers of bread because the price of flour will be based upon the high price paid for wheat.

I have here a map [exhibiting] which was prepared by the Secretary of Agriculture to which I wish to call the attention of Senators. I do not know that it is large enough for Senators to see it from their seats, but it shows that on the 1st day of November, or about the time when Mr. Barnes announced the embargo was to be withdrawn, wheat was worth $2.90 a bushel.

It shows that on the 15th day of November, when the embargo was withdrawn, wheat was $3 a bushel, and on the 15th of December it had advanced to $3.40 a bushel, and later on to $3.55 a bushel, showing that the embargo did affect the price of wheat. As Mr. Barnes stated before our committee, it was his purpose to keep it down. As I said, I am not criticizing him for it, because he was following the instructions of the President of the United States to keep down the price of wheat if possible; but I do object to a propaganda being conducted by officials of the Government and by the grain speculators to make combinations which will make it possible for the gamblers in grain to move all this grain or to ask that the grain shall be moved. Let me tell you that millions of bushels of this grain has been sold that can not be delivered on account of the shortage of cars.

What I desire to call to the attention of the Senate and of the country is that it is not true that wheat will decline after May 31. It is not true that wheat will decline on June 1 when the law expires by limitation. I am proving by this chart that the statement which I made to Mr. Barnes, who represents the Government, that wheat would advance when the embargo was removed was true. The map to which I have called your attention was prepared by the Department of Agriculture and not by myself.

The grain director has, according to his own admission, done everything in his power to keep down the price of wheat.

I have letters here on my desk charging that the same combination is going on with their manipulations; that cars are not furnished to the farmers of the country because it is desired that this wheat shall all flow to the big milling centers before June 1. They are trying to make the people believe that just as soon as the existing law expires wheat is bound to go down. I dissent from that statement. We know that all of Europe needs grain; that it needs more than we can supply.

Mr. President, my purpose is in the near future to introduce a bill to repeal this law. Let us get through with Government interference; let us do away with Mr. Barnes and let him go back to his own business. I received the other day from the Senator from Texas—I see him in his seat now—a letter calling attention to the fact that the grain business of Texas was being interfered with now by the Food Administration. That is a function which does not belong to the Food Administration any longer, and I thought we were about through with that; but they are still interfering. In connection with the propaganda carried on now to elect Mr. Hoover President of the United States, there is a movement for the purpose, I assume, of showing the women of the country what great efforts Mr. Hoover is making to cheapen the cost of bread.

Mr. President, let me tell you what will happen and let me tell you what has already happened. The reduction in the acreage sown to grain last fall was 40 per cent. What will happen to the spring-wheat crop under existing conditions? We are discouraging the wheat farmers from producing. We all know how difficult it is for them to get labor. Labor is costing them three or four times as much as it did before the war, and yet we are deliberately using a great Government agency to hamper and hamstring the grain industry of the country.

For one, Mr. President, I resent it. Let me say to you that in 1919 Mr. Barnes admitted before the committee of which I am chairman that he made for the United States more than $27,000,000 out of the grain business from the grain which he sold to the neutral countries of Europe, not a penny of profit being charged to our allies. I asked him whether they had charged the Allies any profit, and he said that was unthinkable.

Let me say to you—and I am talking now to the country as well as to the Senate—the wheat farmers of the United States have lost more than $2,000,000,000 because of governmental interference with wheat. I am having prepared, and some day this week I shall introduce, a bill to repeal this entire law.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, before my colleague takes his seat I desire to ask him if the trouble has not been rather in the administration of the law than in the law itself? The law itself provided that the $1,000,000,000 should be expended only in case, as a result of peace, the price of wheat should fall below $2.26 a bushel, or whatever price was agreed upon, leaving entirely to the law of supply and demand the receipt of any greater price; but, on the contrary, is it not true that the machinery of the Government, instead of being used to prevent the price from falling below that fixed by Congress, was used to prevent the price going any higher than the minimum price; and that, instead of giving us the benefit of the law of supply and demand, the whole billion dollars and all the efforts and all the machinery of the Government have been directed to hold the price down through a license system that would forbid any person dealing in grain if he paid the higher price fixed by the law of supply and demand?

Mr. GRONNA. I agree entirely with my colleague. I understand the law to be exactly as he has explained it. Let me say, however, in further reply to my colleague, that when Hoover appeared before the Agricultural Committee some of the members of our committee argued that we ought to fix a maximum price for grain, for wheat might go too high; but Mr. Hoover made a most bitter protest against that. He said he desired a minimum price fixed; he did not desire a maximum price; but the facts are as my colleague has stated. The minimum price has been made the maximum price and an injustice has been done to the people of the country. Not only that, but there has been a betrayal of the confidence of the Members of the Senate, for we took Mr. Hoover's word; we at no time suspected that he would go back on his word and make the minimum price the maximum price.

I ask unanimous consent that a letter addressed to me, relating to this subject, may be printed in the RECORD, together with the extract from the Market Record referred to therein.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

DEVILS LAKE, N. DAK., January 30, 1920.

Senator A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Am inclosing you a copy of the Market Record for January 29. Wish you would note the lines in italic. I can not get away from the idea that there is a conspiracy by Government agencies to make us northwestern wheat farmers deliver our wheat at about the Government price. If they can hold it back till after June 1, it is a cinch that they will do it, too, as new crop prospects will then come into play. The embargo on rye shipments, according to this, is again into play. They let up till they unloaded what they had squeezed out of the farmers at $1.30 and they let the price come up to $1.85. But now the embargoes are again used and rye prices have declined 20 cents. The farmers who had rye could not get it to market, as there were no cars available. You may think I am a good deal of a nuisance with this grain price business, but we have no one to go to but our Representatives in Washington, as there is where things are being run from under present arrangement. I wired you for the Farmers' Grain Co. this evening on the car shortage and asked that you take the matter of car supply for the Northwest up with the Railroad Administration. We also sent a copy to Senator McCUMBER. Thanking you for anything you may be able to do in the matter, I am,

Yours, truly,

* * * * * * *

[Extract from Daily Market Record, Minneapolis, Jan. 29, 1920.]

"The decline in rye was mostly due to lack of foreign demand, resulting from the eastern embargoes on shipment to the seaboard, but there was also weakness shown as a result of sympathy with wheat. Minneapolis rye declined 7½ cents during the week and advanced 9⅝ cents from last year's price; Duluth declined 8½ cents during the week and advanced 8⅝ cents over last year; Chicago declined 9 cents, Omaha 7 cents, and Milwaukee 9 cents from the week before, and gained 4 cents, 26 cents, and 7 cents, respectively, from last year."

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WARREN. I present a joint memorial of the special session of the Fifteenth Legislature of the State of Wyoming, favoring further benefits and relief for permanently disabled veterans of the World War. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE STATE OF WYOMING,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Wyoming, ss:

I, W. E. Chaplin, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed copy of original Senate joint memorial No. 1 of the special session of the Fifteenth Legislature of the State of Wyoming has been carefully compared with the original enrolled joint memorial No. 1 filed in this office, and is a full, true, and correct transcript of the same and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 29th day of January, A. D. 1920.

[SEAL.]

W. E. CHAPLIN,
Secretary of State.
By H. M. SYMONS,
Deputy.

Enrolled joint memorial No. 1, senate, special Fifteenth Legislature of the State of Wyoming.

Memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, requesting Congress to hasten the bureau of compensation and department of vocational training in assisting permanently disabled veterans of the late war.

Whereas it has come to the knowledge and observation of the members of both houses of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, both of which concur herein, that there are many veterans of the World War now resident in this State who have become totally and permanently disabled by reason of wounds or disease contracted while in the service of the United States; and

Whereas these veterans are now wholly dependent upon friends and relatives for support and maintenance and are receiving but a small proportion of the compensation and attention which is due them under the Federal law by reason of the dilatory procedure of the department of vocational training and the bureau of compensation and war-risk insurance; and

Whereas it is the belief of both houses of this legislature that the needs and requirements of said disabled veterans should be given the most prompt attention by reason of their patriotic sacrifices in the defense of their country: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Wyoming and the House of Representatives concurring, That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to authorize and direct immediate attention to the needs of the permanently disabled veterans of the World War in Wyoming and bring about speedy and absolute relief to them through the bureau of compensation and war-risk insurance and the department of vocational training; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN, Hon. JOHN D. KENDRICK, and Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL, Representatives in Congress from the State of Wyoming.

W. W. DALEY,
President of the Senate.
E. J. SULLIVAN,
Speaker of the House.

Approved,

ROBERT D. CAREY,
Governor.

JANUARY 28, 1920—9.25 p. m.

Mr. PHIPPS. I present a copy of a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Greeley, Colo., and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted at a special meeting of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Greeley, Colo., January 26, 1920.

"Whereas the progress and the safety of the world demand it; and

"Whereas in order that the vital interests of the United States and its nationals in Europe may be fully protected and the attention of our Government and our people may be concentrated upon our domestic problems, it is essential that the peace treaty be ratified immediately: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Greeley hereby urge the President and the Senate to take prompt action with respect to the treaty of peace with Germany, with such reservations as will fully safeguard every fundamental principle of the Government of the United States."

Mr. MYERS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Hill County, Mont., remonstrating against compulsory military training, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of N. P. Banks Post, No. 170, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of California, of Glendale, Calif., praying for the passage of the so-called Fuller pension bill, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Piedmont Post, No. 177, American Legion, of Piedmont, Calif., praying for the passage of the so-called Davey sedition bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ELKINS presented a memorial of the Rotary Club of Parkersburg, W. Va., and a memorial of the Rotary Club of Moundsville, W. Va., remonstrating against the so-called Kahn bill, transferring surplus war material from the War Department to other departments of the Government, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present a memorial from the Board of Commissioners of State Institutions of the State of Florida, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the organization of the United States Army subdivided into Regular Army, National Guard, and reserves. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8314) to provide for the training of officers of the Army in aeronautic engineering, and the issue of equipment and materials therefor, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 409) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following joint resolutions, reported them each without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 128) relating to schools and libraries at Army posts (Rept. No. 410); and

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 222) authorizing the Secretary of War to dispose of surplus dental outfits (Rept. No. 411).

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 98) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant revocable licenses for the removal of sand from the Fort Douglas Military Reservation for industrial purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 412) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PHIPPS:

A bill (S. 3829) making an appropriation for the investigation of underground currents, particularly shallow underground waters, and artesian wells in eastern Colorado; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 3830) for the relief of John H. Fesenmeyer, alias John Wills; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3831) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a post-office building at New Rockford, N. Dak.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 3841) to provide for the segregation and proper care of the men of the United States Army and Navy afflicted with mental and nervous maladies; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 3842) granting a pension to Anna Mansfield Sherman (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

INTER-AMERICAN HIGH COMMISSION.

Mr. FLETCHER. I introduce a bill to amend the act approved February 7, 1916, entitled "An act providing for the maintenance of the United States section of the International High Commission."

The bill (S. 3828) to amend the act approved February 7, 1916, entitled "An act providing for the maintenance of the United States section of the International High Commission," was read twice by its title.

Mr. FLETCHER. In this connection, as well as in connection with what has already been said, I wish to call attention just for a few minutes to the scope and purpose of this whole movement and organization.

In the statement which I have submitted in connection with the amendments to the diplomatic and consular bill reference is made to the very admirable address delivered by Dr. John Bassett Moore, vice president of the central executive council of the International High Commission, at the recent conference here. I am not asking that that address be printed in the RECORD. I expect later on, however, to ask that it be made a Senate document, because it contains some very valuable information, not only enlightening as to the work that is being done by this conference and by the International High Commission, but as showing the very great progress being made in creating better conditions and better understandings and closer relations with all our Latin American friends. I shall ask, as I say, a little later on to have that address made a Senate document. For the present I refer to it in connection with the bill which I have just introduced and the amendments to the diplomatic and consular bill. I ask to have the bill referred to the Judiciary Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That reference will be made.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to refer to just a few points that Dr. Moore made on this occasion. In that address he mentions that—on March 12, 1915, while the Great War, daily increasing in intensity, was drawing the world more and more into its vortex, the American Governments were, in the name of the President of the United States, invited to send delegates to a conference with the Secretary of the Treasury at Washington, with a view to establish "closer and more satisfactory financial relations between the American Republics." To this end it was intimated that the conference would discuss not only problems of banking, but also problems of transportation and of commerce.

It thus came about that there assembled in Washington on Monday, May 24, 1915, under the chairmanship of the Hon. William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, the first Pan American financial conference.

The subjects submitted to the conference embraced public finance, the monetary situation, the existing banking system, the financing of public improvements and of private enterprises, the extension of inter-American markets, the merchant marine, and improved facilities of transportation.

During this conference the subject of a program for future work was referred to a committee, and that committee reported back making recommendations which were unanimously adopted, and this program was agreed on, embracing:

1. The establishment of a gold standard of value.
2. Bills of exchange, commercial paper, and bills of lading.
3. Uniform (a) classification of merchandise, (b) customs regulations, (c) consular certificates and invoices, (d) port charges.
4. Uniform regulations for commercial travelers.
5. Measures for the protection of trade-marks, patents, and copyrights.
6. The establishment of a uniform low rate of postage and of charges for money orders and parcels post between the American countries.
7. The extension of the process of arbitration for the adjustment of commercial disputes.

For the purpose of dealing with these subjects, and particularly for bringing about uniformity of laws concerning them, the committee recommended the establishment of an International High Commission, to be composed of not more than nine members, resident in each country, to be appointed by its minister of finance. The aggregate members thus appointed were to constitute the International High Commission, of which the members resident in each country were to form the national section for that country.

* * * * * * *

The establishment of the International High Commission was a measure of the greatest practical significance. In 1889 there met at Washington the first of the assemblies known as the International American Conferences, of which four have so far taken place and of which the fifth, but for the outbreak of the war in 1914, would long since have been held.

* * * * * * *

But the International American Conferences had one capital defect. They lacked a permanent organization to carry on their work; hence, although they formulated many excellent and far-reaching plans and concluded numerous treaties and conventions, yet after they adjourned there was no one to follow up their resolutions and endeavor to secure their ratification and execution.

The want of such a permanent body was supplied by the creation of the International High Commission, the United States section of which received legislative sanction by the act of Congress of February 7, 1916.

In conformity with the resolutions of the first Pan American Financial Conference, the United States section in due time proceeded to Buenos Aires, where, in April, 1916, the International High Commission held its first general meeting under the presidency of the Hon. Francisco J. Oliver, Argentine minister of finance. All the national sections of the International High Commission were represented at this meeting, more than 70 of its members being in attendance. Nothing could more clearly attest the general interest felt in the work or the universal appreciation of its practical importance.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I am sure the Senator would like, as well as other Senators, to reach the calendar under Rule VIII this morning; and if it is going to take too much time for the Senator to read this matter I shall be constrained to object, so that we can go on with the calendar.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want just a few minutes more to conclude. It would be unfortunate to drop it where it is, because it will take only a few minutes.

Dr. Moore further points out what was considered at Buenos Aires:

At Buenos Aires the commission, besides dealing with the subjects designated by the first Pan American Financial Conference for special treatment, also included in its deliberations the question of international agreements on uniform labor legislation; uniformity of regulations governing the classification and analysis of petroleum and other mineral fuels with reference to national development policies; the necessity of better transportation facilities between the American Republics; banking facilities, the extension of credit, the financing of public and private enterprises, and the stabilization of international exchange; telegraphic facilities and rates, and the use of wireless telegraphy for commercial purposes; and uniformity of laws for the protection of merchant creditors.

At Buenos Aires the International High Commission also took an important step in the further development of an effective organization. This was done by the creation of a common organ or agency, called the central executive council, consisting of a president, a vice president, a secretary general, and an assistant secretary general; and as Washington was unanimously designated as the headquarters of the International High Commission till its next general meeting, the chairman, vice chairman, and secretary of the United States section thus became the central executive council, with the responsibility of supervising, coordinating, and carrying on the commission's work.

The work has been steadily and energetically pressed. Valuable publications intended to elucidate and support the measures which the commission has in charge have been prepared, printed, and circulated, and appreciable progress has been made in securing the adoption of those measures. In these activities the central executive council has had the intelligent, hearty, and efficient cooperation of the several national sections, which have in many instances made admirable studies of the subjects under consideration.

Substantial ameliorations of methods of customs administration have been secured in various quarters. Regulations permitting sanitary visits outside regular hours, the simultaneous loading and unloading of cargoes, and the advance preparation of cargoes have been brought about in numerous countries.

Progress has been made with the adoption of a uniform statistical classification of merchandise, as recommended by the International High Commission at Buenos Aires. Six countries have already taken favorable action, and two more are understood to be on the point of so doing.

Every effort has been made to advance uniform legislation in regard to bills of exchange, checks, bills of lading, and warehouse receipts, and appropriate documentary material has been prepared and circulated on those topics.

In dealing with the subject of bills of exchange the International High Commission, taking into consideration the legal conceptions generally prevailing in the American countries other than the United States, and the opinions of their leading jurists, decided to recommend to those countries the adoption of The Hague rules of 1912, with certain modifications. This decision has been justified by the results. Already The Hague rules have been substantially incorporated in the codes of Brazil, Guatemala, Nicaragua, and Venezuela, and bills to the same effect have been introduced in at least four other countries. We seem to be rapidly approaching the time when, so far as concerns bills of exchange, there will, in effect, be only two systems in use in the Western Hemisphere, based, respectively, on The Hague rules of 1912 and the United States negotiable instruments act of 1916.

Bills have been introduced in the Congresses of Uruguay and Venezuela to incorporate into their commercial codes The Hague rules of 1912 in regard to checks.

In the Congresses of Argentina and Nicaragua measures have been introduced similar to the United States bills of lading act.

The commission has also been glad to observe a growing interest in the adoption of uniform legislation on the subject of warehouse receipts, as well as on that of conditional sales. The Peruvian Congress has lately enacted a law on the former subject, substantially based on the uniform warehouse receipts act in the United States, and a similar step has been under discussion in Argentina, Paraguay, and Uruguay.

Among those measures one of the most important is that bringing into operation the conventions adopted by the International American Conference at Buenos Aires in 1910 for the protection of patents and of trade-marks. By the latter convention the American Republics were divided into two groups, the southern and the northern. Of the southern group, Rio de Janeiro was designated as the official center, and of the northern, Habana; and at each of these capitals there was to be established an international bureau for the registration of trade-marks, so as to secure their international protection in the Americas. This treaty, so closely related to the interests of the countries concerned and not least to those of the United States, had lain dormant and unratified. The International High Commission took it up and brought about its ratification by the requisite number of Governments of the northern group, as a result of which the International Bureau of Habana is now open and in operation. It is hoped that a similar result may soon be attained in the southern group. Meanwhile it would seem to be worth while to consider whether, pending the establishment of the Rio bureau, an arrangement might not be made whereby the members of the southern group, which have ratified the convention, may gain the benefits of international registration by accepting the services of the bureau at Habana.

Another measure that has been vigorously pressed is the convention to facilitate the operations of commercial travelers. In a number of the American countries local taxes, practically prohibitive in amount, on the operations of such travelers, have for many years existed. The International High Commission, at its meeting at Buenos Aires, adopted a resolution containing the bases of uniform regulations for commercial travelers and their samples. Taking this resolution as a starting point, the central executive council drafted an international convention, which, after examination and revision, was submitted by the Department of State to the American Governments, looking to the substitution for all local taxes of a single national fee. This convention, which was first signed and ratified by the United States and Uruguay, has since been signed and ratified by four countries, and has been signed by three more. It is understood that five others are ready to sign, while yet others are still considering it, some of them apparently with favor.

Another measure preferentially dealt with, because of its significance for the future as well as for the present, is the treaty for the establishment of an international gold clearance fund. This treaty has a twofold object. It is designed not only to assure the safety of deposited gold and to avoid the necessity of its shipment when difficulties in transportation exist, but also to facilitate and stabilize exchange through the adoption of an international unit of account. The plan was very carefully studied by the International High Commission at Buenos Aires; and subsequently, through the cooperation of the central executive council with the Department of State at Washington, it was incorporated in a draft of a treaty. This draft has so far been signed with the United States by Paraguay, Guatemala, Panama, and Haiti, but it has been approved in principle by at least six other Republics, some of which are now actively considering its adoption. The treaty by its terms covers only the American nations; but it contains a principle, the discussion of which has lately attracted wide attention and which may prove to be of incalculable value to the world in the future.

I think that is a very important matter.

Nor should we overlook what has been accomplished in extending the practical acceptance of the principle of the arbitration of commercial disputes.

That has been put into effect in Argentina and some other countries, and I will not detail the explanation of how it operates through chambers of commerce. This matter which Dr. Moore mentions I want to call attention to:

So far as concerns the Treasury of the United States, the entire cost of the commission since it began its work in 1915, including the visit of the United States section to Buenos Aires in 1916, represents an annual average hardly equal to the cost of two large public dinners; and when I speak of expenditures I include not only salaries but furniture and equipment, stationery and printing, the use of the telegraph and the telephone, and expert assistance in law and in languages. The smallness of the expenditures, which is out of all proportion to the work actually done, is to be ascribed not only to the voluntary services rendered by individuals and by public bodies but also and in the main to the devotion of the permanent working force and the exceedingly moderate compensation of those who receive any.

Looking to the future, it may be affirmed that work such as that in which the International High Commission is engaged is of incalculable importance. The American Republics cover a vast area, with an aggregate population of almost 200,000,000. They represent all varieties of soil, of climate, and of resources. Not in any sordid sense, but in the sense of contribution to the comfort and convenience of all men, through sharing the benefits of what the earth produces, it may be said that the future lies with the Western Hemisphere, and that its development has just begun.

CROWN-LAND LEASES.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire it read?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I ask to have it read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 152) authorizing the appointment of a commission to confer with the Dominion Government or the provincial governments of Quebec, Ontario, and New Brunswick relative to the claims of the American interests now holding leases of Crown lands acquired prior to the passage of restrictive orders in council of the said Provinces was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas newsprint paper is a commodity of universal use and is indispensable in the educational process of modern civilization, and the paramount importance of a sufficient production of newsprint to supply the needs of the press of the United States is a self-evident proposition; and

Whereas practically the whole content of newsprint is composed of mechanical and chemical products of pulp wood, the supply of which in the eastern part of the United States is being rapidly exhausted by the growing demand, and the price of which is being advanced to unprecedented levels; and

Whereas the existing scarcity of pulp wood, and its threatened total exhaustion in the United States has become a matter of such grave concern to the paper industry, the users, and the manufacturers of forest products, the Federal Government, and the general public that the Forest Service, the lumber and pulp and paper associations, and the forestry authorities of the country are now formulating a broad and comprehensive national forest conservation and reforestation plan for early adoption; and

Whereas prior to the year 1910 American paper producers purchased and acquired leases of Crown lands in Canada for the purpose, with the knowledge and consent of the respective governments of these woodland Provinces, of cutting the wood on said leased limits, and shipping it to their paper mills in the United States; and

Whereas said leases by statutory provision conveyed to the lessees "all rights of property" to the wood cut on said limits, and American interests, confident of their rights so conveyed to them, did invest large sums of money in building piers, dams, and booms in the rivers flowing through their limits and in the erection of taking-out, wood-preparing, and shipping plants, and for many years, to wit, from about 1890 to 1910, particularly in the Province of Quebec, did cut the wood on said limits and ship it to their mills in the United States in large quantities, with full knowledge and free consent of the provincial government, and in strict accordance with "all rights of property" to them by statute conveyed, and during the same period did pay to the provincial government all prescribed fees and rentals; and

Whereas in the year 1910 the lieutenant governor of Quebec in council did issue an order prohibiting the exportation of pulp wood cut from Crown lands unless manufactured into lumber, pulp, or paper, thereby invalidating the rights of property by statute conveyed, and doing grievous and irreparable injury to said American interests by making valueless their large investments in river improvements and wood preparing and shipping plants, and by depriving said American interests of the wood to which they had been conveyed all property rights; and

Whereas said American interests did acquire and now hold leases of approximately 10,000 square miles of Crown lands in the Province of Quebec, being but 5 per cent of the wooded area of said Province, on which they have regularly paid all prescribed fees and rentals, which said area contains standing pulp wood estimated to aggregate about 32,000,000 cords, the annual growth and increment of which is estimated to amount to about 1,280,000 cords, or, if available for the use of American interests which own the leases of said 10,000 square miles of woodlands, sufficient in annual yield to relieve the present scarcity and prevent threatened exhaustion of pulp wood in the eastern part of the United States, to lower the cost of the raw material of the American newsprint industry, and to stabilize the price of newsprint paper to the consumer, besides assuring an additional supply of raw material that would justify investments for increased production and affording the relief needed while awaiting the results of a national policy of forest conservation and reforestation; and

Whereas the press of the United States, through its national organization, the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, has adopted resolutions urging such action by Congress as will restore the property rights of American interests to the wood on their leased limits in Canada, and particularly on the 10,000 square miles of Crown-land limits in Quebec, by them leased, and thus provide the raw material needed by American mills; and

Whereas similar restrictive orders in council are in effect in the Provinces of Ontario and New Brunswick: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to appoint a commission of five, and by appropriate authority to confer on this commission the right, on behalf of the administration and the Congress, to present to the Dominion Government or the provincial governments of Quebec, Ontario, and New Brunswick, as may be proper, the claims of the American interests now holding leases of Crown lands acquired prior to the passage of the several restrictive orders in council of the three Provinces aforesaid, and to negotiate with said Dominion Government, or with said provincial governments, the cancellation of said restrictive orders in council as they apply to Crown-land leases acquired by American interests prior to the passage of said restrictive orders; and be it further

Resolved, That in the event the cancellation of said restrictive orders in council can not be agreed to by mutual arrangement of the Governments of the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada, that said commission shall investigate, consider, and report to the Congress what action should be taken by the Congress that will aid in securing the cancellation of said restrictive orders in council, or their modification so that they may not continue to militate against the interests of the people of the United States who are now affected by them; and be it further

Resolved, That for the necessary expenses of said commission the sum of $50,000 be, and it is hereby, appropriated from the moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To what committee does the Senator ask to have this joint resolution referred?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is a joint resolution for the appointment of a committee of inquiry, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so referred.

INTER-AMERICAN HIGH COMMISSION.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I submit an amendment to H. R. 11960, which has been referred to the Foreign Relations Committee, and is known as the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill. The amendment proposes, on page 18, line 12, to strike out the word "international" and insert the word "inter-American." The change of the name of the Joint International High Commission was agreed upon at the international conference that recently took place here, and it is desired to change the name so as to avoid confusion. Instead of the Joint International High Commission, it is desired to make it the Joint Inter-American High Commission, and more clearly to define the purposes and scope of the commission.

Also, on page 13, line 18, it is proposed to strike out the word "State" and insert the word "Treasury." There is no essential diplomatic function to be performed by this commission at all. The whole plan originated with the Treasury Department, and the Secretary of the Treasury is the president of the whole Joint International Commission, and, of course, he is the chairman of the United States section of that commission. If anything grows out of the work of the commission leading toward the making of treaties or conventions, those matters will be taken up with the State Department, and that is the only time when the State Department has anything to do with the work. Consequently, it is a clear mistake to place the supervision of the expenditure of this appropriation in the hands of the State Department instead of in the Treasury Department, where it belongs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed.

Mr. FLETCHER. In the same connection, I submit a memorandum relating to the proposed amendment, prepared by Dr. McGuire, the assistant secretary general. It is not very long, and I should like to have it printed in the RECORD, because it is important not only for the Senate committee now considering the bill but also for the other branch of Congress when the bill comes before them.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Memorandum relating to the proposed amending of the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

"The Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1920–21 was passed by the House of Representatives on January 26. It was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations in the Senate on January 27.

"The bill contains an item of $25,000 for the maintenance of the United States section of the International High Commission. This is to be expended, according to the bill, under the direction of the Secretary of State.

"The commission was established in 1915 in accordance with recommendations of the first Pan American Financial Conference, held at Washington May 23–29, 1915, under authorization of law contained in an act approved March 4, 1915. It was intended to be a nondiplomatic and technical body, comprising one section each of the American Republics, each section intended to consist of nine jurists and financiers, the chairman ex officio being the minister of finance. In the United States the chairman was intended, of course, to be the Secretary of the Treasury.

"The commission was given authority of law in a brief act approved February 7, 1916. Forty thousand dollars was appropriated in this act to enable the United States section of the commission to proceed to a general meeting of all the sections intended to be held at Buenos Aires in April, 1916, as well as to carry out whatever recommendations might be made by that meeting with a view to the fulfillment of the plans of the financial conference held the previous year.

"Subsequently, in public act 128 of the Sixty-fifth Congress and public act 346 of the Sixty-fifth Congress, appropriations of $25,000 each were made by Congress for the maintenance of the United States section. A financial statement covering the history of the appropriations thus far made and indicating the character of the expenditures will be found in the hearings of January 8 and 9, 1920, held by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives, at that time having before it the bill which is the subject of the present memorandum, namely, H. R. 11960.

"The commission proceeded with its work and has rendered indirectly, through the Secretary of the Treasury and through separate publications of its own, a report as to the progress in the several matters with which it was concerned. Attached will be found a copy of an address lately delivered by the Hon. John Bassett Moore, which summarizes briefly the history, purposes, and accomplishments of the commission up to the present time.

"Acting under authority of law contained in public act 379, Sixty-fourth Congress, the Secretary of the Treasury initiated negotiations for the second Pan American Financial Conference, which was held in Washington January 19 to 24, 1920. This conference considered the work of the commission, which had been established as a result of the recommendations of the first conference, held in 1915. It decided that the name of the commission should be altered so as to read 'Inter-American High Commission' instead of 'International High Commission,' thus giving a more specific and significant indication of the nature of the organization.

"The recommendation that the commission's name be changed came from the conference after the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives had concluded its consideration of the matter, and it was then too late to ask the House of Representatives to alter the name of the commission. For greater clearness in the matter of the commission's activities and authorization of law it was decided to prepare a bill defining the work of the commission in detail and setting it upon a firm legislative basis. Such a bill has been prepared and introduced into the Senate.

"What is now proposed is that H. R. 11960 be amended in two respects, first as to the name of the commission and secondly as to the control of the expenditures.

"The commission is a unit of ministers of finance concerned with problems of fiscal administration, commercial law, and the stabilization of exchange. It works continuously through a simple but effective organization set up in the Treasury Department at Washington. Whenever its conclusions have been sufficiently crystallized, either to warrant or require formal negotiations between governments, either the United States section of the commission or the other section of the commission with which in the given case it may have been corresponding, will approach the respective department of foreign affairs with a request that formal negotiations be initiated. The relations between the United States section of the commission and the Department of State of the United States, as indeed its relations with the Department of Commerce and other national agencies, or with the Pan American Union and other international agencies, have at all times been cordial and satisfactory. The projects elaborated as a result of correspondence between the United States section and the other sections of the commission have regularly and with entire satisfaction to all concerned been laid before the Department of State with a request that formal action be taken, and a number of conventions as well as projects of legislation have been laid before the Senate or House of Representatives of the United States for due consideration as a result of such negotiations.

"No reason is seen why the commission should now be virtually transferred to the Department of State. To assert that the commission will remain in the Treasury Department while its administrative control is vested in the Secretary of State is to overlook the fact that the person who formulates and executes policy is the only person properly to be charged with administrative responsibility. Inside of three months after the control of the expenditures had been vested in the Secretary of State, as called for in H. R. 11960, it would be inevitable that the Secretary of the Treasury would find himself obliged to relinquish all responsibility for the guidance of the commission's labors.

"Moreover, the very central idea of the commission would receive a vital blow. It is a union of ministers of finance. It is not intended to serve as a diplomatic organ. Its transfer to the Department of State, on the other hand, could not but result in the more or less rapid change of character on the part of the commission into an organization essentially diplomatic in character.

"It is therefore urged that H. R. 11960 be amended so as to restore the administrative control of the commission to the Secretary of the Treasury. It is furthermore suggested that on future occasions when provision for the maintenance of the commission is requested that the item be included in the sundry civil bill instead of the Diplomatic and Consular appropriations bill in order to remove any possible ground for the impression that what is dealt with involves an anomalous situation, namely, the presence in the Treasury Department of a body which ought to be in the Department of State."

ADDRESS OF JOHN A. M'MAHON.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have before me a copy of a speech delivered by Hon. John A. McMahon, the nestor of the Ohio bar, on January 24, 1920, before the Ohio State Bar Association on the subject of "Government by injunction." Mr. McMahon is in his eighty-seventh year; he was a Member of the House of Representatives and a member of the committee that conducted the impeachment proceedings against Secretary Belknap. He was considered by President Cleveland for the chief justiceship at the time of the appointment of Mr. Chief Justice Fuller. There is no lawyer in the country of higher character or greater ability. This article is a very valuable contribution to the subject of the relations between employer and employee, and I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, would the Senator object to having it referred to the Committee on Printing, with the view of having the committee pass upon it?

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator so requests, very well; but I desire to ask for favorable action upon it, because it is a dispassionate discussion of the subject; and men, whether they are employers or employees, will be interested in it. I know of no better contribution to the subject.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator has no objection, I should like to have it pursue the course I have indicated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the regular order, Mr. President.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that in considering the calendar under Rule VIII we start with No. 279, House bill 1713. That is the number which was reached the last time the Senate had the calendar under consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. The consideration of the calendar will begin with No. 279.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 1713) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to appoint a commission to investigate and report upon the available sources of water supply for the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MINISTER TO FINLAND.

The bill (S. 2690) authorizing the appointment of a minister to Finland was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments, on line 5, to strike out "$12,000" and insert "$10,000"; and on line 8 to strike out "$11,000" and insert "$7,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be authorized to appoint an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Finland, who shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $7,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay said salary to June 30, 1920, inclusive.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM E. JOHNSON.

The bill (H. R. 683) for the relief of William E. Johnson was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before consenting to the consideration of the bill, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], a question. I do not see the Senator here, and I ask that the bill be passed over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

JAMES M. MOORE.

The bill (H. R. 1812) making an appropriation to compensate James M. Moore for damages sustained while in the service of the Government of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $840 in payment to James M. Moore, late of Company L, Twenty-eighth Regiment United States Infantry, transferred from Company M, First United States Infantry, for injuries sustained, while in the service of the Government in the Philippine Islands as a civilian teamster, in a runaway accident on May 12, 1907.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARLOW AVELLINA.

The bill (H. R. 5665) for the relief of Carlow Avellina was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we have heard so much about the admirable service by the Post Office Department in the aerial mail operations, and that it is so inexpensive, I think this bill ought to be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and I object to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

GEORGE B. GATES.

The resolution (S. Res. 262) referring to the Court of Claims the bill (S. 2675) to compensate George B. Gates for the infringement of his letters patent by the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

RECLAMATION FUND.

The bill (S. 2822) making available additional moneys for the reclamation fund, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

J. B. WATERMAN.

The bill (S. 2554) for the relief of J. B. Waterman was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on line 6, to strike out "$429.58" and insert "$483.25," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to J. B. Waterman, of Belpre, Ohio, the sum of $483.25, being the amount paid the Government by him for that value of stamps and money taken from his custody as postmaster at Belpre, Ohio, by burglars on February 13, 1911.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not notice in the report accompanying the bill any statement from the department.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator who reported the bill is here.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to ask him why they did not receive a report from the department as to the circumstances surrounding the case. I know there are many such claims that are disagreed to by the department, and good reasons given why they should not be paid, and I ask, if there is no one to explain it, that the bill go over.

Mr. NEW. This is the case of J. B. Waterman, Calendar No. 290?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. NEW. My attention was engaged elsewhere. I understand the Senator has asked for information as to the circumstances of the case. I can say that it was referred to me, and I will state the circumstances.

The safe was robbed in the post office of which J. B. Waterman was postmaster. The claim was made that the lock on the safe was defective. A post-office inspector made that report and criticized the postmaster for not seeing to it that the lock on the safe was in better condition, but a large number of affidavits were submitted from employees of the office and others having information concerning the condition of the lock, to the effect that it was in good condition, and that no blame attached to the postmaster for its condition.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know whether the committee referred the matter to the department for report or not?

Mr. NEW. My recollection is that it did.

Mr. SMOOT. That is a general rule of the committee, and yet in the report there is no statement from the department as to whether the claim is a just one or not. I think it ought to go over at least until we have a report from the department as to what the real situation was.

Mr. NEW. I can not say on that point whether it was referred to the department or not.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

FARMERS' NATIONAL BANK, OF WILKINSON, IND.

The bill (H. R. 1761) for the relief of the Farmers' National Bank, of Wilkinson, Ind., was considered in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem certificates of indebtedness of the United States of America, No. 10307 and 10308, each of the denomination of $1,000, and each of the issue dated February 8, 1918, and maturing May 9, 1918, with interest from February 8, 1918, to May 9, 1918, in favor of the Farmers' National Bank, a national banking corporation, of Wilkinson, Ind., without presentation of the certificates, the said certificates of indebtedness having been lost or destroyed: Provided, That the said Farmers' National Bank, of Wilkinson, Ind., shall first file in the Treasury Department of the United States a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of said certificates of indebtedness of the United States of America in such form and with such sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the lost or destroyed certificates of indebtedness hereinbefore described.

Mr. NEW. I am thoroughly familiar with this case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No one has objected.

Mr. KING. I should like to hear an explanation from the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah wishes an explanation?

Mr. KING. I should be glad to hear it.

Mr. NEW. The Farmers' National Bank, of Wilkinson, Ind., lost two certificates, or bonds of indebtedness, more properly speaking. I have here a copy of the report.

Mr. WARREN. The bill provides for an indemnity bond from the bank to cover the matter.

Mr. NEW. Yes. There is no reasonable doubt, I think, that the certificates were destroyed. The matter was taken up by the Treasury Department, and the bank proposed to file with the Treasury an indemnifying bond to guarantee against any loss in case the certificates should by any chance ever turn up again, and that was acceptable to the Treasury Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVIS CONSTRUCTION CO.

The bill (S. 2861) for the relief of the Davis Construction Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

WAR WITH GERMANY.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 139) repealing the joint resolution of April 6, 1917, declaring a state of war to exist between the United States and Germany was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

The bill (S. 620) authorizing the issuance of patent to the Pioneer Educational Society and its successors for certain lands in the diminished Colville Indian Reservation, State of Washington, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be and is hereby granted to the Pioneer Educational Society of the city of Spokane, Wash., and its successors, for the support of St. Mary's Mission near Omak, Okanogan County, Wash., the following described lands: East half of the northeast quarter of section 12, township 33 north, range 26 east of the Willamette meridian; the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter, the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter and lots 2 and 3 of section 7, township 33 north, range 27 east of the Willamette meridian, the above-described land comprising about 240 acres lying about 1½ miles west of the mission. The south half of the southeast quarter of section 5, the east half of the northeast quarter and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 8, the south half of the northwest quarter, section 9, the north half of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 9, the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 9, the north half of the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 9, the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 9, and the south half of the southeast quarter of section 9, all in township 33 north, range 27 east of the Willamette meridian, comprising in all about 675 acres, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to cause patent to be issued for the same conditioned that if said lands, or any part thereof, shall cease to be used in connection with the said St. Mary's Mission the same shall revert to the United States as a part of said Colville Indian Reservation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIOUX INDIAN CLAIMS.

The bill (H. R. 400) authorizing the Sioux Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That all claims of whatsoever nature which the Sioux Tribe of Indians may have against the United States which have not heretofore been determined by the Court of Claims may be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for determination of the amount, if any, due said tribe from the United States under any treaties, agreements, or laws of Congress, or for the misappropriation of any of the funds of said tribe, or for the failure of the United States to pay said tribe any money or other property due; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said tribe against the United States, and to enter judgment thereon.

SEC. 2. That if any claim or claims be submitted to said courts they shall settle the rights therein, both legal and equitable, of each and all the parties thereto, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation, and any payment which may have been made upon any claim so submitted shall not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such suits or actions, and the United States shall be allowed credit for all sums heretofore paid or expended for the benefit of said tribe or any band thereof. The claim or claims of the tribe or band or bands thereof may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment, suit to be filed within five years after the passage of this act; and such action shall make the petitioner or petitioners party plaintiff or plaintiffs and the United States party defendant, and any band or bands of said tribe or any other tribe or band of Indians the court may deem necessary to a final determination of such suit or suits may be joined therein as the court may order. Such petition, which shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by said Sioux Tribe or any bands thereof, shall set forth all the facts on which the claims for recovery are based, and said petition shall be signed by the attorney or attorneys employed, and no other verification shall be necessary. Official letters, papers, documents, and public records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said tribe or bands thereof to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys for said tribe or bands of Indians.

SEC. 3. That upon the final determination of such suit, cause, or action the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as it shall find reasonable to be paid the attorney or attorneys employed therein by said tribe or bands of Indians under contracts negotiated and approved as provided by existing law, and in no case shall the fee decreed by said Court of Claims be in excess of the amounts stipulated in the contracts approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and no attorney shall have a right to represent the said tribes or any band thereof in any suit, cause, or action under the provisions of this act until his contract shall have been approved as herein provided. The fees decreed by the court to the attorney or attorneys of record shall be paid out of any sum or sums recovered in such suits or actions, and no part of such fees shall be taken from any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to such tribe or bands of Indians in whose behalf the suit is brought unless specifically authorized in the contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as herein provided: Provided, That in no case shall the fees decreed by said court amount to more than 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered in such cause.

Mr. CURTIS. I will state that the substitute reported by the Senate committee is exactly the item that passed the Senate during the last session of Congress. The bill as passed by the House provided for the payment of interest on any judgment that may be recovered, and that item was not satisfactory to the committee of the Senate. The committee struck out the House bill and substituted the Senate bill which passed the Senate at the last session.

Mr. KING. What is the basis of the claim?

Mr. CURTIS. Violation of treaty obligations. They claim that treaty obligations were not kept by the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW LANDS.

The bill (S. 3391) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the sale of the coal and asphalt deposits in the segregated mineral land in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, Oklahoma," approved February 8, 1918 (40 Stat. L., p. 433), was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ROSEBUD INDIAN RESERVATION.

The bill (H. R. 396) to authorize the payment of certain amounts for damages sustained by prairie fire on the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in South Dakota, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

RURAL HOMES.

The bill (S. 3477) to increase, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to give notice that at the first opportunity I shall move to take up the bill for consideration, for I think it is of vital importance not only to the States of the South and Northwest but all our Western States where there is privately owned land.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

TIMBER ON PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill (S. 730) to amend chapter 559 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, approved March 3, 1891, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of chapter 559 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, approved March 3, 1891, limiting the use of timber taken from public lands to residents of the States in which such timber is found, for use within such said State, shall not apply to the timber on the public lands in White Pine County, Nev.; but within such said county the provisions of said chapter shall apply equally to the residents of the States of Utah and Nevada and to the use of timber taken from the above-described tract in either of the above-named States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAREY ACT ENTRYMEN.

The bill (H. R. 2950) to authorize a preference right of entry by certain Carey Act entrymen, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, when restoring to the public domain lands that have been segregated to a State under section 4 of the act of August 18, 1894, and the acts and resolutions amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, commonly called the Carey Act, is authorized, in his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may establish, to allow for not exceeding 90 days to any Carey Act entryman a preference right of entry under applicable land laws of any of such lands which such person had entered under and pursuant to the State laws providing for the administration of the grant under the Carey Act and upon which such person had established actual bona fide residence or had made substantial and permanent improvements: Provided, That each entryman shall be entitled to a credit as residence upon his new homestead entry allowed hereunder of the time that he has actually lived upon the claim as a bona fide resident thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OCHOCO NATIONAL FOREST, OREG.

The bill (H. R. 348) to add certain lands to the Ochoco National Forest, Oreg., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described lands be, and the same are hereby, included in and made a part of the Ochoco National Forest, Oreg., subject to all prior valid adverse rights, and that said land shall hereafter be subject to all laws affecting national forests: Sections 27 and 34, township 17 south, range 21 east, sections 3 and 10, and the east half of section 9, township 18 south, range 21 east, all of Willamette meridian and base.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OREGON, SIUSLAW, AND CRATER NATIONAL FORESTS.

The bill (H. R. 8028) to add to the Oregon, Siuslaw, and Crater National Forests in Oregon certain lands that were revested in the United States pursuant to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Oregon & California Railroad Co. against the United States, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That such portions of the lands hereinafter described as shall be deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture for the conservation and protection of the water supplies of the cities of Oregon City, Dallas, Corvallis, and Ashland, Oreg., and which are within the limits of the grant by the United States to the Oregon & California Railroad Co., that were revested in the United States pursuant to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Oregon & California Railroad Co. v. The United States (238 U. S. Stats, p. 393), and an act of Congress approved June 9, 1916, be, and the same are hereby, reserved and set aside as parts of the Oregon, Siuslaw, and Crater National Forests, subject to all laws affecting national forests, as follows:

As part of the Oregon National Forest, south and east of the Willamette meridian, Oregon:

Township 5 south, range 4 east, section 1, all; section 11, all; section 13, all; section 15, north half southeast quarter, southwest quarter, and north half; section 23, all; section 25, all; township 4 south, range 5 east, section 19, all; section 27, northeast quarter; section 29, northwest quarter northwest quarter; south half northwest quarter, and south half northeast quarter; section 31, all; section 35, east half, for the protection of the water supply of Oregon City, Oreg.

As part of the Siuslaw National Forest, south and west of the Willamette meridian, Oregon:

Township 7 south, range 6 west, section 21, northeast quarter southeast quarter, west half southeast quarter and southwest quarter; section 29, northeast quarter and south one-half; section 33, north half northeast quarter, northwest quarter and southeast quarter, for the protection of the water supply of Dallas, Oreg.

Township 12 south, range 7 west, section 15, south half southwest quarter, northwest quarter southwest quarter, and southwest quarter southeast quarter; section 21, southeast quarter and north half; section 23, southwest quarter northwest quarter, and west half southwest quarter; section 27, all; section 35, north half, for the protection of the water supply of Corvallis, Oreg.

As part of the Crater National Forest, south and east of the Willamette meridian in Oregon:

Township 39 south, range 1 east, section 19, east one-half; section 21, east one-half of west one-half, and east one-half, for the protection of the water supply of Ashland, Oreg.

SEC. 2. That when the Secretary of Agriculture finds that merchantable timber may be cut from the above-described lands without detriment to the purity of or depletion of the water supply, said Secretary is hereby authorized to dispose of such merchantable timber on the lands added to said national forests by section 1 hereof in accordance with the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture for the national forests, and the entire proceeds of any sale thereof shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States in a special fund designated as "The Oregon and California land-grant fund," referred to in section 10 of the said act of June 9, 1916, and be disposed of in the manner therein designated: Provided, That in the event any of said lands are eliminated from said forests as not necessary for the purposes for which this reservation is made they shall be disposed of in the manner provided for by said act of June 9, 1916.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMY E. HALL.

The bill (H. R. 8598) restoring to Amy E. Hall her homestead rights and providing that on any homestead entry made by her she shall be given credit for all compliance with the law on her original homestead entry and for all payments made on same was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to permit Amy E. Hall, homestead entrywoman on lots 23 and 24, and south half southwest quarter northwest quarter section 17; the south half southeast quarter northeast quarter, northeast quarter southeast quarter, and southwest quarter northeast quarter, section 18, township 9 south, range 10 west, in the former Siletz Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon, whose homestead application was on January 3, 1914, placed of record in the office of the register and receiver of the United States land office at Portland, Oreg., to make a new homestead entry on any tract of land, not exceeding 160 acres, open to entry under the homestead laws of the United States, which is not otherwise appropriated or reserved, and that she be given credit for all compliance with law on her original homestead entry and for all payments made upon the same, but expressly waiving the requirements as to cultivation under the act of June 6, 1912 (37 Stat., p. 123), giving and granting unto the Secretary of the Interior full and complete authority to carry out the purposes and intent of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

YANKTON AGENCY PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The bill (S. 2442) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the trustees of the Yankton Agency Presbyterian Church by patent in fee certain land within the Yankton Indian Reservation was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey to the trustees of the Yankton Agency Presbyterian Church by patent in fee the following-described premises situate within the Yankton Indian Reservation, county of Charles Mix, State of South Dakota: Beginning at the northwest corner of lot 9, section 27, township 94 north, range 64 west of fifth principal meridian; thence south 25 degrees 4 minutes west 5.50 chains, to the southwest corner of lot 2, section 34; thence north 64 degrees 56 minutes west 1.40 chains, more or less, to the east boundary of the Presbyterian Church and school reserve; thence north 25 degrees 4 minutes east 5.50 chains, more or less, along the east boundary of the said Presbyterian Church and school reserve to the northeast corner thereof; thence south 64 degrees 56 minutes east 1.50 chains, more or less, to the place of beginning; containing 0.77 acre, more or less; for the uses of said church upon the payment by said trustees to the Secretary of the Interior of the sum of $75, the value of said premises as heretofore found by due appraisal thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN GREGORY COUNTY, S. DAK.

The bill (S. 2786) authorizing the sale of lands in Gregory County, S. Dak., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell for cash, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, the unallotted, unreserved, and unentered lands in Gregory County, S. Dak., formerly in the Fort Randall Military Reservation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VACANCIES IN MILITARY ACADEMY CADET CORPS.

The bill (S. 3682) to regulate the filling of vacancies in the Corps of Cadets at the United States Military Academy not otherwise provided for by existing law, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter whenever all vacancies at the Military Academy shall not have been filled as the result of the regular annual entrance examination the remaining vacancies shall be filled by admission from the whole list of alternates selected in their order of merit established at such entrance examinations. The admissions thus made shall be credited to the United States at large and shall not interfere with or affect in any manner whatsoever any appointment authorized by existing law; and whenever by the operation of this or any other law the Corps of Cadets exceeds its authorized maximum strength as provided by law, the admission of alternates as prescribed in this act shall cease until such time as said corps may be reduced to its authorized strength.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Suppose a Senator or a Representative in Congress appoints a young man as a cadet at West Point as principal and he has two alternates appointed to the same place and the principal fails, under the proposed bill what would become of the alternates?

Mr. WADSWORTH. His first alternate goes in.

Mr. SMOOT. If he passes?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; if he passes.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the same as the law to-day?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Why change it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The situation is this: It sometimes happens that the principal, the first alternate, and the second alternate all fail. That leaves a vacancy in the academy which can not be credited to the district and filled until the following year when a new class of cadets are taken in. This bill provides that in the event of vacancies existing as the result of an instance of that sort alternates who have passed the examination——

Mr. SMOOT. Alternates from some other State.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Alternates from some other State or some other district may be taken in to fill the vacancies, alternates being taken in in the order of their merit, but the district itself will not lose its representation.

Mr. SMOOT. The rule now is that if the principal and the two alternates fail, at the next examination the following year the Senator or Representative has a perfect right to appoint another principal and two alternates for that same cadetship.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. Does this interfere with that right?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. It seems to me, then, that sooner or later there would be a larger number of cadets than could be taken care of.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The bill provides for that very thing; it guards against it.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought it did at the end, but I did not know whether that was specifically provided for in a way that would allow such a case as I have cited to be taken care of.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The trouble with the present situation is that the Military Academy is never filled to its quota; it is generally far below its quota, due to the fact that all of the nominees from the several districts do not pass. While those I might nominate from the State of New York might fail to pass, all the nominees—principal and alternates—whose names might be sent in by the Senator from Utah might pass. In the event that my nominees failed to pass, the bill provides that the nominees of the Senator from Utah, who have all passed, shall get a chance to get in, and so keep the academy filled up.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, taking the case cited by the Senator from New York, under the present practice one year from now the Senator from New York could again appoint a principal and two alternates for the place for which his principal and alternates this year had failed?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. If an alternate appointed by some other Senator is allowed to fill the particular place, how is the Senator from New York going to have an opening next year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the bill provides for that very thing. Let me read the language:

The admissions thus made shall be credited to the United States at large—

Not credited to the district from which the particular alternate may come—and shall not interfere with or affect in any manner whatsoever any appointment authorized by existing law; and whenever by the operation of this or any other law the Corps of Cadets exceeds its authorized maximum strength as provided by law, the admission of alternates as prescribed in this act shall cease until such time as said corps may be reduced to its authorized strength.

So that the State and the district are protected all the time, and the corps is not allowed to go beyond the authorized strength.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, the appointments at large are regulated by the number that actually fail to pass in the different States of the Union.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. I may add to what has been said by other Senators that there has never been a year since the Military Academy was established but that at the end of the year——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hope the Senator from Wyoming will speak a little louder. I am very much interested in this matter, but I was unable to hear what the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] said.

Mr. WARREN. I started to say, in addition to the explanation already made, that there has never been a year since the Military Academy was established but that at the end of the year some of the freshmen have failed and have had to leave the academy, so that there are openings constantly occurring, and if there should happen to be an excessive number at any given time that condition will be remedied at the end of the year.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill be engrossed for a third reading and read the third time?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question. I caught the first part of his explanation to the effect that if the nominees from New York, to illustrate, failed to pass, and the alternates from the State of Pennsylvania had passed, those alternates could be named to take the places left vacant from New York. I could not hear—because a part of it was a statement by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], whose back was toward me—all that was said with reference to what happened at the end of the first year. I heard the Senator say that such appointments were to be charged up against those at large.

Mr. WADSWORTH. To be charged up against the United States at large.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. At the end of a year, then, the Senator from New York could again name some one, and he only loses the place for the one year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That was my understanding, but I could not distinctly hear all of the explanation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENLISTED PERSONNEL OF THE ARMY.

The bill (S. 3683) to amend section 2 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 2 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as provides as follows: "Provided, That hereafter the enlisted personnel of all organizations of the Regular Army shall at all times be maintained at a strength not below the minimum strength fixed by law: Provided further, That the total enlisted force of the line of the Regular Army, excluding the Philippine Scouts and the enlisted men of the Quartermaster Corps, of the Medical Department, and of the Signal Corps, and the unassigned recruits, shall not at any one time, except in the event of actual or threatened war or similar emergency in which the public safety demands it, exceed 175,000 men," be, and the same is hereby, suspended until July 1, 1920.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill from the Senator from New York. I should like him to explain, if he will be kind enough to do so, whether this proposed legislation will be necessary in the event that the Army bill, or some Army bill, shall pass Congress between now and the 1st of July next.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, this proposed legislation is necessary to take care of a situation which will immediately arise upon the formal declaration of peace. The bill recites those provisos which now appear as part of the existing law in the national defense act, being the act approved June 3, 1916. The first proviso reads:

Provided, That hereafter the enlisted personnel of all organizations of the Regular Army shall at all times be maintained at a strength not below the minimum strength fixed by law.

Unfortunately, the existing law, the national-defense act, is guilty of that great military fallacy, in connection with legislation, of trying to fix the strength of every constituent part of the Army of the United States, from which we have suffered tremendously, and I hope that the day will come when we shall abandon it.

Provided further, That the total enlisted force of the line of the Regular Army, excluding the Philippine Scouts and the enlisted men of the Quartermaster Corps, of the Medical Department, and of the Signal Corps, and the unassigned recruits, shall not at any one time, except in the event of actual or threatened war or similar emergency in which the public safety demands it, exceed 175,000 men.

If the Senator will turn to the report of the committee, he will find the trouble that will arise in the event peace is declared. The best way for me to explain it is to read a portion of the report. When peace shall have been declared and the national-defense act automatically brought back into operation—

It is possible that we shall have organizations of the Regular Army in Europe and Siberia after the termination of the existing emergency, and the conditions in those regions demand that certain organizations be maintained at a greater strength than the minimum authorized by the national-defense act, and to keep within the appropriations provided it will accordingly be necessary to maintain certain organizations at a strength below the minimum prescribed by law for such organizations. Moreover, it may be possible that, owing to difficulty in obtaining recruits, certain organizations can not be maintained at the minimum strength prescribed, if others in more important places are to be kept at an efficient strength.

That is the whole situation. The bill does not involve the employment of any more soldiers or officers of the Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 2 of the act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916."

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 547) authorizing the enlistment of non-English-speaking citizens and aliens was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I inquire if objection was made to the bill the title of which was just read?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I desire to have it go over.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think that is unfortunate.

LANDS WITHIN FORMER FLATHEAD INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The bill (S. 20) to provide for the payment of certain lands within the former Flathead Indian Reservation in the State of Montana was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all cases where lands within the former Flathead Indian Reservation which were classified and appraised during the years 1912 and 1913 by the commission appointed for that purpose under authority of the act of June 25, 1910, have been appraised at an amount in excess of the amount at which similar lands were appraised by the Flathead Commission of 1907 and 1908, persons who have between August 26, 1910, and June 14, 1911, settled upon, or between said dates filed applications to enter such lands, and which applications have been or may hereafter be allowed, shall not be required to pay more for the lands so settled upon or entered by them than the highest amounts specified by the Flathead Commission of 1907 and 1908 for lands of like character and similar classification.

SEC. 2. That in all cases where patents shall be issued for land paid for under the foregoing sections of this act there shall be transferred, from any funds belonging to the United States not otherwise appropriated, to the credit of the Indians for whose benefit such lands are disposed of such an amount as shall equal the difference between the amount so paid under said sections and the amount at which the lands so paid for have been appraised or reappraised by the commission of 1912 and 1913.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NICK SITCH AND BILLIE H. EVASHANKS.

The bill (S. 2962) for the relief of Nick Sitch and Billie H. Evashanks was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amounts paid as fees, commissions, and purchase moneys by the persons hereinafter named, in connection with homestead entries at the United States land office at Glasgow, Mont., in the year 1917, as follows:

Serial No. 044427, Nick Sitch, west half southeast quarter, section 27, and west half of northeast quarter, section 34, township 29 north, range 41 east.

Serial No. 044521, Billie H. Evashanks, south half southeast quarter, northwest quarter southeast quarter, section 34, township 29 north, range 41 east, and west half east half, northeast quarter southwest quarter, section 1, township 28 north, range 41 east.

SEC. 2. That upon receipt of the certificate from the Secretary of the Interior as provided in section 1 of this act the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to make payment of the amounts so certified out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, and issue his warrant in settlement thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DELILAH SIEBENALER.

The bill (S. 604) for the relief of Delilah Siebenaler was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized to refund to Delilah Siebenaler the sum of $188.41, paid to the Department of Agriculture by said Delilah Siebenaler for certain timber which she cut from her homestead entry within the Cabinet Forest Reserve, Mont., prior to her receipt of patent therefor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana how this payment happened to be made? I can not understand under what authority the beneficiary of the bill made payment to the Government for the taking of the timber from her own property.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Utah, I will state that a similar bill has passed the Senate twice on previous occasions. The beneficiary of the bill is a widow who entered a homestead in a forest reservation, on land set aside for homestead entry. Before she made final proof she cut and used a little of the timber on the land for domestic purposes; I think principally for building a house, for fencing, and for other like purposes. That is my recollection. At that time she did not have a patent to the land, and some zealous inspector of the Department of Agriculture had a charge brought against her of trespass—of which she may have been technically guilty—and she was required to pay a penalty of $188, the value of the timber. Subsequently, the woman went ahead with her residence, complied with the law, made final proof, and procured patent to the land and it became her land. The case is a very equitable one. There was no fraud charged, so far as I know; but before she had obtained patent the woman used what little timber she cut for fences and other improvements. She may have sold some of it to supply her needs. I can not say as to that. After she acquired title to the land, however, it carried the timber with it. Had she not cut the timber she would in time have acquired title to it. It would have become hers with the issuance of patent. The Government was not hurt. It is a fair and equitable case. I repeat, a similar bill has passed the Senate twice previously, and I think it a meritorious measure. It is a hardship to deprive the woman of this money. It is not just to do so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether under existing law she could have been compelled to have paid the Government $188? It seems to me when she was on the land under a valid entry, and was perfecting her title, that she would have a perfect right to make any legitimate use of the timber as she would of stone that was on the ground.

Mr. MYERS. I think she would. It may be that she sold a part of the timber to obtain a few dollars of ready money which she needed. Technically she had no right to do that, if she did it. The measure only involves $188, and as the woman later procured title to the land, which would have carried the timber with it if she had never cut a stick of it, the Government is not out anything. I think it small business when the United States takes $188 from a woman in that way, and I think she ought to have it back. The only way for the woman to get it back is by a bill in Congress. I think every sense of fairness requires that the woman's money be returned to her.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISPOSITION OF LANDS WITHDRAWN UNDER RECLAMATION LAWS.

The bill (S. 795) to provide for the disposition of public lands withdrawn and improved under the provisions of the reclamation laws, and which are no longer needed in connection with said laws, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 9, after the word "land," to insert "not less than one-fifth the purchase price shall be paid at the time of sale, and the remainder in not more than four annual payments with interest at 6 per cent on deferred payments," so as to make the section read:

That whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior any public lands which have been withdrawn for or in connection with construction or operation or reclamation projects under the provisions of the act of June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, and which have been improved by and at the expense of the reclamation fund for administration or other like purposes, are no longer needed for the purposes for which they were withdrawn and improved, the Secretary of the Interior may cause said lands, together with the improvements thereon, to be appraised by three disinterested persons to be appointed by him and thereafter sell the same, for not less than the appraised value, at public auction to the highest bidder, after giving public notice of the time and place of sale by posting upon the land and by publication for not less than 30 days in a newspaper of general circulation in the vicinity of the land, not less than one-fifth the purchase price shall be paid at the time of sale, and the remainder in not more than four annual payments with interest at 6 per cent on deferred payments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 2, page 2, line 24, after the word "character" to insert, "Provided, That the accepted bidder must, prior to the issuance of patent, furnish satisfactory evidence that he or she is a citizen of the United States," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That upon payment of the purchase price the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, by appropriate patent, to convey all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to said lands to the purchaser at said sale, subject, however, to such reservations, limitations, or conditions as said Secretary may deem proper: Provided, That not over 160 acres shall be sold to any one person, and if said lands are irrigable under the project in which located they shall be sold subject to compliance by the purchaser with all the terms, conditions, and limitations of the reclamation act applicable to lands of that character: Provided, That the accepted bidder must, prior to issuance of patent, furnish satisfactory evidence that he or she is a citizen of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN MONTANA.

The bill (S. 3138) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and convey to the Great Northern Railway Co. certain lands for stockyards, and for other purposes, at Browning Station, in the State of Montana, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment in section 2, page 4, line 7, after the word "terms," to insert "and conditions," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That upon appraising the said lands the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to sell and convey the same to the Great Northern Railway Co., a corporation of the State of Minnesota, and owning and operating lines of railway in the State of Montana, and other States, for stockyards and other railway purposes, upon such terms and conditions as he may deem advisable. If the sale of any of the aforesaid lands shall include the whole or any part of the allotment of an individual Indian, the purchase price of such allotted land shall be paid to such Indian, subject to the control of the Secretary of the Interior as to the funds of incompetent Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 30) to permit of the disposition of certain lands in Montana ceded by the Crow Indians was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, after line 3, to strike out all of section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That all lands not otherwise reserved that have been withdrawn or classified as coal lands, or are valuable for coal, restored to entry under the authority of the act approved April 27, 1904 (33 Stat., p. 352), entitled "An act to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians of the Crow Reservation in Montana, and making appropriations to carry the same into effect," shall be subject to disposal in the same manner and under such terms and conditions as have been or may be provided for the disposition of nonmineral lands opened to entry or sale by the aforesaid act: Provided, That such disposals and the lands affected thereby shall be subject to all the provisions of the act approved June 22, 1910 (36 Stat., p. 583), entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands," hereby extended thereto.

So as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That nothing contained in section 31 of the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulation with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1892, and for other purposes," shall hereafter be so construed as to prohibit the offering at public sale of any tract of land affected thereby, which is otherwise subject to such offering, under the provisions of section 2455, United States Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of March 28, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 77): Provided, That in no order for an offering of such lands shall a minimum price be fixed less than the price therefor fixed by existing laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 4438) to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is absent from the city. I ask that the bill may be passed over until his return.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

WILLIAM S. BRITTON.

The bill (S. 3610) for the relief of William S. Britton, formerly second lieutenant of Infantry, who has been erroneously dropped from the rolls of the United States Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to reinstate William S. Britton, formerly second lieutenant of Infantry, who has been erroneously dropped from the rolls of the Army, and to restore him to his former position and rank in the service by the issuance of a new commission to date from the 14th day of May, 1919, and to continue, during the pleasure of the President, not longer than to the date when he shall be released by military hospital authorities; and if such release shall have occurred prior to the passage of this act, to honorably discharge him from his commission as of the date of such release.

SEC. 2. That said William S. Britton shall be entitled to receive the full pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of Infantry from the time he was dropped from the rolls of the Army until he shall be so discharged, and that his status in and relation to the Army of the United States shall be in all respects the same as it would have been had he not been dropped from the rolls of the Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF NATIONAL CEMETERIES.

The bill (S. 2956) to amend sections 4874 and 4875 of the Revised Statutes and to provide a compensation for superintendents of national cemeteries was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That sections 4874 and 4875 of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4874. The superintendents of national cemeteries shall be selected from meritorious and trustworthy soldiers, either commissioned officers or enlisted men of the Regular, Volunteer, or National Army, who may have been disabled for active field service in the line of duty.

"SEC. 4875. The superintendents of the national cemeteries shall be assigned to duties by the Secretary of War and shall be divided into three classes, according to the extent and importance of the cemeteries to which they may be respectively assigned, of which 29 shall be in class 1, who shall receive a compensation of $1,200 per annum; 19 shall be in class 2, who shall receive $1,140 per annum; and 26 shall be in class 3, who shall receive $1,040 per annum: Provided, That in addition to the superintendents hereinbefore enumerated there shall be a superintendent of the Arlington Cemetery at Arlington, Va., and a superintendent of the National Cemetery at Mexico City, Mexico, who shall each receive a compensation of $1,500 per annum: Provided further, That all superintendents shall be furnished with quarters and fuel and upon honorable discharge or resignation shall receive transportation for themselves and household effects to their respective homes."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if this bill is to pass, it seems to me that before the word "receive," on line 22, the word "each" should be inserted; on line 23, after the word "shall," the word "each" should be inserted; and on line 24, after the word "shall," the word "each" should be inserted; so that it will read "who shall each receive a compensation of $1,200 per annum," and so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments to the amendment, offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend sections 4874 and 4875 of the Revised Statutes relating to compensation for superintendents of national cemeteries."

UNITED STATES EMBASSY AT BRUSSELS, BELGIUM.

The bill (S. 3406) for the purchase of buildings and grounds for the embassy of the United States at Brussels, Belgium, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purchase of buildings and grounds for the residence and offices of the embassy of the United States in Brussels, Belgium, and for making necessary minor repairs in and appropriately furnishing said building the sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The resolution (S. Res. 56) seeking a convention between the United States and certain Central American countries for the protection of migratory birds was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the resolution go over in the absence of the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Alabama, both of whom are interested in it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

JOHN B. H. WARING.

The bill (S. 907) for the relief of John B. H. Waring was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 4, after the word "authorized," to strike out "to nominate" and insert "to restore to John B. H. Waring, late a captain in the Medical Corps, the files of which he was deprived," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to restore to John B. H. Waring, late a captain in the Medical Corps, the files of which he was deprived.

Mr. SMOOT. What does that mean?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is the regular way of expressing it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 7, to strike out "John B. H. Waring, late a captain in the Medical Corps, United States Army," and insert "him," so as to read:

and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint him an officer of the Medical Corps in the Army of the United States as of May 5, 1917, with such rank as he would have attained had he not been discharged, and when so appointed he shall be placed on the retired list of the officers of the Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia if, upon a full investigation, he feels that this bill ought to pass. It would seem to be a reflection upon the officers of the Army, and to convict them of negligence or some delinquency toward this officer. Otherwise, he would not have been separated from the service.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, in reply to the question of the Senator from Utah, I will say that I have gone over this matter very fully, and the subcommittee associated with me did likewise, and there is every reason to conclude that an injustice was done Capt. Waring. I do not know who the officers were that were responsible for it, and have no desire to reflect on anybody. I do not know them personally, or know who they were by name.

This man, after being examined numerous times, first when he was admitted to the Army, and several times later, annually, was found to be in perfect physical condition, and the report so shows. While serving in one of the Philippine Islands, almost directly under the Equator, he was stricken on a very hot day with what they called a light stroke. He was on duty, and it was during maneuvers on one of the very hottest days in the summer, almost immediately under the Equator. As a result of that stroke, he was shifted from one place to another, and for almost six years there was no disputing the fact and no attempt on the part of anyone to dispute the fact that this injury which he received was received in line of duty. Several times later than that he was sent to points where his injury was aggravated, and he was again put in the hospital, and apparently received very poor consideration; and after so long a time he was summoned before a retiring board, and this trouble was diagnosed as being a congenital nervous trouble. This testimony was not upon the judgment of nerve specialists or men who were skilled in that sort of diagnosis, but it was an eye, ear, and throat specialist who gave that opinion. There had been some dispute between Capt. Waring and the Medical Department, so that by reason of this treatment, he having asked several times to have outside specialists brought in and examine him and treat him, there seemed to be, with or without reason, some prejudice in this case; and I am confident that it operated to work out an injustice against him, and that this is a wholly meritorious bill. I have gone into that matter very thoroughly. The entire story is set forth in the report which accompanies the bill; and I am sure that if the Senator will read it he will conclude, just as I did, that it is an entirely meritorious case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole House, and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3746) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask for an explanation of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CLAIMS FOR PROPERTY DESTROYED IN THE ARMY.

The bill (S. 3750) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for the loss of private property destroyed in the military service of the United States," approved March 3, 1885, as amended by the act of July 9, 1918, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of the claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for loss of private property destroyed in the military service of the United States," approved March 3, 1885, as amended by the act of July 9, 1918 (40 Stat., p. 880), be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That private property belonging to officers, enlisted men, and members of the Nurse Corps (female) of the Army, including all prescribed articles of equipment and clothing which they are required by law or regulation to own and use in the performance of their duties, and horses and equipment required by law or regulations to be provided by mounted officers, which since the 5th day of April, 1917, has been or shall hereafter be lost, damaged, or destroyed in the military service, shall be replaced, or the damage thereto, or its value recouped to the owner as hereinafter provided, when such loss, damage, or destruction has occurred or shall hereafter occur without fault or negligence on the part of the owner in any of the following circumstances:

"First. When such private property so lost, damaged, or destroyed was shipped on board an unseaworthy vessel by order of an officer authorized to give such order or direct such shipment.

"Second. When it appears that such private property was so lost, damaged, or destroyed in consequence of its owner having given his attention to the saving of human life or property belonging to the United States which was in danger at the same time and under similar circumstances, or while, at the time of such loss, damage, or destruction, the claimant was engaged in authorized military duties in connection therewith.

"Third. When during travel under orders such private property, including the regulating allowance of baggage, transferred by a common carrier, or otherwise transported by the proper agent or agency of the United States Government, is lost, damaged, or destroyed; but replacement, recoupment, or commutation in these circumstances, where the property was or shall be transported by a common carrier, shall be limited to the extent of such loss, damage, or destruction over and above the amount recoverable from said carrier.

"Fourth. When such private property is destroyed or captured by the enemy, or is destroyed to prevent its falling into the hands of the enemy, or is abandoned on account of lack of transportation or by reason of military emergency requiring its abandonment, or is otherwise lost in the field during campaign.

"SEC. 2. That except as to such property as by law or regulation is required to be possessed and used by officers, enlisted men, and members of the Army Nurse Corps (female), respectively, the liability of the Government under this act shall be limited to damage to or loss of such sums of money or such articles of personal property as the Secretary of War shall decide or declare to be reasonable, useful, necessary, and proper for officers, enlisted men, or members of the Army Nurse Corps (female), respectively, as the case may be, to have in their possession while in quarters, or in the field, engaged in the public service in the line of duty.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to examine into, ascertain, and determine the value of such property lost, destroyed, captured, or abandoned as specified in the foregoing paragraphs, or the amount of damage thereto, as the case may be; and the amount of such value or damage so ascertained and determined shall be paid by disbursing officers of the Army, or such property lost, destroyed, captured, or abandoned, or so damaged as to be unfit for service, may be replaced in kind from Government property on hand when the Secretary of War shall so direct.

"SEC. 4. That the tender of replacement or of commutation or the determination made by the Secretary of War upon a claim presented, as provided for in the foregoing section, shall constitute a final determination of any claim cognizable under this chapter, and such claim shall not thereafter be reopened or considered.

"SEC. 5. That no claim arising under this act shall be considered unless made within two years from the time that it accrued, except that when a claim accrues in time of war, or when war intervenes within two years after its accrual, such claim may be presented within two years after peace is established.

"SEC. 6. That for the payment of claims arising and established under this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300,000.

"SEC. 7. That so much of the act of March 28, 1918 (40 Stat., pp. 479, 480), as makes provision for the presentation, adjustment, and payment of claims of officers and enlisted men for loss of private property destroyed in the military service be, and the same hereby is, repealed."

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from New York explain very briefly what change the bill would make in existing law?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, Mr. President; and I think it will take but a moment. There is a perfectly absurd situation existing in the Army to-day as the result of some rulings handed down by auditors, who certainly can do more to tear a statute to pieces than any body of men I have ever encountered. The explanation will be found in the report, as contained in a letter from the Secretary of War, from which I read:

The original act was intended to provide a simple and expeditious method of settling the claims of officers and enlisted men for reimbursement for personal property lost, damaged, or destroyed in the military services of the United States through no fault of their own. However, a series of decisions by the officials of the Treasury Department have placed such restrictions on the law as to preclude favorable consideration of a majority of the claims which have been filed. These decisions are briefly summarized as follows:

(a) The auditor has disallowed all claims for property lost by fire unless claimants can certify that the loss occurred while the claimant was engaged in saving Government property.

It was never the intention of Congress to legislate anything of that sort.

Mr. LODGE. Of course it was not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. For example, I have heard of a case where a group of officers were housed and sleeping in an officers' shack. The shack caught fire; it was totally destroyed; and one, I think, perhaps two, of the officers were burned to death; and the survivors escaped with their lives by jumping through the window. They put in a claim for the total loss of all their personal property, which was burned up in the wooden shack, but because they could not prove that they were trying to save Government property while they were trying to save their lives they got nothing.

Mr. LODGE. And two perished?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; two perished.

The Secretary continues:

(b) The comptroller has ruled that "money" is not an article of property within the meaning of the act.

In other words, if an enlisted man or an officer has some currency burned or destroyed, through no fault of his own, the auditor has ruled that that is not property.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt his explanation? Is it the policy of the Government, theoretically, at least, to compensate officers for all personal property destroyed by fire or by the elements when they are in the service of the Government?

Mr. WADSWORTH. When it is no fault of their own, and they are on duty at the time, and their property is destroyed as an incident of their service.

Mr. LODGE. That has always been the practice of the Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It has always been done. Let me continue. It will take only a moment to show the absurdity of the situation.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will read the balance of the letter?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I want to read the balance of it, because in my judgment the situation is disgraceful. It continues:

Claims from enlisted men whose money was stolen upon being captured by the enemy were disapproved—

Disapproved on the ground that that money was not property. If a man has the misfortune to be captured by the enemy and his watch and clothing are taken away from him, his shoes stripped off his feet, and his money taken out of his pocket and distributed among the captors, he can not put in any claim for the money because it is not regarded as property. This continues:

And there are claims now pending covering the loss of money by 75 enlisted men who intrusted their money to an officer for remittances to their homes, which was lost because this officer was captured by the enemy.

The enemy stole that money; and they can not get their money back from the Government of the United States.

(c) The comptroller has recently decided that property lost in France can not be considered as having been lost "in the field during campaign" unless the claimant was actually in the battle line. This decision will affect practically all losses of personal baggage in the field other than that in course of transportation.

The thing is so ridiculously unjust that when the attention of the Committee on Military Affairs was called to it, it is fair to say we boiled with indignation. This bill is to give the officers and men of the Army a square deal in the matter of reimbursing them for the loss of their property when it is lost through no fault of their own and while they are serving the Government and the people of the United States.

Mr. WARREN. The present law was expected to do that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The present law was expected to do it.

Mr. KING. I may have an erroneous idea in regard to the obligation of the Government with respect to soldiers; but it does seem to me that if men carry upon their persons into battle large sums of money, and they are captured, there ought to be some limitation upon the liability of the Government. If I, on the morning of a battle, know that I am to be assigned to a perilous situation, where I may be killed or captured, it would seem to me that common prudence ought to dictate that I should not place upon my person a considerable sum of money, and it would seem to me that the Government of the United States ought not to be called upon to meet the loss which I sustain, or, at any rate, it ought to be permitted to establish some rule as to the quantity or the amount of money or personal property which a soldier upon the field may carry with him, where he is in a situation that may involve his capture at any moment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, my only answer to that is that it seems hardly square for the Government of the United States to ask a man not only to risk his life but also, in the event he survives, risk bankruptcy.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I inquire of the Senator just a moment——

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Take a man who is paid on the battle field—because they were sometimes paid practically on the eve of battle—how would he have time to go and deposit his money in some safe depository until after the battle was over? He has to have the money with him. There are no banks following along behind the soldiers. He has to carry it with him. What would the Senator do with a man who was paid on the eve of battle and was killed in battle, or his money was taken from him by his captors? Would not the Senator reimburse him or his estate?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggested a moment ago in the statement which I made—and this is a case of first impression, I will say—that the War Department ought to be permitted to promulgate some regulations which would limit the amount of liability. I do think that it would be negligence on the part of an officer or a soldier to carry with him any considerable amount of money under circumstances such as those just referred to by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. If a man were to carry $1,000 with him upon the battle field, under circumstances where he was reasonably sure he would encounter the enemy, and there was a probability or a possibility of his being captured, there ought to be some way by which the Government could be protected. This may seem to Senators who are familiar with this matter a very improper view; but it suggests itself to me that for the Government of the United States to be liable, in any event, for all amounts soldiers may have with them while in the service of the country, for losses by fire, losses by capture, or losses at sea, is putting the rule rather too strongly, and there ought to be some reasonable limitation upon the liability of the Government.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it has been the uniform policy of the Government and of all civilized Governments, I think, to reimburse soldiers and sailors for the loss of property—and their property is apt to be very trifling—when it was lost through no fault of theirs, by an accident, or in a wreck at sea, or a fire in the barracks, or on the field. I have never heard the principle of that policy opposed before on this floor. The law that now exists was passed to meet those very cases. It is not the War Department or the Navy Department, in charge of the soldiers and sailors, who are trying to stop it; it is some clerks in the Treasury, who take our statutes and put on them their own interpretation of what Congress intends, until they tear them all to pieces; and Congress is constantly employed in passing legislation to get rid of misinterpretations of the statutes by gratuitous and needless rulings in the Treasury Department.

Mr. President, soldiers do not take large sums of money into battle, but they may have a small amount; they may have some locket that they wear, some little trifling article of jewelry to which they are attached. The average soldier does not stop before he goes into battle to see whether he has $10 in his pocket and can go and deposit it in the paymaster's safe. Their minds are not on those things. And when they go into battle, if they lose a small sum of money in that way, it is only decent for the Government to make it good. I think it is amazing, when we are preparing to vote billions upon billions to the returned soldiers, that we should haggle over paying a man for the loss of his clothes in a ship that has been sunk, or a barrack that has been fired, or in a trench in France.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I agree with the latter sentence which the Senator has just spoken, that we should not haggle over the cases to which he referred. Notwithstanding his implied criticisms of my attitude, I repeat that I think it would be a very proper thing for the War Department to establish some regulations in regard to the liability for loss of property.

Mr. LODGE. The War Department has done it. This all comes through the War Department. The War Department has to give its approval, and the Navy Department has to give its approval, to these claims. They all come through the regular processes. It is two or three clerks in the Treasury who do it.

Mr. KING. If the War Department has promulgated reasonable regulations respecting liability and the proof required, that answers the criticism which I made.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator can rest content that that is true. We have had these claims heretofore, and I know, from the observance of those that have come, that all of them were presented as claims and have been gone over carefully by a board of survey, and they decide not only the justice of the claim but as to whether those things were reasonably necessary for them to have with them at the time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I call the Senator's attention to the act of July 9, 1918? It is to be found at page 880 of the Acts of 1918, in chapter 6 of that act, which was an appropriation act. It sets out the law in its entirety and authorizes the payment of these claims, and only the rulings of the auditors defeat the payments.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAY OF ARMY, NAVY, MARINE CORPS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 3383.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3383) to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Public Health Service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask if the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] is the pending amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gronna	Myers	Reed
Bankhead	Harris	Nelson	Sheppard
Borah	Harrison	New	Sherman
Brandegee	Henderson	Norris	Smoot
Calder	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Sterling
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Page	Townsend
Curtis	King	Phelan	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Lodge	Phipps	Warren
Fernald	McKellar	Pittman	Williams
Frelinghuysen	McNary	Pomerene

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] are detained on business of the Senate.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] is absent on account of illness, and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] is absent on account of illness in his family.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] are absent on account of illness.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are detained on public business.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is unavoidably absent. He has a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Forty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The names of the absent Senators were called, and Mr. RANSDELL answered to his name.

Mr. WATSON entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. ELKINS, Mr. MOSES, and Mr. CULBERSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask that the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to add a new section in the bill, to be known as section 5, and to read as follows:

That in lieu of compensation now prescribed by law, commissioned officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey shall receive the same pay and allowances as are now or may hereafter be prescribed for officers of the Navy with whom they hold relative rank as prescribed in the act of May 22, 1917, entitled "An act to temporarily increase the commissioned and warrant and enlisted strength of the Navy and Marine Corps, and for other purposes," including longevity, which shall be based on the total service in the Coast and Geodetic Survey and Army and Navy; and all laws relating to the retirement of commissioned officers of the Navy shall hereafter apply to commissioned officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry. Is the amendment divisible? There are some of us who would like very much to vote for the part of the amendment providing for increased pay, but who do not favor the part of the amendment touching retirement. I was wondering if the question could not be divided so that a separate vote could be taken upon those two proposals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the amendment is divisible.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I ask that the vote be first taken on the proposition relative to increased pay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the first part of the amendment, so that the question may be clearly before the Senate.

The reading clerk read as follows:

That in lieu of compensation now prescribed by law, commissioned officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey shall receive the same pay and allowances as are now or may hereafter be prescribed for officers of the Navy with whom they hold relative rank as prescribed in the act of May 22, 1917, entitled "An act to temporarily increase the commissioned and warrant and enlisted strength of the Navy and Marine Corps, and for other purposes," including longevity, which shall be based on the total service in the Coast and Geodetic Survey and Army and Navy—

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question. What ranks have been conferred upon the members of the Coast and Geodetic Survey and what will be the pay?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There have been conferred on them the assimilated ranks from ensign to captain in the Navy or from second lieutenant to colonel in the Army. That is already a matter of law.

Mr. POMERENE. I have, in times past, looked into this matter, and I am very frank to say that in my judgment this increase in pay ought to be allowed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are really in desperate situation; they are the worst off of all.

Mr. POMERENE. I think so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the second branch of the amendment.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

and all laws relating to the retirement of commissioned officers of the Navy shall hereafter apply to commissioned officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have just a word to say in explanation of that amendment. As the Senate knows, the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] presented this amendment several days ago, but he is to-day absent. I had not studied the amendment very much at the time it was presented, but since then I have had more information given to me about the particular point involved as well as the point in connection with the pay of these officers.

It should be remembered that these officers are appointed on the nomination of the President and confirmation of the Senate. In that respect they hold the same status as do officers of the Army or the Navy or the Marine Corps or the Coast Guard or the Public Health Service. Their duties are continuous; and I venture to say that they spend a greater part of their time at sea than do naval officers. When war breaks out they may be assigned, at the discretion of the President, either to service with the Navy in the assimilated rank or with the Army in the assimilated rank. That was done during the recent war. Some of these officers commanded our troop transports in the Navy; others worked with the Army, and were largely instrumental in making the maps for the use of Gen. Pershing's army in France. As a matter of fact most of the mapping which was done for the launching of the great St. Mihiel offensive was done by the Coast and Geodetic Survey officers who were serving with the Army in their appropriate grades.

There are only 140 of them. The ranking officers holding the grade corresponding to the rank of captain in the Navy or of colonel in the Army are about 12 in number. To-day they are all over 70 years of ago, and one is, I think, as old as 78. It is perfectly apparent that their efficiency is on the decline, if it has not already largely disappeared. There is no provision whatever for retiring them. If this retirement provision is inserted in the bill, the burden on the Treasury annually will be in the neighborhood of $12,000; that is all. If the retirement provision is not inserted in the bill or is not enacted by some other bill, these officers, who are potentially military or naval officers, will be the only ones of their class in the Government who are not entitled to the retirement privilege.

The Chief of the Coast and Geodetic Survey tells me—and, incidentally, he is not affected by the amendment, for the bill is so drawn that it does not cover the chief; he is left just where he is to-day—that partly as the result of the advanced age of the commanding officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey it has been impossible to keep the ships of the Coast and Geodetic Survey in constant active service.

Contributing to that situation is also the fact that 25 per cent of their commissioned personnel has resigned because the pay is so low. It starts at only $1,000 a year. It is an absurd situation; and the chief of that service contends—and I have a good deal of faith in what he says—that if the retirement privilege is extended to Coast and Geodetic officers, just as it is extended to naval officers, the men who have reached an advanced age can be placed upon the retired list and their places be taken by younger men who come in at the bottom, with the result that the whole service will be kept efficient and will be working 100 per cent instead of, as during the past year, at a very decreased rate of efficiency.

I have no interest whatever in this matter. It is relatively small as compared with the remainder of the bill, and I leave it to the Senate, of course, to decide, and it will decide as it sees fit.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from New York a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator stated that there are 140 officers in this service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There are 140; they are limited by law.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. How many are now above the retirement age?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Twelve.

Mr. HARRISON. Twelve in all?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; and they average over 70 years of age.

Mr. HARRISON. Are there many of them who are approaching retirement age; and if so, how many, if the Senator knows?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not say; but I assume there are a number. Of course, the average age of the service is going to get higher and higher unless we provide for retirement; in other words, it will become superannuated unless we invent some way of retiring them and getting them out of active service. That is the trouble with the service to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the second branch of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Has the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] in regard to the Coast Guard been adopted?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It has been adopted.

LETTER OF LORD GREY—LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to give a little attention to an article by Lord Grey which was printed in the press of the country generally on yesterday morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator permit the Chair to state that the article was ordered incorporated in the RECORD at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]?

Mr. REED. I have not yet asked that it be printed, and, inasmuch as it has been ordered printed in the RECORD, I will not ask that it be incorporated in the RECORD again.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harding	McNary	Sheppard
Beckham	Harris	Myers	Smoot
Borah	Harrison	Nelson	Sutherland
Brandegee	Henderson	New	Townsend
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Underwood
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Wadsworth
Culberson	Kellogg	Overman	Warren
Curtis	King	Page	Watson
Dillingham	Lodge	Pomerene
Elkins	McCumber	Ransdell
Gerry	McKellar	Reed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CALDER, Mr. GORE, Mr. GRONNA, Mr. LENROOT, Mr. MOSES, and Mr. STANLEY answered to their names when called.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN and Mr. PITTMAN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to give some brief attention to the letter of Lord Grey which was printed generally throughout the press of this country and of Europe on yesterday. I understand that the full text of the letter has already been placed in the RECORD.

I regard this letter as of very great importance, for reasons that I shall state as I proceed. But, Mr. President, one thing, I believe, ought to be said as a preliminary, and that is that the letter discloses the fact that many Senators have been insisting upon a surrender of American rights which even enlightened British opinion does not demand or justify. I, of course, do not impugn the motives of any of my colleagues. Throughout this long discussion I have not uttered a word intentionally to reflect upon their patriotism or their thorough Americanism. This course I have pursued notwithstanding the fact that the President himself, in some public statements, and Members of the Senate, by statements made upon this floor, have practically accused those who have insisted upon resisting the passage or upon changing the terms of the so-called League of Nations covenant of being "pro-German" or of "acting in the interests of Germany" or of "doing things to please Germany"—very remarkable statements ever to have been made in view of the fact that there is not a single German statesman of prominence who has not been from the first clamoring for the adoption of the League of Nations.

I only call attention to the circumstances in passing because I think that in the future discussion of this covenant foul insinuations against the patriotism of American Senators and foul attacks upon the character of men who have not seen fit to accept this document as it was originally handed to us ought now to cease. But I repeat that the most singular situation ever developed in a great representative body is to find Members of that body insisting upon yielding more of the rights of their country than the other countries of the world demand.

There is another lesson to be taken from this letter. It is that many statements of importance made by the critics of the league, which have on the floor of the Senate and elsewhere been denied, disputed, and almost damned, are now clearly proven to be correct by the declaration of Lord Grey. I do not harshly criticize my colleagues for this, because I can not forget that they had a very high authority for many of their assertions. But as the days have run along has it not become so plain that the wayfaring man, though a fool, could not fail to see that discussion has disclosed this instrument to be full of error and crowded with manifest dangers to the Republic?

When the league constitution was originally handed to us we were told that it was a perfect instrument. I will take the time to read the statement of the President. It will be remembered that before he brought to the country the text of the original document word was sent to the Congress that discussion ought not to take place until he had arrived and had explained the document.

It was because of that request that the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee refrained from any discussion on his part, although there was some on the floor of the Senate. When the President called before him the members of the Foreign Relations Committee to disclose his views regarding this document he said "each article was passed only after the most careful examination by each member of the committee, and that there was good and sufficient reason for the phraseology and substance of each article."

The document was presented to us as an instrument which, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, could not be altered—with this distinction, that the Medes and Persians refused to alter their laws after they had been passed, while in this instance we were forbidden to alter the document before it was passed. It was handed to us in a manner that reminded me of almost the closing words of Revelation:

> And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life.

The moment a single voice was raised in this country venturing to call attention to a defect in the league, the possessor of that voice was challenged almost as a traitor to his country and to mankind. Public meetings were held to denounce all who dared to say there was upon the sacred instrument the least spot or blemish. The demand was for the immediate passage without change. Those who dared venture to challenge the instrument in any respect were spoken of as narrow-headed. I remember that our distinguished friend, Mr. Taft, the syndicated patriot of America, was particularly severe in his comments. He denounced everybody who questioned the infallibility of the scheme. "We must accept it at once." "We must accept it without debate." He accused some of ignorance, some were controlled by improper motives, and so forth. Mr. Taft is only one of that type of reformers who have so well made themselves the voice of the great financial interests and international bankers who have been putting up the money for the propaganda in favor of the acceptance of the league.

Women's clubs were called together, and called together by Mr. Taft's organization, or at its instance, to pass resolutions in favor of the immediate acceptance of this document. Civic societies were called upon to pass resolutions denunciatory of all who said there was anything the matter with the league. Paid agents were employed or sent into every State of the Union and into almost every county of every State. In Missouri they opened headquarters and organized an expensive bureau. So it was elsewhere. And yet, sir, before the discussion had been 20 days old errors had been disclosed in the instrument of so grave a character that its authors were compelled by their acts, if not by words, to admit the fact.

We called attention to the fact that the Monroe doctrine was nowhere mentioned, and we pointed out the broad language of the instrument, which undertook a general world jurisdiction, and which necessarily would absorb the Monroe doctrine and destroy it.

Our arguments were denounced as almost imbecilic. We were told that the Monroe doctrine had "been extended to all the world." The statement, of course, could not bear the test of argument. Accordingly those who brought the instrument to us and told us we must accept it without change themselves went back to Versailles and there confessed that we were right and they were wrong by writing into the instrument a new section, known as article 21, and which I read:

Nothing in this covenant shall be deemed to affect the validity of international engagements, such as treaties of arbitration or regional understandings like the Monroe doctrine, for securing the maintenance of peace.

It was, I repeat, an absolute confession that the immaculate document, which we were denounced for not accepting without dotting an "i" or crossing a "t," was defective. It was an admission that the Monroe doctrine had been granted away.

In this connection I call attention to the fact that the Monroe doctrine is not now saved by the amendment. Why this amendment was drawn in the equivocal language I just read it is impossible for me to say, but if it had been drawn by a smart lawyer on the other side of the table from me I would have said that he intended to mislead me by pretending to do something without actually doing it.

The English view upon this question, set forth in the official Government document, the White Paper, ought to be enough to convince the Senate that the amended treaty does not save the Monroe doctrine. I shall present it in a moment, but first a word of comment.

The Monroe doctrine was an American doctrine. It was a doctrine of self-defense. It was a doctrine which the United States proclaimed and always construed for itself. When only a few years ago, in a controversy with Venezuela, Lord Salisbury asserted that the Monroe doctrine was not international law, he expressed the fixed views of the British Government and of other European powers. When Grover Cleveland said that "it was an American doctrine, governing on this side of the ocean, and that the United States would not only assert it but construe it for itself," Grover Cleveland spoke the American doctrine. Whenever we yield to any foreign tribunal the right to construe that doctrine, we yield the doctrine. There is not a single foreign nation that would not denounce it the moment that nation's interests were concerned. That the purpose of the British Government at this hour is to take from the United States the right to construe the doctrine is shown by the text of the British White Paper. It reads:

The origin of the Monroe doctrine is well known. It was proclaimed in 1823 to prevent America becoming a theater for the intrigues of European absolutism. At first a principle of American foreign policy, it has become an international understanding, and it is not illegitimate for the people of the United States to ask that the covenant should recognize this fact. In its essence it is consistent with the spirit of the covenant, and indeed the principles of the league, as expressed in article 10, represent the extension to the whole world of the principles of the Monroe doctrine; while should any dispute as to the meaning of the latter (the Monroe doctrine) ever arise between American and European powers, the league is there to settle it.

In other words, the British Empire still insists that it has not recognized the Monroe doctrine as international law. It insists that the Monroe doctrine is nothing but "a regional understanding." That was substantially the position taken by Lord Salisbury in the Venezuela controversy. But, above all, the Empire insists that should any dispute ever arise regarding the meaning or the application of the Monroe doctrine the League of Nations has jurisdiction to decide that controversy.

That is to say, this American doctrine is to be construed and applied by a tribunal of seven foreigners, seven aliens, with the right of the United States barred from sitting or casting a vote. Mark you, when a controversy arises over the Monroe doctrine the United States must be a party to that controversy, and by the express provisions of the league no party to a controversy can sit in the controversy. Accordingly, the United States and the nation raising the question would each be barred from sitting. There would remain to decide the question seven of the nine members of the league council, each being an alien to the United States.

Thus the doctrine of James Monroe, the American doctrine, sanctified by time, by the great name of its author and the commendation of the great men of American history, would go for its ultimate construction to a tribunal every member of which despises the Monroe doctrine, every member of which represents a nation that has denied the very existence of the Monroe doctrine, and every member of which even now in the league covenant refuses to acknowledge it as international law or to recognize it as anything but "a regional understanding."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to call to the Senator's attention also that it must be such a regional understanding as makes for peace.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In other words, if the assertion of the Monroe doctrine at any time involves the exercise of force on our part to prevent its violation, it would not be excepted from the league under this amendment.

Mr. REED. That is absolutely correct, and I thank the Senator for the suggestion.

Permit me to say a word in regard to that. Does that not leave us without any Monroe doctrine at all? A doctrine which you can not enforce is no doctrine. It does not amount to as much as the prayers and remonstrances of the Chinamen did while they stood outside the door of the Versailles peace convention asking for their rights with Japan inside rattling her sword. It does not amount to as much as the supplications and tears of the Egyptian representatives who clamored for the right of self-determination and were thrown in jail for coming to present their humble petition.

Again, Mr. President, when the original document was presented we called attention to the fact that there was a way for a nation to get in and no way for it to get out. On the floor of the Senate in many statements we were criticized and lampooned for making that argument. Throughout the country the Taft circus went upon its tour, and everywhere it appeared all its leading performers, from clown to ringmaster, rang the changes upon the absurdity of anyone claiming that a nation could not withdraw at will and without a moment's notice. Notwithstanding the alleged foolishness of the criticism, it was, in fact, so unanswerable that when the new covenant came back it for the first time contained this language:

Any member of the league may, after two years' notice of its intention so to do, withdraw from the league, provided that all its international obligations and all its obligations under this covenant shall have been fulfilled at the time of its withdrawal.

The insertion of the new language was an absolute admission that there was no method of withdrawal provided in the original document. It was an admission of record that the critics had been right. But, like the clause in relation to the Monroe doctrine, the new language did not save the situation; indeed, in some respects it made matters worse. The new language leaves it in the power of somebody to decide whether a nation "has fulfilled all its international obligations and its obligations under the league." Clearly that can not be the nation at interest, for the nation at interest is barred from even sitting in a controversy where it is a party. Besides, if a nation at interest could decide it for itself, then any and all nations could withdraw, regardless of whether they had fulfilled their obligations or not, by simply asserting that they had done so.

It must be plain to every candid man, therefore, that the right of withdrawal is to be decided by the council or the assembly of the League of Nations. When a question of such character is submitted to either body, there must obtain a unanimous vote. Accordingly, one single nation, by casting an adverse vote, could keep us in the league by claiming that we have not fulfilled all our international obligations.

Besides, a fixed term is now specified, so that, no matter what the emergency, how grave the crisis, how imminent the danger, the United States will be compelled to remain for two years, although by so doing she may jeopardize her most sacred interests.

Again, the critics of this inspired document ventured to call attention to the fact that the United States might be bound in many matters by a mere majority vote. We followed that by a rather clear demonstration, I think, that Great Britain could in almost every instance control that majority. We were denounced upon the floor of the Senate and denounced throughout the country everywhere the Taft circus pitched its tent for having made a groundless attack. We were told that "a unanimous vote was necessary," although there was not a single line in the instrument to indicate the requirement of a unanimous vote upon questions generally.

But behold, after all that denunciation had taken place, after the mind of the country had been poisoned with the thought that a useless and groundless criticism was being made, we found that when the new instrument was presented to us it contained another admission of record that we had been right when we contended that a majority vote would bind. The new instrument wrote in the thing that it had been claimed on the floor of the Senate was in there all the time. We find article 5 with this new language:

Except where otherwise expressly provided in this covenant, or by the terms of this treaty, decisions at any meeting of the assembly or of the council shall require the agreement of all the members of the league represented at the meeting.

On all matters of procedure the vote may be by a majority vote, and so forth. Thus again the framers of the covenant admitted by action that the criticism was sound.

Mr. President, although these changes to which I have called attention—changes of the most vital and important character—were made because of the criticism, I have never heard anybody whose broad and expansive brow had been enlightened by the "narrow heads" admit that he had been mistaken. On the contrary, the abuse of the critics went on just as it had gone on before.

A large number of other changes of the most important character were made in the second document presented to us, but I do not intend to take the time to go through them.

Mr. President, around one question a great deal of debate has raged. I refer to the six votes granted to the British Empire. Let me very briefly review the history of that matter.

For a long time it was claimed in the Senate and claimed by Mr. Taft's organization throughout the country, by every syndicated lecturer, by every syndicated writer, and by every syndicated teacher that it was an absurd thing to claim that the colonies of the British Empire had a right to vote in the League of Nations. Men were denounced here upon the floor and denounced throughout the country for even daring to claim that the British colonies could vote. Long arguments had to be made in order to demonstrate from the text of the instrument that the colonies were asserting the right of full membership.

The President stated as late as September 15 last in his speech at Spokane, Wash.:

There is another matter—I have forgotten who it was that said it, but I would not mention his name if I remembered it [laughter]—that this covenant was an arrangement for the dominance of Great Britain. They base that upon the fact that in the assembly of the council six units of the British Empire are represented, whereas the United States is represented as only one unit. Alike in the assembly and the council, the vote of the United States is an absolute veto. We can always veto, always offset, with one vote the British six votes. I must say that I look with perfect philosophy upon the difference in number.

Again, in speaking at Denver, Colo., he said:

It is in the assembly that the combined representation of the several members of the British Empire are assigned six votes, and you are constantly being told that Great Britain has six votes and we have one. I want you to appreciate the full significance of that. They have six votes in the assembly, and the assembly does not vote. So that bubble is exploded. * * *

The President entirely overlooked the fact that the United States does not have a veto vote in any controversy in which she is concerned. If her life is at stake, she does not have a vote. She does not, when her case is being considered, sit on either council or assembly. But the most remarkable statement is that the British colonies "only vote in the assembly" and that "the assembly does not vote." I call attention to the statement; it furnishes its own comment.

Again, at Salt Lake City on September 23 the President said:

It sticks in the craw of a great many persons that in the constitution of the League of Nations, as it is said, Great Britain has been given six votes and the United States only one. Well, now, that would be very interesting if true, but it does not happen to be true; that is to say, it is not true in this sense, that the one American vote counts as much as the British six. In the first place, they have not got six votes in the council of the league, which is the only body that originates action—

That is a grave mistake—

but in the assembly of the league, which is the debating and not the voting body. And every time the assembly participates in any active resolution of the league that resolution must be concurred in by all the nations represented on the council, which makes the affirmative vote of the United States in every instance necessary. The six votes of the British Empire can not do anything to which the United States does not consent.

A few moments later he said:

I have frequently said, I think, it is very much more important to be one and count six than to be six and count six.

Mr. President, the language I have read does not leave it open to discussion whether or not statements were made that the six votes of the British Empire did not count or whether the statement was made that the six votes of the British Empire could always be offset by the single vote of the United States. The President ignored the fact that the United States does not vote where it is a party at interest.

But, Mr. President, the statement the President made was not alone uttered by him. On the floor of the Senate, after long debate, the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] had this to say:

Where is the danger of dominance by England, the Catholic Church, or the colored races when no action can be taken except by unanimous consent?

I again call attention, because attention can not be too often called, to the fact that in no case does the United States vote where the United States is a party. It is when the United States is a party that her great and overmastering interests are at stake. It is just when we need to employ the alleged "veto power" discussed by the President that we do not have it at all. But Great Britain can nevertheless cast her six votes.

Again, the Senator from Oklahoma said:

Great stress has been laid upon the number of votes given to Great Britain as in the cases of Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, Canada, and India, while only one is given to the United States.

The answer to this is that since a unanimous decision is required it is not of the slightest importance; and, second, that in so far as mere votes are concerned, the United States has a number of small nations whose support could be relied upon—

Then he cites Cuba and Haiti, and such countries as that as the backers of the United States. But he continues—but there is nothing in the argument, one way or the other. The argument is specious; it is fallacious; it is misleading and unworthy of being presented to the American Senate. A few votes are of no importance where all must agree.

And the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] had this to say:

But it is complained that in this League of Nations Great Britain has a voting power far superior to our own, because some of her self-governing colonies are allowed a vote, not in the council, which will undoubtedly settle all of the great international questions, but in the assembly, to which some international question might by some possibility be referred.

I desire to interpolate that the plain language of the instrument is that every controversy can be sent to the assembly; that is, every dispute between nations. The plain language of the instrument also is that the assembly has jurisdiction over all matters which may disturb the peace of the world. But the Senator continues:

Let us first consider the fairness or unfairness of such a declaration. I have never heard, either on the floor of the Senate or in any of the addresses which have been made in opposition to this league outside of the Senate, a full, fair statement of its provisions relating to this subject. None of these opponents have told their audiences that in the council the British Empire has, in fact, but one vote.

A little later the Senator said:

In the council Canada has no vote, Australia no vote, New Zealand has no vote, and none of those can become a member of the council without the consent of the United States.

But, answer the opponents of a League of Nations—and especially those opponents who wish to incite a hyphenated American opposition—the disputes may be removed to the assembly where each member of the league, including colonies, would have a vote. But that would never be done unless we ourselves should desire it.

Why "unless we ourselves should desire it"? Our opponents can remove it, whether we desire it or do not desire it. But the Senator continues:

First, because it would require a unanimous vote for removal.

Why, Mr. President, a dispute may be removed as of right by the mere filing of a notice. No vote is taken; it is an absolute and unqualified right. All that is necessary is to file a paper asking for the removal of the controversy. So the Senator proceeded at length to argue that it made no difference whether Great Britain had six votes and we had one.

The distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] made a very long and interesting speech.

The Senator declares:

Much opposition has been urged against the league because a great Nation like the United States has only one vote in the assembly, and small nations, like Siam and Liberia, each has a full vote, and also because Great Britain has one vote and her five self-governing colonies a vote each. But what difference does the number of votes make when on all important matters the action of the assembly must be unanimous or have the unanimous concurrence of the council, upon which the United States is permanently represented? Thus in all matters of importance before the assembly, except in cases where she is a party to the dispute, the United States will possess a veto power, and a decision can only be reached by her concurrence. Thus the question of the number of votes in the assembly held by different groups is not vital.

So this Senator held, in a long speech and a labored argument, that the United States was at no disadvantage because of the six votes of the British Empire; that, in fact, our one vote was always as good as their six votes.

Mr. President, I might quote from a very large number of Senators on this side of the Chamber who have argued the same thing, but I am content now to close my quotations with one further—that of the distinguished leader upon the floor in these debates for the league. Not once but many times has he urged the same thing which he stated on this occasion, and which I am about to read.

On October 27, 1919, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] said—I am reading from page 7550 of the RECORD of that date:

Mr. President, I am unable to understand why it is that Senators view the membership of these self-governing dominions of the British Empire with so much misgiving and so much opposition. Senators have stood here upon the floor and declared that Great Britain had six votes. They have stood here and declared that the British Empire had six votes. It is not possible that intelligent people should believe either statement. Great Britain is not a member of the league. The British Empire is specifically given one vote for the council and one vote for the assembly.

To say that the British Empire has six votes is to say that the fight which Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and the Union of South Africa have made for independent recognition and independent representation in the assembly is a farce. Each has secured a vote for itself because it is not willing to be represented by the Empire.

And so this Senator argued, taking a little different "shoot" from the rest, that these colonies would not vote with the mother country; that they were going to vote with us or for themselves; but all have stood upon the ground that six votes to the British Empire was not a menace. Accordingly, the battle raged for the purpose of showing that as a matter of fact these votes did count; that this representation was a representation that benefited Great Britain.

The first thing that had any tendency to silence the advocates of the doctrine that the membership of the colonies is immaterial is the reading into the RECORD—I believe by myself, but that is unimportant—the letter that was sent by Clemenceau, Woodrow Wilson, and Lloyd-George to the Canadian premier, the substance of which was that Sir Robert Borden was right in his contention that the dominions were full members of the league, eligible to sit on the council. That letter has already been read. I ask, however, to insert it at this point because I do not want to take the time of the Senate to read it again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The question having been raised as to the meaning of article 4 of the League of Nations covenant, we have been requested by Sir Robert Borden to state whether we concur in his view that upon the true construction of the first and second paragraphs of that article representatives of the self-governing dominions of the British Empire may be selected or named as members of the council. We have no hesitation in expressing our entire concurrence in this view. If there were any doubt, it would be entirely removed by the fact that the articles are not subject to a narrow or technical construction.

(Signed) G. CLEMENCEAU.
WOODROW WILSON.
D. LLOYD-GEORGE.

Dated at Quai D'Orsay, Paris, the 6th day of May, 1919.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, many of these claims that the British six votes did not count, or that they were immaterial, or that the British colonies could not vote at all, were made upon the floor of the Senate long after British statesmen had told the world to the contrary. We were presented with the astonishing spectacle of Members of the Senate arguing, not in favor of preserving American rights and American equality, but of insisting upon a construction favorable to England, which would give England six votes to our one. Among the statements that were put forth, I desire to call attention to one made by Lloyd-George on December 28 or 29 in the London Times that—

With regard to the British Empire, each part of it was independent, but each came voluntarily to the assistance of the motherland. They had all suffered very heavily and fought gallantly. Australia had lost as many men as the United States, and it was only right that they should have votes in the League of Nations. Those votes would not, however, be used on any question which would arise between this country and the United States.

Mr. President, the last statement is open to question. For the moment I merely remark that under the plain language of the league covenant the British colonies can vote in every controversy where the British Empire is a party or where any one of the colonies is a party.

Notwithstanding this statement of Lloyd-George, Senators still asserted that the rights of these British colonies were inconsequential and that their votes would not count.

The construction of these Senators evidently aroused the sporting blood of Mr. Gardiner, the editor, or recently the editor, of one of the most powerful British papers—the London Daily News.

Without stopping to read the entire article, I insert it for the second time in the RECORD. I do so because I want the country to know that the Senate had notice from a British source that those who have contended for jamming this league down the throats of the Senate and the throats of the country, disregarding all protests and all warnings, did so with knowledge that British statesmen and British publicists were admitting to the world the truth that the covenant gave Great Britain six votes, which could be cast when the Empire was a party, and that we were entitled to have the inequality wiped out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"Great Britain doesn't want any loaded dice; the British Empire is a unit, one and indivisible."

Admitting that the present draft of the League of Nations covenant gave the Empire a preponderance of votes in the assembly, A. G. Gardiner, editor of the London Daily News, advocated to-day an amendment, stipulating expressly that when one section of the British Empire is involved in a matter all other sections be prevented from voting.

"If asked to accept such an amendment, I am sure the British people willingly would do so," Gardiner said.

"The spirit of the covenant certainly contemplates the British Empire as a unit. But it fails to specify this, probably because the omission never came to the attention of the peace conferees. Now that the issue has been raised, however, it will not be difficult to make the wording conform to the spirit and to eliminate America's cause for fear. Perhaps the wording could be changed without resubmitting the covenant to the nations concerned if Great Britain, as the interested party, would request the change.

"Although the intention of the conferees obviously was not to give the British Empire more votes than the United States, the text of the covenant justifies Senator REED'S assertion. He believes that in case of a dispute between the United States and one section of the Empire, the other sections would be sitting in judgment on the matter. Personally, I think it is debatable how much the scales would be loaded. It is conceivable that Canada's or South Africa's interests might be opposed to those of the Empire, or even allied with America's. But I readily understand the American concern in the matter and recognize it as a real objection which should be met. Perhaps the best way would be to insert a ruling in the covenant specifically covering this exigency."

Mr. REED. And now, sir, comes the letter of Lord Grey. As I read it I want those Senators who voted against the Johnson resolution, proposing an equality of votes for the United States, to consider these words from this British statesman, from the man who sits in this matter "upon the other side of the table," and who lives upon the other side of the ocean. I want them to answer how they will justify themselves to their own consciences for having refused to insist upon the United States having an equality of votes when this British statesman declares that we ought to have an equality of votes. I want the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], who said that it would be impractical to write such a provision in the league, that it might jar with some other portions of that holy document, to consider the language I am about to read. I am wondering what has become of the old American pride and the old American common sense, when we have arrived at a condition where, in order to prove a case on the floor of the Senate, we must not only proceed by logic and argument but we must finally confound our opponents with the admissions of Great Britain's statesmen that they are ready to have an equality of voting, even if American Senators are prepared to concede them six to our one.

Mark you, now, there has been a claim made here, and made persistently over a period of months, not by one but by many men, that the British colonies will not be really members; that they are let in in some way, but have not anything to say; and, as the President put it, they are merely members of a debating society. Let me pause here long enough to say that if the council of the League of Nations is only a debating society, then 23 nations of the world are only permitted to talk while 9 other nations of the world constitute a great military autocracy to regulate them and to control them.

That is the situation wrought out in the holy name of world democracy.

But returning to my theme, is it true that these colonies come in as full members or not? Whatever else you may say of Lord Grey, he spoke in this instance with a clarity that does not leave any room for misunderstanding. I read:

The self-governing dominions are full members of the league. They will admit, and Great Britain can admit, no qualification whatever of that right.

That is what we have argued all along. That is what certain distinguished gentlemen have denounced us for arguing. You can not read that too often:

The self-governing dominions are full members of the league. They will admit, and Great Britain can admit, no qualification whatever of that right.

Then, of course, they are qualified to sit upon the council if elected. Then, of course, any one, two, three, four, or five of them may be elected to sit upon the council at the same time the mother country sits there as a permanent member, all of which was certified to by President Wilson and Clemenceau and Lloyd-George in the letter I have just put in the RECORD. So they do come in as full members without any qualification whatsoever.

Lord Grey continues:

Whatever the self-governing dominions may be in theory and in the letter of the constitution, they have in effect ceased to be colonies in the old sense of the word. They are free communities, independent as regards all their own affairs, and partners in those which concern the Empire at large.

But, Mr. President, regardless of that statement, I say that they are linked to the mother country not merely with hooks of steel but with something that is stronger than hooks of steel—by bonds of flesh and blood. There was not a part of the British Empire, there was not a city in England itself, nor a hamlet, the people of which with greater unanimity stood by the mother country than did the people of Canada, Australia, and New Zealand—aye, it would even seem South Africa.

Mr. President, Senators on this floor denounced some of us for asking an equality of vote on behalf of the United States. They also voted against a proposition giving the United States a vote equal to the vote of the British Empire and of the colonies. What says this British statesman in regard to that proposition?

> Our object is to maintain the status of the self-governing dominions, not to secure a greater British than American vote, and we have no objection in principle to an increase of the American vote.

I wonder what American Senator there is now who, in view of that statement, which apparently is almost an official declaration of the British Government, will vote against an amendment giving to America as many votes as the British Empire?

I wonder how many votes would be cast against the Johnson resolution to-day? If there are any more votes cast against it, I think we ought to introduce a resolution to create a vacancy or two in the Senate and install Lord Grey, who apparently on this question would represent America better than some men on this floor have been doing.

If ever I find that I have voted against giving to the United States a right equal to that given the British Empire and that the next day the Empire has declared that I ought to have voted for my country, I shall be ashamed to meet myself in the dark.

What do these gentlemen say now who have been going up and down the land denouncing everybody who said there was danger in the six votes; what do they say now who have gone over the land abusing everyone who said that the United States ought to have as many votes as the British Empire, now that the great spokesman of the British Empire says that the claim is just, that it is right, that it is fair, that they have no objection whatever to it in principle? It is a strange thing that we must go to British statesmen to learn what are American rights. It is a pitiable thing when the American Senate has to learn the lesson of American rights out of the mouth of a British diplomat.

I appeal to Senators to no longer allow their judgment to be clouded by the prejudices of partisanship, but to meet this occasion like men. Let us so act that in the future no English statesman will be called upon to make public statement of America's rights in order to induce a lot of American Senators to vote for a treaty amendment inserting those rights in the treaty.

Mr. President, the statement I have read needs only to conclude it a reference to Lord Grey's declaration that there are more English-speaking people in the United States than in the entire British Empire, and that, therefore, America's claim that she ought to stand as an equal and have as many votes as the Empire is a reasonable one. That is something that I think most Senators have overlooked. There are more English-speaking people in the United States than in the whole British Empire, and I think they are, man for man, quite as good. Of course, modern Anglo-Americanism compels me to desist at that point.

Mr. President, there is in Lord Grey's statement, and in some of the other statements, some important information as to why Lord Grey gave his pronunciamento to the world. It is plainly the effort of England to get us into this league, to coax us into the league; in a way, and by indirection, to take charge of the affairs of the Senate and tell us how to compose our differences. It is the last bit of evidence, and a very important piece of evidence, too, of the fact that Great Britain and France want us in this league on any terms whatsoever.

The statement was long ago made upon the floor of the Senate by the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee that the Empire will accept the league with any amendments we may adopt. But, of course, that came from a partisan Republican source, and Democrats upon this side of the Chamber might disregard it. But, sir, every event that has transpired, down to and including the letter of Lord Grey, shows that it is true. We can write the document in any way we desire and they will glady accept it. I propose to devote a few moments of time to expressing my opinion as to why they will accept it, and I think I can follow by evidence so concrete as to place the case beyond dispute.

When this war closed, and our allies proceeded to divide up the world among themselves, they were content. I should perhaps say that Italy was disappointed because she did not get Fiume, but she gained enormously in territory. She obtained a position of commanding importance over portions of the Adriatic which she had not theretofore had and she will receive enormous indemnity.

France regained her lost Provinces and has taken possession for 15 years of all the trans-Rhine country. I have not the slightest doubt in my mind that if she maintains her position of power she will retain that country as a permanent part of her possessions. I do not believe there is a single Frenchman living who in his heart does not expect to hold that territory. France, in addition, acquired enormous dominion in Africa. She satisfied, as far as ambition could be satisfied out of the remaining raw material on the habitable earth, her ambitions for expansion.

Great Britain along with France took over all that was left of the entire continent of Africa. Substantially all, except a small portion held by Belgium, that vast continent, with its untold and undreamed of riches, came under the British flag to stay there perhaps forever. She took over Egypt in absolute violation of the pledges that had been given by Gladstone and other British statesmen. Eleven million protesting human beings are thus brought beneath British domination. She reached out her powerful arms and gathered in Persia. To-day she is more completely in control of Persia than she was of Egypt before the peace council assembled. By taking Persia she closed the Persian Gulf to Russia, a matter that had been in controversy between those two countries for nearly a century and which had been compromised between Russia and England shortly before the war began. Now the Persian Gulf comes under the British flag. She spread her net and gathered in all the islands of the sea south of the Equator, so that with her former possessions she commands the trade routes of the entire south Pacific.

Japan, through the narrow slits of her wicked eyes, gazed greedily at Shantung. She tore the heart out of China and gathered to herself 45,000,000 Chinese inhabitants who are to-day under the thraldom of Japanese military masters.

Then, sir, while our representatives sat at the peace table soundly asleep, as it seems to me, Japan demanded and received all of the Pacific islands north of the Equator which Germany had theretofore controlled. Thus she came into possession of a belt of islands lying between the Philippines and the coast of the United States, bringing her a thousand miles nearer the Hawaiian Islands than is the coast of the United States, and bringing her 2,000 miles nearer striking distance of our coast than she had ever been before.

These bases of supply, these harbors of refuge and ports of attack, give Japan command of the northern Pacific. In case of any war between Japan and the United States they enable her, first, to cut us off from the Philippines; second, to have points of vantage from which to assail and possibly take the Hawaiian Islands, where she already has an enormous population of loyal Japanese; and, third, if ever we are at war with her and our Navy should move to her attack, we must run the gauntlet of her sea fortresses from which she will come forth to strike our fleet.

These are the things our allies gained. There is nothing left of the world on yon side of the Atlantic; there is left scarcely an island of the sea. They have filled themselves to the full.

Now, they desire the United States in the league for three reasons: First, to bind us to an absolute consent to all of these acquisitions they have made; second, to bind us to defend them in their possessions forever; and, third, to bind us with our money and blood to guarantee their existing political independence and to guard their borders against attack. In the name of high heaven, why should they not want us in the league?

So we find an admission made by indirection of this very desire, and back of it, in part at least, are reflected the reasons for the desire. We find this in Lord Grey's letter:

> What, then, may be fairly expected from the United States in this great crisis of world policy? For crisis, indeed, it is. If the participation of the United States was enormously helpful in securing a victory in the critical months of 1918, its help will be even more essential to secure stability in peace. Without the United States present the League of Nations may become little better than a league of allies for armed self-defense against a revival of Prussian militarism or against the military sequel to bolshevism in Russia. Bolshevism is despotism, and despotisms have a tendency to become militarism, as the great French Revolution proved.
> Without the United States it—the league—will have neither the overwhelming physical nor moral force behind it that it should have, or if it has physical force it will not have the same degree of moral force, for it will be predominantly a European and not a world organization, and it will be tainted with the interracial jealousies of Europe.

Mr. President, those are smooth words. That is the case stated at its best. Let us translate it into plain, blunt language. Without the armies of the United States and the money of the United States the league can not stand. Let us translate that again. The United States is to furnish the men and the money and the power to sustain the league. According to Lord Grey, conditions being very rotten in Europe we are bound to enter the league for Europe's benefit. We are invited to plunge into this broth of perdition for their benefit to guarantee them in the enormous gains—I will not say loot—they have recently taken.

Of course they want us in. The singular thing is that American Senators say, "Let us in; let us in on any terms. We will sign away the rights of our country," even though the case is so plain that British statesmen come forward and say that it is not fair or right that we should be asked to do the things we have been asked to do.

What has become of the old-fashioned Americanism of this country when Senators are eagerly crowding forward with the rights of their people in their hands saying, "Let us give them away." Instead they should say, "We will give only that which must be given."

If I had a lawyer representing me who was engaged in carrying on negotiations with another man, and he should make a proposition to that other man so unfair to me that the man himself would protest, I would discharge that lawyer. If I ever found myself, as a lawyer, making a proposition for my client that was so unfair to my client that the lawyer on the other side of the table said, "No; you ought not to do that; that is not fair to your client," I would quit practicing law. But here is Lord Grey, who tells the American Senate just that. Again, Lord Grey states:

With America outside the League of Nations the old order of things will be revived; old consequences will recur; there will again be some great catastrophe of war in which it will find itself compelled to intervene for the same reason and at no less or even greater cost than in 1917.

That contains two important statements: One is, as I have already said, that the condition over there is so rotten that war is liable to come out of it at any time. If that is true, do you want to bind your sons to enter all of those wars? If so, sign up article 10 and you will be in them without any question.

But Lord Grey undertakes to hold out to us the idea—if not the threat—that if we do not enter the league European wars will come, and that then we shall be dragged into them. Mr. President, they may come and we may be dragged into them; but the difference between the proposition I advance and that advanced by some other Senators is this: They propose to sign an absolute contract to-day that we shall get into those wars.

Mr. SMOOT. So that they will be able to drag us into them.

Mr. REED. Yes. I propose that we shall reserve to ourselves the right to decide, when the issue is presented, whether we ought to get in or ought to stay out. That is a very important distinction.

I have no desire to say a harsh word regarding Great Britain or any country by whose side we have fought; but I can not disregard the plain truth of history; that is, that nations look out for themselves. What has changed the nature of the nations that have been our associates? Did they look out for themselves in this war? Did they look out for themselves when the war was concluded? Did they look out for themselves when it came to taking all the spoils of war? Did they look out for themselves when they awarded us 2 per cent of the ships, an amount so small and so contemptible that our representatives refused to consider it? They said, "You have taken the carcass of the animal, its hide and tallow, and you might as well take the horns and hoofs." They did not say that in so many words, but that is what they meant. These nations have shown no other spirit but the spirit that is manifested by keen, shrewd peoples looking after their interests. So, Mr. President, rest assured that one of the prime causes of future European conflict will be found in the fact that France, Britain, and Japan will be sure to assert their claims very stoutly if they know that the moment war ensues the United States is obligated to come to their assistance with its armies and its navies.

Mr. President, I am getting a little tired of being warned from across the Atlantic and other places that the United States is going to be dragged into every other European war. That is an excuse for dragging us into the league. How do they know that we are going to be dragged into another European war? This country has existed for over 140 years; she was never dragged into a single European war except twice; in the first instance the War of 1812. That came through the aggression of Great Britain, and I do not think Great Britain will repeat the mistake. I hope she is too friendly to us to want to do so. I do not wish to discuss the question of our power and Great Britain's power matched against each other; but if Great Britain is inclined to make that mistake and do that thing again, then I do not want her for a partner, and I do not want to sign an agreement to help her fight her battles.

Will France drag us into a European war? If she should, then the blood of all the slain upon the fields of France would cry out against her, for so long as the memories of men live surely in the hearts of the French people there will be a fervor of love for America when they remember the fact that it was Yankee soldiers whose bodies and bravery stopped the onrushing Hun at the very gates of Paris.

Will Japan? Sir, Japan may. I say now I neither want Japan as an emeny outside the League of Nations nor as a partner inside the league. Who, then, will drag us into war? Will it be Germany? Why, Germany and Austria standing together were not able until the Russian front had been broken to overcome the armies of France and England. Austria has been dismembered.

There is nothing left of that ancient Empire except a small group of people so cut off from their natural supplies that it is now said by economists that they are doomed to starvation.

Need we fear Germany? Germany could not cross the sea to hurt this country even were she rehabilitated and with all her military force intact. How can Germany get across the ocean to attack us when our fleet is superior to hers, and should always be kept superior to hers?

But I have digressed a little from my theme. In 1812 we were dragged into a European war. In 1812 to 1914 there were 106 wars in Europe and Asia. Fifty of them were wars of importance; some five or six were tremendous struggles involving several nations, and one—the closing war of the Napoleonic career—brought a conflagration that swept all of Europe.

Yet in all that time the United States was not required to fire a single shot in one of those wars. If, however, we sign the League of Nations the moment a European war begins the United States is in the struggle. The President himself has so declared; he has said in so many words that "there will be no more neutrals"; that a war anywhere in the world will involve every nation in the world without any action on her part; war once begun we can no longer stand as neutrals.

Mr. President, the reason they want us in is perfectly apparent. It is apparent from what Lloyd-George said; and I also want to call attention to what some other Englishmen have said along this line. I shall read now from Mr. Bottomley, editor of John Bull, a paper with 2,500,000 circulation, an article he wrote in December. He comments upon and lampoons the United States, particularly the Senate, for not having accepted this British document. He goes on to say:

Now what does it all mean? Well, here again I propose to use the completest candor. Having got out of a World War cheaply, America proposes to get out of the peace cheaper. She will have nothing to do with the heavy political obligations undertaken by the delegates at Versailles, and nothing to do, if you please, with President Wilson's League of Nations.

Nothing to do with the heavy political obligations! We are to come in to underwrite the heavy political obligations! To whom are those political obligations due? They are due to France, they are due to England, they are due to Italy, they are due to Japan. These complaining gentlemen are the beneficiaries of the obligations. They are unwilling to collect the obligations due to themselves; they want the United States to come in and guarantee them.

Continuing, this gentleman stated:

The fact that this pinchbeck contraption—

That is, the League of Nations—

was patented in the United States, that the covenant bears in every line the imprint of Washington, does not prevent the Senate from rejecting the whole scheme with contumely.

And why? Simply because, under the terms of the treaty of Versailles, President Wilson, as the Chief Executive authority of the United States, has undertaken important international obligations which, as farseeing Yankee politicians realize, may make it more difficult for America to keep out of the next war than it was to keep out of the last.

Yes; some "farseeing Yankee politicians"—if that is the term this gentleman wants to apply—do realize that the League of Nations covenant "will make it more difficult for us to keep out of future European wars than at present"; and "farseeing Yankee politicians," if the gentleman likes that pleasant term, will insist that the United States shall not underwrite the obligations and guarantee the satisfaction of the cupidity and ambition of all the States of the world.

Continuing, Mr. Bottomley states:

If this treaty were ratified as it stands, the United States would abandon her position of "splendid isolation" and accept a definite share of responsibility for the defense of civilization and the future peace and order of the world.

So they want us in to guarantee the peace and order of the world! That is a fine phrase. It has been much used. Who has been disturbing the peace and order of the world?

Mr. Bottomley says, "Let us have plain speech." Then let us have it.

I voted for this war. I believed that German militarism was a menace. I did not vote for it because German militarism was a menace, however; I voted for it because Germany had offended against the rights of the United States, had sunk our commerce upon the seas, insulted our flag, and murdered our people. But what is the trouble in Europe? Did it spring up in the last few days or years? Was it born with the Kaiser? Is it a thing that can be charged only to the German people?

Let us exercise our plain common sense and our knowledge of history. The great fundamental cause for trouble in Europe has been the overweening ambition of not one but several of the great powers. Away back yonder, France sought to impress her will upon almost all of Europe. Great Britain never has hesitated at every opportunity to extend her dominions. It may startle some of us to know that in the last fifty or sixty years her policy of imperialism has brought under the British flag a domain almost as large as the entire Empire of Rome.

When Great Britain began that policy, Italy followed her example. She began extending her authority in Africa. In making that extension she ran counter to Germany, and at one time only a few years back Germany and France were at the very edge of bloody war over the mere acquisition of African territory. Russia has wanted to reach warm water to satisfy her national ambition, and she has been blocked at every turn by other European powers. Even when the unspeakable Turk was conquered, and Russia about to obtain her way through the Dardanelles, British statesmanship and the statesmanship of other European countries has blocked Russia's very natural ambition. Germany began to extend her dominions. The rights of small peoples were disregarded. She sent her emissaries into every land. She began acquiring the islands of the ocean and placing her flag upon distant shores.

England became alarmed and annoyed at that. So greater armies were created, greater fleets were builded. The result of these national ambitions, these selfish schemes of aggrandizement has been to keep half the world on the very brink of the bloody chasm for the last quarter century. At last war came, and war will come again in Europe until European nations cease their policy of aggrandizement, until they themselves arrive at different ideals, until they are willing, in the interest of their own peace, to quit preying upon each other.

Sir, I am opposed to the United States undertaking by contract to throw her soldiers into Europe every time the ambition of European countries has resulted in bringing on a European conflict. It is a senseless thing to do. It is, I had almost said, an infamous thing to do.

Mr. President, I think I can show the views of European statesmen. They want us in on their side the moment a war begins. They do not want us in when America's interests are involved, but when their interests are involved. They do not want us in when we have deliberated and concluded that we ought to go in; they want us in the day they fire the first shot. When Lloyd-George presented the league to the British Parliament those hard-headed Englishmen broke into a roar of laughter. "Let us try it," exclaimed the premier. "Had it been in existence in 1914 it would have been difficult for Germany and Austria to make war; and if they had, America would have been in the first day instead of two years afterwards."

In other words, when we sign this League of Nations agreement we become a party to a European war the day the war begins and without any right on our part to determine the question for ourselves.

Mr. Clemenceau also states the gravity of the situation. He also admits that upon the United States must rest the great burden. In his speech at his farewell dinner he states:

> If Great Britain, the United States, and Japan remain united, there is a guaranty of peace which exceeds all those guaranties which can be put on paper. If one day those nations are separated, I dare not think of the misfortune which may result.

What does that language mean? It means that we are expected to enter a quadruple alliance to boss this world; and it means that if the United States stays out, then the plan can not be carried through. That is to say, the burden of bossing this world is largely to rest on the shoulders of Uncle Sam.

Yet men who ask us to sign that kind of obligation, a quadruple alliance to control the world, go up and down the United States telling the women there will never be any more war. The man who will make that statement now, after this debate, is, I think, performing a very poor office for his country.

Again, I call attention to the utterance of a British statesman, Lord Cecil, made on September 17:

> If we rely on the provisions of the covenant for preserving peace, we shall be living in a fool's paradise. The most any instrument can do is to remove obstacles from the path of peace.

Thus this great British statesman, who had much to do with the making of peace, certifies to us that we live in a fool's paradise if we believe that this instrument will bring peace.

What, then, is the alternative? The peace that is to be maintained is an armed peace, and in the maintenance of that peace the United States is to furnish a large quota of men and of money.

We have had much talk to the effect that we would not have to send anybody over to Europe; that there would be no trouble. We have a very severe censorship on news from Europe, an outrageous condition, for which somebody ought to answer to the American people. But finally a speech made by President Wilson to the Roumanian and Serbian delegation makes it perfectly plain that the signing of this obligation puts us into every European war; that the signing of this obligation compels us to send our soldiers to Europe every time the fighting cock of the weather vane shall turn in the direction of fields of blood.

He was urging these people to sign the covenant of the league, and this is what he had to say:

> If these States are solidly established, thanks to the treaty which we are making together, the right belongs to the powers which will guarantee the execution of this treaty, in the last analysis, to see to it that the conditions on which these States will be established are of a sort to insure the public peace. * * *
> If the world should be troubled again, if the conditions which we all regard as fundamental are challenged, the guaranties which will be given to you—

That is, to Serbia and Roumania—

> will pledge that the United States will send its Army and fleet across the ocean. Is it surprising, under such conditions, that it should desire to reach a solution of the various problems?

They have been telling the women of the country that we will never have to go to war again; yet here is the President telling the representatives of Serbia and Roumania that the United States proposes to send its men and its fleet across the ocean in order to maintain their governments.

Moreover, he dissipates, I hope forever, the talk that when these delegates get around the table and sign an agreement the sweet spirit of the Master is thereafter to inspire the conduct of all peoples on earth, when he makes this statement:

> I hope that we shall reach * * * a cordial and voluntary agreement to cooperate on the only basis possible. That basis * * * will have to be supplied by those who will furnish the force which will insure the maintenance of peace—by those in whom will dwell that force which will be the supreme guarantee of peace.

In other words, stripping this scheme naked, what is it? It is a gigantic war power, the power of nations combined to crush any nation that opposes their will. It is also the power of the majority to crush any member that opposes the will of the majority. Yet men who advocate a thing of that kind tell the mothers of Israel that their sons will never again have to go to war. While they are saying that out of one corner of their mouths, with a hypocrisy that would shock the better sensibilities of the vilest wretch ever born, they demand a standing army of 578,000 men, and swear they must have it in order to meet their obligations under the league. They demand that every boy, as soon as he arrives at the age of 19, shall become involuntarily a soldier for a period of time. They demand that the universal drafting of every man between the ages of 18 and 45 shall automatically proceed as soon as the United States is engaged in a war. If we agree to become party to every quarrel in the world there will be some kind of a war going on in some part of the world all the time. There are 23 or 24 wars going on to-day.

Mr. President, I come to another statement made by this distinguished Englishman. I offer it for its contrast with the rhapsodies of those who have been telling us that the league will work with absolute perfection; that we are taking no chances; "just sign here, that is all there is to do."

Lord Grey declares—

> The League of Nations is not merely a plunge into the unknown, but a plunge into something which the historical advice and traditions of the United States have hitherto positively disapproved.

Hence he admits we may justly demand reservations. He is much more charitable and reasonable than some gentlemen, who, on the floor of the Senate, have declared that George Washington is dead, Jefferson is dead, the seas have dried up, and that all the old conditions are gone.

Lord Grey recognizes that these doctrines are living things to-day, and that we are departing from them; not that they are doctrines that are outgrown, or that they have been buried in the cemetery of the past.

"This is to be a plunge in the dark," says Grey. Senators, there is only one time when you have the right to cause your country to take a plunge in the dark, and that is when there is no alternative.

A plunge in the dark? An unnecessary experiment with 110,000,000 people. I grant you, sir, when a man is driven by his enemies until he has reached a condition of desperation, when death is on either side and death is in the rear, and certain death will come if he stands still, he may be justified in leaping into a chasm of darkness. But who ever heard of wise statesmen plunging their country into a chasm of darkness and of uncertainty unless forced so to do.

Where did we get authority to take a plunge in the dark? For the benefit of whom? For the benefit of America? No; for the benefit of the people of other countries and of other lands. We are to sacrifice for them. We are to sacrifice what—ourselves?

No; we are to sacrifice the men in offices, who are not heard here; the boys on the farms, who have no voice here; the men of the shops, who are dumb here. In support of the experiment we are to pass another draft law, which automatically lays its hand upon their shoulders, puts them into uniform, drags them to a concentration camp, and orders them to their death without their having ever been heard. That is all justifiable in defense of our country, but in defense of any other country it is a crime against the people.

Before I conclude I desire to make an additional remark in consonance with what I have already said. I have referred to the Army demanded. Let me refer to the Navy. Before we got into the war we appropriated $725,000,000, I think, for ships. That was the largest single order ever given by any Government in the history of the world. The money has not all been expended up to this date, and yet on top of it the Secretary of the Navy has demanded $913,000,000, according to the figures which I last saw, for more fighting ships, ships that are to carry 16-inch guns and which are, of course, to be loaded with missionary tracts and essays of good will and dissertations by Brother Taft, simply to be shot in a playful way among the benighted peoples of the world. Is that the purpose?

Who ever stood and looked at one of those grim super-dreadnoughts as it moved resistlessly through the waves who could not visualize the flame of the deadly breath of the cannon, who could not feel the waters of the ocean vibrate as the tremendous broadside was discharged, who could not behold other vessels battered to pieces and men going down in the waters throwing up their hands and gasping for life? Who has ever seen one of them that has not recognized in it the power and majesty of a mighty nation bent upon preparing for its defense and in some instances preparing for aggression?

They tell us there is to be no more war, and yet at the same time the Secretary of the Navy has asked for a quarter of a million of men to man his fighting craft, a quarter of a million men in the Navy. The largest standing Army we ever had prior to our entrance into the war, save on occasions when there seemed to be a threat of war, was about 80,000 men.

They now ask for the Navy alone a quarter of a million men. Add that to the standing army which they demand and nearly 800,000 men are demanded for the permanent Military and Naval Establishments of the country. That, sir, means at least 1 man out of every 10 in the United States capable of bearing arms. It will burden our country with taxation and make impossible the payment of the enormous debt already fastened upon us.

This is all demanded, according to the sworn testimony, so that the United States can fulfill its obligations under the League of Nations.

Will there ever be any limit to hypocrisy and false pretense in the world? Why not tell the truth to the American people? When we sign this contract we agree to help police the world, and we take a major part in the job. We agree that our armies and our navies shall go into every port and every land and crush any people that dare attack another people, no matter what the right or the wrong of the case may be. We propose to set up an autocracy of power and might. We are to proceed not with the gentle philosophy of Christ, but with the argument of shell and shrapnel, with the logic of steel and death, to enforce our will upon the world; and to do that, in addition to the 750,000 or 800,000 men in the permanent Military Establishment, we are asked by the sponsors of the league to draft every American boy when he is 19 and take him from his mother's hearthstone and put him into a military camp, and, on top of all that, to write into our laws a provision that in case of any war every man between 18 and 45 years of age shall immediately be subject to be called to the colors.

I am glad Lord Grey has written as he has. He has helped to clarify the atmosphere. He has helped to show that an Englishman can be fairer to America than a lot of American Senators have been. While they stand here declaring that we ought not to insist on the same number of votes that Great Britain has, a British statesman says we are entitled to them. What will the American Senators say now? Will they continue to insist that we shall have but one vote and Great Britain six, or will they say that we shall have as many votes as Lord Grey says we should have? I am inclined to try to get this Englishman over here to run for Senator from one of our States.

There is just one other point. Some of us have said that if we entered the League of Nations it would be possible for the American delegate to so involve the United States, especially if there were no reservations, as to commit us to war, although Congress might not want war. That has been pooh-poohed and derided.

What says Lord Grey—

> The American Constitution not only makes possible, but under certain conditions renders inevitable a conflict between the Executive and the legislature. It would be possible if the covenant of the League of Nations stands for a President in some future years to commit the United States, through its American representative on the council of the League of Nations, to a policy which the legislature at that time might disapprove.
>
> That contingency is one which can not arise in Great Britain, where the Government is daily responsible to the representative authority of the House of Commons, and where, in case of conflict between the House of Commons and the Government, the latter must either immediately give way or public opinion must decide—

And so forth.

So you have the statement of this great British statesman that our representative can entangle us, can involve us, and can do it against the will and desire of both of the Houses of the American Congress.

While he points out that danger to us, even as I read his words I am looking into the faces of some American Senators who voted against a reservation reserving to the Congress the right by law to regulate the representative and limit his authority.

What a spectacle it is that we must get a confession from the other side of the controversy before we can gain our case. What a spectacle it is. A great British statesman, speaking from a tribunal so exalted that he is seen of all the world, is heard to admit that in five several instances the league is dangerous to the United States, that Great Britain has an advantage, and certify to all the world that she stands ready to yield that advantage.

What a spectacle, indeed, it must be for the contemplation of those who voted against giving the United States a vote equal to the vote of Great Britain! How shall they justify themselves to themselves?

Mr. President, I have pointed out in instance after instance where by time and discussion the iniquities of this instrument have been disclosed. Every day brings us new evidence of the great mistake we have thus far avoided.

We have converted Mr. Taft on 14 different points. Mr. Taft is now for 14 reservations to the very instrument he declared was perfect and which had been amended at least four times before the 14 reservations were offered. We have also converted Mr. Bryan, who declares in substance that article 10 dare not be submitted to the American people, and who agrees that mandatories are contrary to American policies. We have likewise converted Mr. Lowell. Mr. Lowell was trying to have the league ratified six months or so before it was even born. He was for a league before President Wilson went over to Europe; he was for a league while it was under negotiation; he was for this league after it was delivered.

He assumed to go out and to advise the American people what was in the league and how they ought to vote or think about it. He now declares that article 10 makes for war and not for peace. If article 10 makes for war instead of peace, then article 10 is the most vicious thing ever written in all this world. If article 10 makes for war instead of peace, what has the gentleman to say who went over the country trying to get the American people to coerce the Senate into passing the league with article 10 in it, with all its viciousness?

Mr. President, the President of the United States said some days ago, "Let this matter go to the American people." I say let it go to the American people; let them discuss it. This is their Government; it is not ours; we are only agents.

There is not a man in this body who was elected upon this issue. You are asked to take a leap in the dark, as the British statesman characterizes it. Who is to take it? Are we to take it for ourselves? When we take it we drag with us 110,000,000 people who, up to this time, have had no opportunity to speak. Why are these men running from the people? I have differed from the President in many matters; but I do not think anybody ever accused the President of being a coward. He says "Take it to the people," but when he declares for taking it to the people Mr. Taft throws up both his hands, the pudgy fingers trembling with consternation, as he exclaims, "For God's sake, do not take it to the people." I presume there is a reason for that. Taft remembers the last time he went to the people. [Laughter.]

Why not take it to the people? Why not let them discuss it?

But the most astounding thing I know of is that the great Commoner, who has always declared that the voice of the people is the voice of God, now declares, "Get this thing through in some way, although it has defects; do not take it to the people." Why not take it to the people? Why not give them a chance to speak upon it?

It is said the world will remain at war all the time we wait for the election. What utter rot that is! This war has been ended for over a year; not a gun has since been fired. The battle flags have been furled upon every field of conflict. They have planted crops where marched the armed hosts, and above the graves of America's dead there grow not always poppies but the wheat that has been sown for another year.

Our commerce has been renewed; you know it; you know there is not a single embargo on commerce between the United States and Germany to-day, save that which is laid by the rules of our Government or the Governments of our allies, and these rules can be relaxed in five minutes' time. One stroke of the President's pen declaring technically that that peace has come which over 12 months ago he declared had in fact come will end any pretense of war.

There is another bugaboo I wish to dispose of, and that is that we must go back to Germany—the expression was "hat in hand"—asking Germany for peace. That statement was not worthy of the high source from which it emanated. The resolution that is before this body providing for the ratification of the treaty, so far as it makes peace between us and Germany, if passed, does not send the treaty back to Germany. But suppose it did send it back to Germany, do we have to go "hat in hand" to that poor, conquered country? Will we be obliged to humiliate ourselves to her statesmen?

There is not a man in this room but knows, there is not a man anywhere with common sense but fully understands, if he has had an opportunity to examine the facts, that to-morrow Germany will accept peace with the United States and the restoration of trade gladly, willingly, anxiously, and that before the peace treaty could be sent across the Atlantic Ocean the German delegates would be at the place selected ready to sign it.

Talk about Germany not trading with the United States unless we adopt the League of Nations! Why, there was not a moment during the war when Germany would not have been glad to have opened her ports to receive American goods and pay for them if we had sent them. There has not been a moment since when Germany would not gladly have taken every supply that America could send her and have paid for it; indeed, she stands there with starving hands outheld begging for the opportunity to buy goods.

What miserable pretense it is to say that we should have to go to Germany as a suppliant! Germany will sign any document the United States hands her.

What has the United States received under this treaty of peace? A few old ships and a responsibility that outweighs the ships in value a thousandfold. Let us have done with that nonsense, for I denounce it as sheer, absolute, wicked nonsense.

Another argument has been put forward that because there is a difference in the value of money in Europe and the value of money in the United States we must have the League of Nations to restore exchange. A lot of business men who ought to know better have taken in that bait.

Mr. President, the only way the League of Nations could raise the value of European money would be by putting the credit of the solvent governments of the world back of the rotten money they have in Europe, and the only two solvent governments there are in the world to-day are Great Britain and the United States, and Great Britain is about ready to file a petition in bankruptcy—but I will not say that.

Mr. SMOOT. And Japan.

Mr. REED. And Japan; but Japan is not going to guarantee anything. Great Britain is not in that bad a condition, and I ought not to have said that; but Great Britain is heavily burdened; and if the League of Nations proposes to have the United States underwrite the rotten securities and the rotten money of Europe, then I am against it on that ground, if for no other; but if it does not propose to do that, what benefit will it have upon exchange?

The trouble with the exchange between the United States and Europe is the difference in the values of money. We have kept to the gold basis. We have inflated our currency a good deal, but back of every dollar we have out there is value. In Europe they have set their printing presses to work, and they have printed vast volumes of money back of which there is substantially nothing. In France some time ago they had $125 of paper money for every dollar in gold. The trouble with exchange is that a Yankee will not trade gold dollars for paper shinplasters. That is the trouble with the exchange situation. I am told by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that France has seven billions of paper money out now. So, Mr. President, as long as there is a difference in the values of money there will be a difference in the price of money.

Mr. President, I have taken the time of the Senate these long hours in reading documents and calling attention to this evidence. I do not know whether it will have any effect upon anybody or not; but I do know that when British statesmen come forward and declare that the league is unfair and that America is entitled to a revision it is time for the American Senate to move up to the line of British statesmen; and if it is not done now before we plunge into this chasm and take this leap in the dark, then I want to say that the American people will right it. What I desire is that they shall have an opportunity to pass upon it before the Senate shall make it a contract.

What man is there of you who fears to take it to his people? Let the great masses express themselves. If your case is good, you ought to welcome the opportunity. If your case is bad, then as an American Senator you ought to want it decided against you.

SENATOR FROM VIRGINIA.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, Hon. CARTER GLASS, the Senator appointed from Virginia to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the late Senator Martin, and whose credentials have heretofore been presented and placed on file, is in the Chamber, and I ask that the oath of office may be administered to him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator appointed will present himself at the desk for the purpose of taking the oath of office.

Mr. GLASS was escorted by Mr. UNDERWOOD to the Vice President's desk, and, the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

PAY OF ARMY, NAVY, MARINE CORPS, ETC.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3383) to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Public Health Service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, there is but one committee amendment as yet undisposed of in connection with the pending bill. If the Senators present do not care to consider that amendment to-night without calling for a quorum, I shall move a recess until to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator had better do that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] believe we should have a quorum in order to consider that amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I think there should be a quorum here to vote on the amendment.

RECESS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I anticipated that it would be impossible to get a quorum at this hour. I therefore move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 3, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 2, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, Father of all mercies, we realize from history, observation, and experience that life is a strange medley of good and evil, victories and defeats, hopes and disappointments, joys and sorrows.

Teach us that life is in the making and these are but angels in disguise, leading us on to larger life. Give us patience, fortitude, courage, to meet life and all its circumstances with faith and confidence in the overruling of Thy love for the good of all mankind. In Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, January 31, 1920, was read and approved.

BRIDGE ACROSS WHITE RIVER, ARK.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 3371) for the construction of a bridge across White River in Arkansas, and that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin, chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill, which the Clerk will report by title, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (S. 3371) authorizing Gordon N. Peay, jr., his heirs and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge and approaches thereto across the White River.

The SPEAKER. This is a Senate bill with House amendments disagreed to by the Senate. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. PARKER, Mr. SWEET, and Mr. RAYBURN.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Indian appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to take up the Indian appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SNYDER, Mr. ELSTON, and Mr. CARTER.

Mr. SNYDER. I ask unanimous consent for a print of the bill with the Senate amendments numbered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill be printed with the Senate amendments numbered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADDRESS OF HON. JOHN A. M'MAHON.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed as a document the speech of Hon. John A. McMahon, of Ohio, before the Ohio Bar Association. This man for six years was a Member of the House. He was a very good Democrat then, and I believe him to be a very good Democrat now, but a great lawyer, and he discusses the question of the injunction with great force and with temperate language. I believe that his address ought to be printed as a document, and I ask unanimous consent that it be so printed.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I merely desire to say, in support of what the gentleman from Illinois has said, that he told me that of all the great lawyers he had known in the House the greatest he had known in his service were John G. Carlisle and John A. McMahon, the latter of whom served in this House from the third congressional district of Ohio. I have read his address; I think it is a great contribution to the legal literature of the day, and I am very glad the gentleman from Illinois has asked to have it printed as a House document.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks unanimous consent that there be printed as a House document the address of Hon. John A. McMahon, of Ohio. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MEMORIAL TO CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF THE AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reference of Senate joint resolution 72, which I would like to have read from the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for a rereference of a joint resolution of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read Senate joint resolution 72, authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to employees of the United States Department of Agriculture who died in the war with Germany.

The SPEAKER. What was the reference?

Mr. FESS. It was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and should have gone to the Library Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the reference may be changed from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to the Committee on the Library. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, has the gentleman consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. FESS. Yes; and he asks that this be done.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Where are they going to put up this monument?

Mr. FESS. I do not know.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. To-day unanimous-consent business is in order, and the Clerk will call the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11368) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. CURTIS, Mr. GRONNA, and Mr. ASHURST as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 10746) to authorize the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction, enlargement, and equipment of schools, the acquisition and construction of a water-supply system, the construction of a sewer system, the construction of a city dock and floating dock, and to levy and collect a special tax therefor, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 147. Joint resolution to amend the Army appropriation act approved July 11, 1919.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 147) to amend the Army appropriation act approved July 11, 1919, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE SAVANNAH RIVER.

The first business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10922) to grant the consent of Congress to the Alfords Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Savannah River.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DOMINICK. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CERTAIN ARID LANDS IN THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8864) to encourage the reclamation of certain arid lands in the State of California, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill, as I understand it, is identical with the bill that passed the House a short time ago making provisions contained in this bill applicable to the State of Nevada. Am I correct about that?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I will state that the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MONDELL. That bill is experimental in character, and, in my opinion, is rather dangerously experimental. The situation in Nevada is peculiar. It has by far the largest proportion of its area of any State in the Union now in the hands of the Federal Government. In other words, it has the least proportion of its land of any State in the Union that appeals to the home maker, to the homestead settler. The Congress was of the opinion that we were justified in making a rather questionable experiment, some thought, in the State of Nevada. I am rather inclined to think that we were so justified, but until that experiment has been tried out, until we have learned how it works in Nevada, as we learned how the Kinkaid Act worked in Nebraska, in my opinion it would be unwise to try the experiment elsewhere.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. No; not just now. I feel it my duty to make that statement, because some gentlemen have asked why I, coming from the West, with rather liberal ideas, some think, in respect to matters touching the disposition of public lands, should object to legislation of this kind. I did not object to the legislation so far as it related to Nevada, although I think serious evils may arise under it. I hope not, but it is a new departure. It is a somewhat questionable venture. Let us try it out in Nevada, and if it works well there, there will be plenty of time to try it elsewhere.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, there is only an imaginary line on the east side of the Sierra Nevada Mountains between Nevada and California. There are about six counties the land in which is identical with that——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MONDELL. That may be true, but under the circumstances I feel that I must object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

PROCESS IN CAUSES REMOVED FROM A STATE COURT TO A UNITED STATES COURT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10207) providing for service of process in causes removed from a State or other court to a United States court.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LONGWORTH). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter in all cases removed from any State court to any United States court for trial in which any one or more of the defendants has not been served with process, or in which the same has not been perfected prior to such removal, or in which the process served upon the defendant or defendants, or any of them, proves to be defective, such process may be completed by the United States court through its officers, or new process as to defendants upon whom process has not been completed may be issued out of such United States court, or service may be perfected in such court in the same manner as in cases which are originally filed in such United States court.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following committee amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 3, after the word "court," insert: "Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to deprive any defendant upon whom process is so served after removal of his right to move to remand the cause to the State court the same as if process had been served upon him prior to such removal."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Missouri ought to make a statement with reference to this amendment. I do not see why it is necessary.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, some question was raised when the bill was under consideration two weeks ago about whether or not a man who was brought in after a cause was removed to a Federal court would have the same right to remand under the provisions of this bill as he would have had had he been brought in before removal. I do not believe it is necessary to have this amendment, but in order to make sure that he would still have his rights preserved in that respect the amendment has been offered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DYER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. A very important bill is coming up next, and I think we ought to have a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty Members present; not a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrews, Md.	Caraway	Ellsworth	Hamill
Ayres	Carew	Emerson	Hamilton
Bacharach	Casey	Ferris	Hoey
Barkley	Christopherson	Frear	Holland
Benson	Clark, Fla.	Fuller, Mass.	Houghton

Mann, S. C.	Riordan	Stephens, Miss.	Winslow
Mead	Robinson, N. C.	Stoll	Woodyard
Moon	Romjue	Sullivan
Mott	Rowan	Sumners, Tex.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and nineteen gentlemen have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The Clerk will report the next bill on the calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS AMERICAN CHANNEL OF THE DETROIT RIVER.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3452) authorizing the city of Detroit, Mich., a municipal corporation, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the American Channel of the Detroit River to Belle Isle.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That authority is hereby granted to the city of Detroit, a municipal corporation of the State of Michigan, and its successors, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the American Channel of the Detroit River to Belle Isle, in said city, at or near Grand Boulevard East, and at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. PLATT. To ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9065, a bill to amend the Federal farm loan act, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9065, with Senate amendments, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman what this bill is about.

Mr. PLATT. It is a bill which was passed by the House——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Let it be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9065) to amend sections 3, 8, 10, 12, 20, and 21 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman what this bill does?

Mr. PLATT. It is an administrative bill which takes some of the red tape out of the farm loan act, so there will not be so many delays——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That would be an impossible job.

Mr. PLATT. And was passed by the House last fall.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I say to take the red tape out of the departments is an impossible job. [Applause.]

Mr. PLATT. That may be true, but we are taking some of the red tape out.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How much?

Mr. PLATT. The bill was thoroughly discussed in the House at the time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Has this got anything to do with the tax on the bonds of these land banks?

Mr. PLATT. Not a thing in the world; it has all to do with the administration of the act.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Do any of the Senate amendments fix the maximum amount of loans that could be made under this farm loan act?

Mr. PLATT. No; that is not in the bill at all.

Mr. BLANTON. There is nothing in that respect whatever?

Mr. PLATT. No; nothing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman what he is trying to do?

Mr. PLATT. Trying to disagree to the Senate amendments to the Federal farm loan act and ask for a conference.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is not the proper procedure to conclude the call of the Calendar for Unanimous Consent before taking up anything outside of the calendar?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Oh, it is always in order to ask unanimous consent if the Chair recognizes a gentleman. The gentleman, of course, can object.

Mr. GARD. I think at this time we should conclude the regular call of the calendar, and for the present I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

AWARD TO LOYAL CREEK INDIANS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 1700) to pay the balance due to loyal Creek Indians on the award made by the Senate on the 16th day of February, 1903.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Illinois reserves the right to object?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill for the payment of the loyal Creeks' claim. It seems that back early during the Civil War a number of Indians of the Creek Nation were enlisted in the Federal Army. As a result of this enlistment they were driven out and their property destroyed by the Confederate soldiers, and after the war the United States Government recognized the justice of their claims. As I stated awhile ago, this is a claim made by the loyal Creeks, known as loyal Creeks because they joined the Federal Army instead of joining the Confederate Army; and as the result of having joined the Federal Army the Confederates raided their property and destroyed it and they were left penniless. The United States Government recognized this as a just claim. They appointed a commission to take testimony, and testimony was taken and the commission recommended the amount that should be awarded. This was not approved by the Secretary of the Interior, who only approved it for $100,000. The Creeks refused to accept $100,000 when offered them unless it be taken as part payment. Afterwards they were assured that it would only be taken as part payment, and when the Dawes Commission visited them to conclude a treaty with these Creeks this matter was brought up and it was called to the attention of the Dawes Commission that the United States Government had not carried out its contract.

It was then agreed to submit it to the Senate for arbitration, and the Senate of the United States in the passage of an Indian appropriation bill, or in an appropriation bill, recommended $1,200,000. The House conferees refused to agree to that amount and would only agree to $600,000. So the controversy here is a question as to whether or not the action of the United States Senate, in the first instance, in its arbitration recommending $1,200,000, and after the passage of the bill including only $600,000, was binding upon the Indians; and they are now contending for the $600,000. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I ought to take the time of the House at all under a reservation of the right to object.

This bill provides for a direct appropriation of $600,000, and is probably worthy of consideration by Members of the House. The loyal Creek Indians claim that the Government should make recompense to them because they remained loyal during the Civil War, and there were controversies in reference to the amount which they should be paid. After some consideration an item was inserted in some law providing, as I recall it—I have not recently carefully examined the facts—that the amount to be awarded should be arbitrated by the United States Senate. In 1903 the Senate on an Indian appropriation bill put in an item, as it passed the Senate, carrying $1,200,000 for this purpose, and it is claimed that the insertion by the Senate of this item in the Indian appropriation was a decision in arbitration by the Senate that that amount of money should be paid to the Indians. That item, however, was not agreed to by the House, and the bill with the item in it went to conference. The conferees struck out $1,200,000 and inserted $600,000, with the provision that that amount should be accepted in full settlement of all the claims. That conference report was agreed to by the Senate and the House and became a law. It is now claimed that the mere insertion by the Senate in the first instance of $1,200,000 was a decision by the Senate in the arbitration proceedings, and that no act which could afterwards be taken by the Senate would have the effect of changing that. I can not subscribe to that doctrine at all. If this inclusion in an Indian appropriation bill was a decision in arbitration at all, then the final decision of the Senate was the final decision of arbitration, and when the Senate finally agreed upon $600,000 in full settlement of the claim, that was the final decision of the Senate, and any preliminary decision which they might have reached was not a decision of the Senate at all, because no one could properly contend that the Senate can not change its arbitration decision so long as it retains control over the subject matter. You might as well contend that a court which enters a judgment, and still retains control, can not modify or change its judgment.

Now, this money was accepted in full settlement, and to propose now that it was merely based upon the original action of the Senate, and that therefore because of this action of the Senate we shall pay this other $600,000, seems to me gross expenditure and extravagance. Of course, I know that this bill will be pending here for many years until it is paid. It proposes to pay $90,000 for attorneys' and agents' fees, and no item which will result in paying two or three men $90,000 in fees will die an easy death.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand it, when the War Claims Committee have had a claim of this kind presented, and there was a receipt showing the claimants had received in full for their claims, they do not receive the claim? Is that the ground they have acted on?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think so, but it certainly is the ground they ought to have acted on.

Mr. SNELL. That is the position they act upon here?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The claim is made here, to be perfectly frank, that the Government owed $1,200,000 after the Senate had put this, in the first instance, in the Indian appropriation bill, and that a settlement of the amount for less is invalid. Of course, I do not agree to that.

Mr. JUUL. I would like to ask the gentleman a very brief question. The gentleman has very lucidly, I think, stated the legal and legislative aspect of the case. What is the gentleman's idea of the equitable view of the case?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think it never had very much equitable consideration. But that is neither here nor there. It is not the equity that they base this claim upon now.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman going to permit it to come up now under unanimous consent, or is he going to object?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am going to object.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Has the settlement warrant for this payment been examined by the committee in connection with this report?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not suppose it has, but I suppose there is no reason for its being examined.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. The settlement warrant would have to be on the terms of the bill and the original appropriation, and that would clinch the argument of the gentleman.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is no dispute about the fact that they took the money in full settlement, and then claimed they were forced to take it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will.

Mr. CRAMTON. This section, section 36, on which they base their claim for arbitration, provides for two steps—first, submission of the claim to the Senate for arbitration; second, in the event any sums are awarded provision shall be made to meet payment. Now, the step that was taken was a step for immediate payment, not for arbitration, by including it in an appropriation bill. It was simply a step for payment without the preliminary arbitration.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, it is begging the question, really, to say the Senate is authorized to arbitrate something, and they decide that arbitration by including that item in an appropriation bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. There was no arbitration.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There was no arbitration.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, if the House will remember, this claim bill has been pending here for some time, and it is certainly a just claim. Since I have been in Congress every Committee on Indian Affairs has recommended its enactment. The Senate has passed the bill two or three times unanimously. The strongest report that has been written on this measure was a report written by Senator MCCUMBER, now a Member of the Senate.

When the Civil War broke out about half the Creeks, the slaveholding half, went into the Confederacy. The poorer half, nonslave owners, were loyal to the Union. They went to Kansas from the Indian Territory at that time, and fought gallantly to preserve the Union. While these loyal Creeks were gone the Confederate Creeks and others destroyed their property. Something like $5,000,000 worth of property was taken.

Just after the Civil War closed two Army officers of high rank, one of them a general and the other a captain, were sent out by the Government to investigate this claim of the loyal Creeks. They found that an immense amount of property had been taken, as above indicated. They made a report of their findings, later referred to by me. The Senate was agreed upon and constituted an award tribunal to investigate whether or not any amount should be paid to the loyal Creeks. They heard all the testimony, and, acting as a court, acting as a judicial tribunal, they decided as a compromise that the loyal Creeks should be paid $1,200,000. Their award was set forth in the form of an appropriation of that sum.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will be glad to yield to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. On what does the gentleman base his statement that the Senate acted as a court or tribunal?

Mr. TILLMAN. For the reason that it did act as a court or tribunal. It was agreed by the parties in controversy that the Senate should make an award, and the Senate did make an award in obedience to that understanding and agreement.

Mr. WALSH. What form of an award?

Mr. TILLMAN. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggested, it was in the form of an appropriation for the amount, but that is immaterial. The fact remains that the Senate made that award as an awarding tribunal, and put that in an appropriation bill.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. Was there an act passed by Congress making the Senate an arbitration board?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will explain that matter fully, and I think satisfactorily, later to the gentleman and to the House.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. If this is a bill to pay for property destroyed, why did it not go to the Committee on War Claims instead of to the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. TILLMAN. The Committee on Indian Affairs, and that committee alone, has jurisdiction over a matter affecting any one of the Five Civilized Tribes. It would have resented a reference of the bill to any other committee, because it affected an Indian tribe, and the jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs covers all matters relating to Indian tribes. That question has never been raised in the way of an objection to this meritorious measure.

Mr. SNELL. Ever since I have been on the Committee on War Claims it has never considered a claim like this, where there has been a receipt given in full. It seems to me it would be an unfair proposition to consider another claim of that kind, where it was thrown out by the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Committee on Indian Affairs has always had jurisdiction of this claim, and that fact was never disputed.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said that during the closing days of a certain session the House conferees insisted that they were unwilling to allow more than $600,000 as a compromise. The Senate insisted that the whole amount—$1,200,000—should be paid, and finally it was agreed upon, in order to get the measure through at all, that $600,000 should be paid, and the bill went through the House at that amount. There was a provision attached to it that the loyal Creeks should accept that amount as full payment.

But there never was a better-settled principle of law than that a man can not compromise a debt with his ward and thus bind the ward. The amount of the debt had been determined by a tribunal authorized to declare that debt, to wit, the Senate, the tribunal which made the award.

Now, the loyal Creeks are the wards of this Government. This Government could not say to the Creeks, "This amount is due you in equity as well as in law; the award is made; we will throw this $600,000 to you as we would throw a bone to a dog, and you must take it or get nothing." Of course the loyal Creeks accepted the $600,000, but only as part payment. Many of them were ignorant. They accepted it; but they never did consider that that award was fully paid; always insisted on the balance of the award; and they are back here now insisting that the remainder of that award, made by a proper tribunal, should be allowed.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will in a moment.

Now, I am impressed, as the gentleman from Illinois is, especially by the equity of this claim. For many years the Government has been paying people who lost property in the South, people who at that time, perhaps, were not loyal to the Government of the United States. They were loyal to their own government, it is true, but not loyal to this one. These Indians are wards of this Government in a peculiar sense. In more than one particular, let me assert. When we have been paying a great many obligations that are not so well rooted in equity as this one, why should not this Congress pay this mere bagatelle, this $600,000 which is undoubtedly due these people. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] if he still desires me to do so.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. It seems to me that the gentleman is relying upon the report of the committee to the Senate, and the action of the Senate at first in awarding $1,200,000 to these Indians. Is it the gentleman's position that when the Senate had once voted to pay that sum, they could not on the floor of the Senate have changed the sum to a greater or less amount than $1,200,000?

Mr. TILLMAN. They did that very thing, it is true. Yet the fact remains that, having jurisdiction of the subject matter and having determined as a court that $1,200,000 should be allowed, the compromise made since that time does not interfere with the validity of the original award.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. That is what I want to get the gentleman's opinion about. Suppose it had never come over to conference. Suppose the Senate having adopted the item of $1,200,000 had itself, by a motion to reconsider that item, reconsidered it and substituted $600,000, or substituted $2,000,000, would not that have been a valid change, and have made the award, if it was an award, whatever the last action of the Senate was?

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, of course you could not enforce an award of that kind in a court, but I am trying to enforce it here in a court of equity and good conscience. I am trying to enforce it among gentlemen who believe in the equitable adjustment of this matter.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Why was the intermediate action of the Senate more sacred than its final action?

Mr. TILLMAN. The gentleman from Texas well knows that frequently meritorious claims are cut down just for the reason that legislators friendly to the claimants can not get the full claim, and so they agree to a less amount, just as the Senate conferees and these Creek Indians accepted $600,000 when they insisted they should have the full amount of the award.

Mr. MCKEOWN. The contention of the Indians is that they agreed that the award should be by the Senate and not by the Congress; not by the House and Senate combined, but the agreement was that they would abide by the award of the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is true, as the author of the bill, my friend Judge MCKEOWN, well says.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. No money can be taken out of the United States Treasury lawfully except by the joint action of the House and Senate, approved by the President. That is, of course, recognized. A separate act by the Senate surely does not have the force and effect of a law passed by Congress in its proper capacity. The House and the Senate pass a bill. They stipulate in that bill that they will pay these Indians $600,000. They stipulate, further, in that bill that it shall cover every claim that these Indians have against the United States Government, of every kind, nature, and description. In effect, it does that, and the bill becomes a law, is signed by the President, and the Indians accept the $600,000. Are we going to hold that such an act of Congress has no force and effect whatever, that we can open it up and pay another $600,000 whenever we get ready?

Mr. TILLMAN. That does not bind the Indians, because they know that the award made by the Senate in the first place, the award of $1,200,000, was the one to which they were entitled. The Senate alone was constituted as a separate tribunal to make the award. That is the distinction, I will say.

Mr. BLANTON. But their lawyers, who are to get $90,000 if this proposed bill passes, ought to know the law, and they ought to know that the law that we passed before provided that it should be in final settlement, and that it would bind these Indians when they accepted the $600,000.

Mr. TILLMAN. Their lawyer advised them to accept the appropriation, and it was good advice, and the Indians, at the mercy of Congress in the matter, did the sensible thing in accepting this partial payment, but they were advised and they understood that they had the right to prosecute this claim, as they have been doing and are now doing, which in justice and good conscience should be paid by Congress.

Mr. MILLER. Are the attorneys who settled for $600,000 the same attorneys who are presenting this additional claim?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; they are the same attorneys. These attorneys have paid out large sums from their own pockets to present this claim. Col. S. W. Peel has been the most active, paying out much money of his own, doing practically all the work, coming to Washington frequently, visiting the tribe often, doing an enormous amount of drudgery in his efforts to get justice for these people. Col. Peel was for 10 years an honored Member of Congress, and served with distinction as the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. He is now 86 years of age, one of nature's noblemen, and as good a citizen as any State can boast.

By way of summing up and going more into detail, even if I repeat some things, let me say that the Indians relied on the repeated promises and assurance of the Government to reimburse them for their losses and the findings of the two Army officers, Hazen and Field. The United States refused to pay them, relying on the payment of a hundred thousand dollars, as provided in the treaty of 1866. But the Dawes Commission for the United States and the Creek Nation of Indians made a contract by which the Indians took allotments of their lands in severalty and abandoned their Indian government. The differences existing between the loyal branch of the Creek Indians and the United States for the value of the property they lost during the Civil War on account of their loyalty to the United States were agreed to submit that question to the United States Senate for final determination, and it was expressly agreed that whatever amount, if any, found due them should be paid at once. The words "final determination of the differences" and the word "payment" evidently meant an end to the dispute to which both parties were bound. This contract was ratified by both Houses of Congress and the National Creek Council, and therefore became binding upon both parties. In due time the chief of the Creek Nation memoralized the Senate of the United States to make final determination of the value of the lost property of the loyal elements of their tribe. The memorial was regularly referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, which committee was composed of as able men as was in the Senate. Said committee made an exhaustive examination of said claim. They examined the treaty of 1866 and the payment of the $100,000, as provided in said treaty of 1866, and the ruling of the United States Court of Claims on that question; in fact, had everything before them.

They also examined the promises of the Government to reimburse said Indians for their losses and the findings of Gen. Hazen and Capt. Field, appointed by the Government to ascertain their respective losses and the value thereof, and after a full and thorough investigation of said claims finally awarded said loyal Creek Indians for their losses $1,200,000, and to pay said award as agreed in said contract placed said amount on the Indian appropriation bill and reported the same to the Senate of the United States, which bill passed the Senate unanimously. When the item of $1,200,000 to pay the loyal Creek Indians for lost property during the Civil War was reached the Senate was thoroughly informed that if they sustained that item it would amount to an award upon which an action would lie. Then it passed the Senate by a unanimous vote. When the bill went back to the House the amendments, including the amendment of $1,200,000 to pay the loyal Creeks, were disagreed to and all amendments went to conference. That committee, without any authority of law, only appropriated one-half of said Senate award, to wit, $600,000. This bill is for the other half of said award. In fact, Congress admitted the validity and legality of the Senate award which the House had authorized the Senate to make by paying one-half of the award. The conference committee attempted to avoid the future payment of half of the Senate award by requiring the Indians to execute receipts for the whole amount of the Senate award, and every lawyer knows there is no principle of law better settled than that a receipt for the full amount of a debt when only one-half the amount is paid without consideration as to that part not paid is void.

See authorities cited on that point in the committee report and dozens more could be cited. No decision of any court of good standing can be found to the contrary.

All the decisions cited were between citizens of the United States; so, if such receipts are void as between white men, for a greater reason are they void between the United States and its own wards. This being a Senate award, a great many bills to pay the balance of the Senate award to these Indians have been introduced in the Senate, each of which was favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate some three times, added as an amendment to an Indian appropriation bill, and each time went out on a point of order—first, when Senator Clapp, of Minnesota, was chairman of that committee, who made a strong report in favor of paying the balance of said award. Senator MCCUMBER, of North Dakota, when a member of the Senate Indian Committee, made a very exhaustive report in favor of paying the balance of the Senate award. Senator OWEN reported a separate bill from that committee in a recent Congress, and late in the session it passed the Senate, but too late to be considered in the House.

There never has been an adverse report on a bill to pay the balance of the Senate award by Congress. In this Congress Hon. THOMAS MCKEOWN introduced this bill to pay the balance of said Senate award to the loyal Creek Indians. The House Committee on Indian Affairs referred it to a subcommittee of five members. Said subcommittee made a most thorough and exhaustive investigation of the subject of this bill from top to bottom; investigated fully everything in the minority report; examined the treaty of 1866; the findings of the Court of Claims; the payment of the $100,000; the promise of the Government to reimburse said Indians for their losses; the findings of Gen. Hazen and Capt. Field; the various reports from the Senate and the opinion of the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and, after full and due consideration, reported unanimously in favor of this bill to the full committee, which committee unanimously sustained the report of the subcommittee, which is now before the House. So the Indian Committee of the Senate says, five or six times, the balance of said award ought to be paid. The Senate itself says it ought to be paid. Senator Clapp, as chairman of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, says it ought to be paid. Senator MCCUMBER, as a member of that committee, says it ought to be paid. The Senate of the United States says it ought to be paid. The Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs says it ought to be paid. The Creek delegates say it ought to be paid. A subcommittee of five members unanimously says it ought to be paid. The full Committee on Indian Affairs says it ought to be paid.

I hope the House will pass the bill and let these poor, ignorant Indians have at least a part of the value of the property lost during the Civil War on account of their loyalty and military service to the Union.

I submit further facts in support of this bill, even at the expense of being tedious or repeating some things and by way of recapitulation:

The Creek Nation of Indians were about equally divided over the Civil War; one half went with the rebellion; the other half were loyal to the United States. Many joined the Union Army; that branch of the Creek Indians are called the loyal Creeks. The southern Creeks and organized whites drove the loyal Creeks out of their country. The Indian Commissioner says, in his report of 1865, page 39, that the loyal Creeks fought their way northward, tracked by their bloody feet over the frozen ground. In 1865 the commissioner, upon the part of the Government, promised to reimburse the loyal Creeks for their losses. The commissioner's report, 1865, page 39, says they were driven from their homes and lost everything they possessed.

The Government undertook to ascertain their losses and appointed Gen. W. B. Hazen and Capt. F. A. Field, both Regular Army officers. The Indians had no representative whatever; the two Army officers, acting for the Government alone, found their losses amounted to over eighteen hundred thousand dollars, and so reported; their finding was approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. While their report was never challenged, yet it was not paid.

After waiting almost 50 years, in 1900, the Dawes Commission, acting for the Government, concluded a contract with the Creek Nation. Amongst other things, the claim of the loyal Creeks for property lost during the Civil War was to be submitted to the Senate of the United States as a board of arbitration, and whatever they found due should be paid at once.

Early in the Fifty-seventh Congress the chief of the Creek Nation filed in the Senate a memorial, praying that the Senate proceed to determine the amount due the loyal Creeks for their losses. The memorial was duly referred to the Committee of the Senate on Indian Affairs. The committee, after full investigation, having forgotten the liberal promise of the Government, awarded them only twelve hundred thousand dollars, reducing the award of the Army officers about one-third. The committee placed the amount of their finding as an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, which passed the Senate unanimously.

When the bill went back to the House, the House disagreed to the Senate amendment of twelve hundred thousand dollars for the loyal Creeks, which amendment went to conference; that committee, further forgetting the liberal promises of the Government for their loyalty and suffering for the Government, cut the Senate award in the middle, appropriating one-half of the Senate award.

The conference committee had no power to make an award. The contract authorized the Senate alone to make a final determination of the amount due the loyal Creeks. No other power could.

The House, having ratified the contract made by the Dawes Commission and the Creek Nation, which conferred the power on the Senate to make the award, is estopped from changing the award when the House directed and authorized the Senate of the United States, and the Senate alone, to make a final determination of the amount due the loyal Creeks for their losses; how can the House now refuse to comply with the Senate's action?

The award was regular and legal. See authorities cited in report.

The receipt for that part not paid is without consideration and void. See authorities cited in report.

Remember all those decisions were made between white men. So if such a receipt will not bar a white man, it certainly will not bar an ignorant full-blood Indian, a ward of the United States.

The Indian Committee of the Senate has made favorable report on the balance of the Senate award some five or six times; some three times as an amendment to an Indian appropriation bill. Each time it went out on a point of order, and on separate bills some three times, which passed the Senate. So the Indian Committee of the Senate says the balance of the Senate award ought to be paid, and the Senate itself says, by passing a bill for that purpose, it ought to be paid. The Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs says it ought to be paid. Subcommittee of five of the House committee, after a full investigation, says, unanimously, it ought to be paid, and the full committee says it ought to be paid. The Creek delegates say it ought to be paid. The national attorney of the Creek Nation says it ought to be paid.

Can and will this House ignore all this? Most certainly not. This House will certainly stand by its agreement when it authorized the Senate to make the award; to now refuse would be repudiation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands the regular order. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. McKEOWN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ALLOTMENT OF LANDS TO THE CROW TRIBE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2890) to provide for the allotment of lands to the Crow Tribe, for the distribution of tribal funds, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CHALMETTE NATIONAL MILITARY PARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 5918, in reference to a national military park on the plains of Chalmette, below the city of New Orleans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, whatever may be the merits of this proposition—and I assume that it has some merits—it does not seem to me that now is a very desirable time to expend $500,000 to establish a military park.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think if the gentleman will read the report he will see that there is no expenditure of $500,000 contemplated. This bill simply orders that a survey be made of the proposed park on the Chalmette battle field, and asks for a report as to the expenditure that will be necessary to acquire the ground.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have read the report, and I think it might be a wise thing for the gentleman to read it. Here is what the report says:

> This bill provides for the establishment of a national military park just outside the limits of the city of New Orleans on the banks of the Mississippi River, where the Battle of New Orleans was fought on January 8, 1815.
>
> The measure was submitted to the Secretary of War, and he in turn submitted it to the United States Engineers Office for report on the same. This has been made with the recommendation that the park be established.
> In order to do so, about 226 acres of land must be purchased, at an estimated cost of $2,000 per acre, and it is figured that the total cost of establishing the park will be, in round figures, about $500,000.

Now, if I am in error, my error comes from reading the report.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman permit me to read the bill? Probably he will then see his error.

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to investigate the feasibility of establishing a national military park on the plains of Chalmette, below the city of New Orleans, where was fought on January 8, 1815, the Battle of New Orleans, and to prepare plans of such park and estimate of the cost therefor, and obtain such further information as may enable Congress to act upon the matter after being fully advised.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand the purpose is to establish a park?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; ultimately. There can be no question about that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As soon as the legislation can be enacted; and while the commission appointed might find that it would cost more than half a million, the report itself says that it will cost at least that much. I suppose the committee made it as small as possible. I do not think it advisable to enter upon the project now.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does the gentleman believe that this bill commits Congress to an appropriation in the future?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If we pass the bill, it commits Congress to the creation of the park and the expenditure of all money necessary to do it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will it not require an act of Congress to carry out the idea the gentleman has in mind?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think likely; I hope so.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the gentleman know so from his long experience in Congress?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It would require further action of Congress. I do not think it is wise to begin at this time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I want to get the record in such shape that there will be no mistake as to the gentleman's attitude and my own. I believe the gentleman is correct in assuming that this is a foundation upon which to build the superstructure of a national park, but I do not think the gentleman contends that this does anything other than to order a survey upon which to base it.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to any expenditure of this nature at this time, and I object.

Mr. O'CONNOR. May I ask, Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent to have the bill retain its place on the calendar?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. SNELL. I shall have to object at this time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I trust the gentleman who made the objection thoroughly understands that there is no expense contemplated in this bill.

Mr. SNELL. There will be an expense as soon as we get the commission.

EXCHANGE OF GOVERNMENT LANDS, HAWAII.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10432) to provide for the exchange of Government lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, when in his opinion the public good demands it, to exchange any land or any interest in land owned by the United States now or hereafter set apart for military purposes in the Territory of Hawaii for privately owned land or any interest therein of equal value located in that Territory and selected by the Secretary of War, and thereafter to set apart for military purposes the lands or interest therein so acquired: Pro- vided, That the Attorney General of the United States shall first pass upon and approve the title to the privately owned lands or interest therein to be acquired by the United States before any exchange of lands shall be made under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. That the value of the lands or interests to be so exchanged shall be determined by three appraisers, one of whom shall be appointed by the Secretary of War, one by the owner of the private property, and the third shall be chosen by the two appraisers so appointed. The expenses necessary to effect the appraisements herein authorized when approved by the military commander of the Hawaiian Department may be paid out of the current appropriations for contingencies of the Army.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "that," insert the words "at any time within three years from the passage of this act."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this is a limitation which I think is proper, and I do not think there will be any objection.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the committee has no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask somebody a question. It seems that the titles to these lands are properly guarded in this bill, but what about the value of the land, who fixes that?

Mr. KAHN. There are three appraisers provided for in the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Are the appraisers going to be those people out there or somebody else?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. One is designated by the Secretary of War, one by the owner, and the third appraiser chosen by the two so designated.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I observe that your Uncle Sam generally gets gouged in swapping lands. [Laughter.]

Mr. KAHN. I think the officer who will be appointed by the Secretary of War who will look after the interest of the United States will be pretty reliable. The value of land in Hawaii is pretty well known.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. GARD. Is not the usual and ordinary course for the value to be determined by the Secretary of War rather than by an appraisal board appointed in this way?

Mr. KAHN. The bill provides for this board, and the bill was sent to me by the Secretary of War, who seemed to want to have the board of appraisers fix the price.

Mr. GARD. I was asking the gentleman who has knowledge of these matters if it is not usual to have it fixed by the Secretary of War?

Mr. KAHN. No; I do not think that it is. I think the method provided in this bill is the usual way.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What do they want to swap the lands for anyway?

Mr. KAHN. It is necessary, as I understand it, to extend some of the fortifications and the military posts in Hawaii.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it an effort to get more land for the United States or more land for the speculators?

Mr. KAHN. It is an effort to acquire some additional land for the military posts in Hawaii. If the gentleman has been down there, and I know that he has——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; I have not. [Laughter.]

Mr. KAHN. I thought the gentleman from Missouri was one of the party that was down there several years ago.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; I declined to go on that junket.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It would have been a good thing for Hawaii and also for the gentleman from Missouri if he had been of the party.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I guess that is true, for I understand they had a good time.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will look at the map showing the location of the various fortifications around Honolulu, he will notice that the area around the forts is very circumscribed. It is desirable to extend some of those areas.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is not this the fact: That we have either to acquire some more land for the posts out there or trade for it, one of the two?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And we have land that we can trade that is of no value to us?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is the gentleman from Illinois speaking from his own information or from something gathered from the gentleman from California?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have not talked with the gentleman from California about the bill at all.

Mr. KAHN. The total area involved in the legislation is about 1,000 acres.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it good sugar land?

Mr. KAHN. No; this is not sugar land.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, to strike out section 2.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 7, strike out section 2.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I do this because I desire to call attention to a matter that has been called to my attention by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] in regard to the appointment of these appraisers. I am wondering whether this method of the appointment of appraisers is the proper method to pursue. The appraisers are appointed, one by the Secretary of War, whose duty it is to determine ordinarily the value of military property to be purchased, as I understand it.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GARD. The second appraiser is to be appointed by the owner of the private property and a third appraiser is to be chosen by the other two appraisers. Does not the matter practically resolve itself into this, that the Secretary of War will probably appoint a military man representing the Government, the owner of the property will appoint some one interested in seeing that the value of the property is kept as high as possible, and the third man to be appointed by these two will practically control the findings of these two men, because as we view the ordinary action of appraisers where they represent interests one man will represent the interest of the United States and the other man a private interest, and is not the third man necessarily the man who will practically determine the appraisement? Is that a proper method to pursue?

Mr. KAHN. While that is what generally happens in all appraisements, the fact remains that the area of land in the Hawaiian Islands is comparatively small and the value of every tract is pretty well known by everyone on the islands.

Mr. GARD. But the value of the land which the Government seeks to acquire usually gets a certain impetus when the Government makes that fact known.

Mr. KAHN. I confess that the gentleman's statement is right. There are a great many men in this country to-day who consider themselves thoroughly honest and honorable who do not hesitate to raise the price when they know that the Government is to be the buyer.

Mr. GARD. That is very true, and that is the point that I was considering. The gentleman has had very great knowledge of military affairs, and has he taken this matter into consideration when he agrees to this matter of the appointment of appraisers?

Mr. KAHN. I have taken that matter into consideration. As I stated, the value of the land in and near Honolulu is pretty well known by everyone.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman think it is a safe proposition to allow this third man to be practically the only appraiser?

Mr. KAHN. He is not the only appraiser. He is one of the appraisers. I have no hesitancy in saying that I think the Government will be entirely safe in submitting the matter in this manner.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has stated several times that the value of all of the land in and about Honolulu is pretty well established. I would like to call his attention to the report of the committee along that line. The first tract belongs to a Mr. McCandless, and he values it at $65,000. The Government believes that it could procure it under condemnation proceedings for from twenty to twenty-five thousand dollars. The next tract is valued at $40,000. The owner of the next tract is unknown, and the War Department places an estimate of its value at $1,000. As to the next tract, neither the name of the owner nor the price put upon the tract is known by the department; and the fourth tract is thought to belong to the Bishop estate. So that it would seem that there is a very wide discrepancy in the value of land and ignorance as to the owners. That is somewhat at variance with the statement of the gentleman from California that there is ample knowledge as to the entire value of this property.

I would like to ask one question further, whether or not this is a movement brought forward by those who own some of this land to see to it that the Government gets some land that they do not want in exchange for some they say the Government does want, or has the matter come forward at the request of the War Department in order to improve these various military posts? It looks to me as though there was considerable possibility of Uncle Sam getting the poor end of the land transaction, very much in the manner referred to by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is perfectly evident that in this matter the appraisement made will not be binding on the private owners of the property unless they choose to accede to it, and the Government will be bound, practically. Why not have the three appraisers appointed by the Secretary of War? The Government is to pay the expense anyway, and on that basis the Secretary of War deals with the private owners.

Mr. KAHN. I have no objection to that whatever. I am especially interested in preventing the gouging of the Government by anyone. I assume that Mr. McCandless is an honorable gentleman. He has been a Democratic candidate for Delegate from Hawaii a number of times, and I can not imagine that he would want to take advantage of the Government. I will accept any amendment that the gentleman from Illinois would want to offer in that particular.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I offer to amend, in section 2, by striking out after the word "appraisers," in line 8, page 2, the words "one of whom shall be appointed," and by striking out after the word "War," in line 9, page 2, all the language down to and including the word "appointed," in line 11, and by inserting after the word "appraisers," in line 8, the word "to," so that it will read:

That the value of the lands and interests to be so exchanged shall be determined by three appraisers, to be appointed by the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Page 2, line 8, after the word "appraisers," strike out the words "one of whom shall," and in line 9, page 2, after the word "War," strike out the language "one by the owner of the private property and the third shall be chosen by the two appraisers so appointed"; and in line 8, after the word "appraisers" insert the word "to," so that as amended the lines will read:

"SEC. 2. That the value of the lands or interests to be so exchanged shall be determined by three appraisers to be appointed by the Secretary of War," etc.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from California whether this is in aid of a program of the War Department with regard to the fortifications in the island of Hawaii and with regard to the placement of fieldpieces along the mountain passes and ridges?

Mr. KAHN. No. The largest part of this area is in connection with the enlargement of Schofield Barracks, which, as the gentleman knows, is not on the shore. There are one or two tracts near the shore, especially the one at Pearl Harbor, in the Hawaiian Islands, and the War Department officials feel they require the additional territory to perfect the fortifications there.

Mr. GOOD. Now, the War Department has come before the subcommittee on fortifications for a number of years with regard to a program of placing more guns commencing down at Diamond Head and up along the ridge and again at the Pali and down around Pearl Harbor. Now, they have never been able for more than two consecutive years to bring to the committee the same program, and if this is in aid of that program I want to say to the gentleman I do not think the War Department should ever claim that the adoption of this legislation permitting the exchange committed Congress to their military program on the island.

Mr. KAHN. No; this is not in behalf of that program. As the gentleman knows, it enlarges Fort Shafter a little, and that is, of course, down on the water front, near Pearl Harbor.

Mr. KALANIANAOLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. KALANIANAOLE. I would like to ask the gentleman whether this includes all the lands now under the War Department in Hawaii?

Mr. KAHN. No; this is to exchange some land with private owners so as to acquire this land for Government military posts.

Mr. KALANIANAOLE. So far as this relates to Schofield Barracks I think it ought to be done, but if this includes other lands that the Military Department owns I am opposed to it for the reason that a great many of these lands used by the War Department are lands which were valuable and which were taken from the Territory and may be some time abandoned. Now, if this measure goes through giving the War Department the right to exchange any land, this valuable property that they took away for nothing could be exchanged for any property they might see fit owned by private parties. I think it is unfair to the Territory.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, these lands, as I understand it, are now in private ownership. They are not Territorial lands.

Mr. KALANIANAOLE. As to giving the War Department the right to exchange and get those lands the gentleman refers to, I am in sympathy with that. I am very much in sympathy with that. They should have those lands, but I am opposed to the War Department going outside of these specific names mentioned, and what I am asking the gentleman is if they have the authority under this bill to exchange any of their lands owned by the War Department now?

Mr. KAHN. No; the lands that they propose to acquire are set out on page 2 of the report. The first tract is the Kalena tract, within the boundaries of Fort Schofield Barracks military reservation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This would only authorize the exchange of any Government lands now set apart for military purposes, or hereafter set apart?

Mr. KAHN. For that purpose alone.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And would not cover anything else?

Mr. KAHN. Nothing except lands now used for military purposes.

Mr. KALANIANAOLE. There are some lands, for instance, the Navy Department has occupied on the water front which were very valuable to the Territory for their commerce. Now, the Navy Department, after they develop Pearl Harbor as a naval station, will have no use for those valuable water-front lands, and the War Department wants them, for what purpose I do not know, but to hold on to them, I suppose, and perhaps may exchange them for other lands. We are limited in our area for our commerce at Honolulu Harbor. There are valuable lands held by the Navy Department to-day for which they have no use.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This would not affect lands held by the Navy Department.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, we can not hear or understand whether the gentleman is for or against this bill. Is the gentleman for or against this bill?

Mr. KALANIANAOLE. I am simply asking the chairman——

Mr. KAHN. I would say to the gentleman that I do not believe that the War Department is authorized to make any exchange for any land that is not at present under the jurisdiction of the War Department. It desires to get from some private owners a few tracts of additional land.

Mr. KALANIANAOLE. They should get those lands. There is no getting out of it but that some of our citizens might try to hold up the War Department.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. McCandless, who was the gentleman's antagonist for the position of Delegate from Hawaii, is the owner of one of these tracts of land.

Mr. KALANIANAOLE. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask the Delegate a question?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is he familiar with the Kalena tract, now owned by Mr. McCandless, consisting of 254 acres, on which he places a value of $65,000?

Mr. KALANIANAOLE. I am.

Mr. TREADWAY. In the judgment of the gentleman, is the land worth $65,000?

Mr. KALANIANAOLE. No.

Mr. TREADWAY. That comes back to my original objection to the bill, in that it seemed to me to be a land speculation for the benefit of private individuals.

Mr. KAHN. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will protect that.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am heartily in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, but I do not think it entirely protects us from that possibility. I think the Delegate can give us some valuable information on these values, and it would be for our benefit to know whether or not these moves to secure these exchanges of land are initiated by land speculators or by the War Department. I would ask the Delegate if he has any opinion on that?

Mr. KALANIANAOLE. I do not know very much about that, but I know this: That the private owners at Fort Shafter are in a position to hold up the Government, because they are right in the center of the post there. But it seems to me by condemnation they can get those lands cheaper than they could in any other way.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think the Delegate is disposed to be opposed to this legislation?

Mr. KALANIANAOLE. I am in favor of this legislation to get these lands for the War Department, because they should not be owned by any private concern. They are a part of that post and the War Department should have them.

Mr. KAHN. The War Department takes the attitude that the land is worth only about $20,000 at the outside; and, as that department has the appointment of all the appraisers, I presume the Government's rights will be absolutely safeguarded so far as the appraisement that is made is concerned.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask the Delegate one other question? Is he familiar with the character of the land which it is proposed to exchange for these tracts? In other words, are the lands which the Government now owns, and which these private owners secure in exchange, sugar lands?

Mr. KALANIANAOLE. No; they are not sugar lands.

Mr. TREADWAY. And there can not be that construction put on the move to make the trade?

Mr. KALANIANAOLE. No.

Mr. DENISON. If these appraisers are appointed by the Secretary of War and they fix the value on the land to be secured by the Government, can the Secretary of War reject the findings?

Mr. KAHN. I think he can.

Mr. DENISON. I think the House ought to know with some certainty about that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is no question but that the Secretary of War can reject it. He does not have to make the trade if he does not want to do so. We give the authority to the President to make the trade. We provide that the Secretary of War shall appoint a commission to report upon the value. That is in order to protect the President in making the trade. That is all.

Mr. KAHN. And the Secretary, I take it, would not be bound by that appraisement?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No. There is no legal appraisement here at all. It is not a condemnation proceeding.

Mr. DENISON. If it was a condemnation proceeding, the Government would have to pay cash, and I thought we ought to be protected if the appraisers value this land too high.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If they valued it too highly, the Secretary would have to reject it, because the War Department seems to have put an appraisement on it which is one-half of the value fixed by the owner.

Mr. DENISON. I will say that we will await with a good deal of interest to see what the Secretary does in regard to that. He has not followed a course in this country that justifies us to think that he would reject the land if the appraisement was too high.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RIGHTS OF WAY, FORT DOUGLAS MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3327) granting certain rights of way and exchanges of the same across the Fort Douglas Military Reservation in the State of Utah.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD on the loyal Creek bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the previous bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill S. 3327? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3327) granting certain rights of way and exchanges of the same across the Fort Douglas Military Reservation in the State of Utah.

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to Salt Lake City, a municipal corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Utah, a perpetual easement and right of way for the operation, maintenance, repair, and renewal of a conduit and pipe line to be located not more than 25 feet easterly from the conduit and pipe line of the said city now constructed over and upon the Fort Douglas Military Reservation in said State, the same being connected with the water-supply system of the said city; and also for the construction, operation, maintenance, repair, and renewal of all valve houses which may be deemed necessary in connection with said pipe line: Provided, That the said conduit and pipe line must be at all times maintained entirely below the surface of the ground; that the ground must at all times be kept in such condition as will enable troops to pass over the same without hindrance; that no fences shall be constructed to prevent the passage of troops; and that all work done upon the reservation in pursuance of this grant shall be to the satisfaction of the post commander and under such regulations as he may prescribe in the interest of good order and discipline; and that in case of the removal of the conduit or pipe line or any of the valve houses the ground shall be restored by the grantee to its original condition.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 2, line 14, after the word "condition," insert a colon and the following language:

"Provided, That in the discretion of the Secretary of War the privilege herein conferred may be revoked at his instance if and when the regulations as may be prescribed by him to carry into force and effect this act shall be violated upon the part of the said city of Salt Lake City, Utah."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill, the question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas calls for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 3.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. MAYS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House bill, 11424, of similar tenor, be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent that the House bill, 11424, of similar tenor, be laid on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

QUORUM—CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair is of opinion that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves a call of the House. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrews, Md.	Ferris	Kreider	Scott

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and fifteen Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

LOAN OF ARMY RIFLES TO THE AMERICAN LEGION.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9112) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan army rifles to posts of the American Legion and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9112, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9112) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan army rifles to posts of the American Legion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman will remember that when this bill was passed in the House there was quite a controversy over an amendment offered on the floor, which amendment was defeated. Was there any attempt on the part of the Senate to put that amendment back into the bill?

Mr. KAHN. I do not recall that any such effort was made, but at any rate——

Mr. BLANTON. But at any rate the amendment that was defeated here was not put back in the bill?

Mr. KAHN. No. The limitation was put in by the Senate that not more than 10 rifles could be given to one post.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the only material change?

Mr. KAHN. There is no material change. The rifles to be loaned shall be obsolete or condemned rifles.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the sense of limiting the number of these rifles to 10 to each post?

Mr. KAHN. The posts desire to use the rifles for firing salutes at the graves of their dead comrades. When the burial ceremony takes place they have a firing squad, and they desire to get enough rifles to fire a salute at the grave. Then, too, they want several rifles when the organization parades. They have two or three rifles with the color guard, with the flag.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know; but what I am asking you is, What sense is there in limiting the number of rifles to 10 at each one of these posts?

Mr. KAHN. There was considerable discussion on the bill when it was considered in the House, and a great many Members seemed to feel that the War Department would be authorized to give them several hundred if they made a demand for these rifles.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How many men are there in a post?

Mr. KAHN. That depends altogether on how many join. They are not limited.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know. Is there a limited number?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know as to that.

Mr. MADDEN. They have anywhere up to a thousand.

Mr. KAHN. I see one post is making a drive, and the members claim they are going to get 5,000 members. Then there are other posts which have only 40 members.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They would cut a fine figure marching in a parade with 5,000 men in column and only 10 guns.

Mr. KAHN. The only intention is to give them guns for ceremonial purposes. As I said, if a member dies they want to have enough guns to fire a salute over his grave.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In what shape did the House send over that amendment?

Mr. KAHN. The House sent the bill over without any reference to the number of guns. The Senate limited the number to 10. I have asked the House to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How many of these rifles has the War Department got?

Mr. KAHN. At the time we got into the war the Krag-Jorgensens, which were obsolete, numbered about 300,000. How many they have at the present time I do not know, but I presume there are considerably less than 300,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If they had 300,000 Krag-Jorgensens at the beginning of the war that they would not use, it would look as though we had accumulated some other guns under this designation of "useless"——

Mr. KAHN. Or "obsolete"——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; "useless or obsolete."

Mr. KAHN. No. The only rifles that we utilized during the war were the Springfields of 1903 and the Enfield rifle, which dates from the middle of 1917.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Is the language in the bill to which concurrence is asked "obsolete and condemned"?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; "obsolete and condemned." That language was put in by the Senate.

Mr. GARD. Is a condemned gun supposed to be a gun that may safely be used in ceremonies?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. For instance, a condemned gun might be carried by one of the sergeants accompanying the flags.

Mr. GARD. I understand that; but the gentleman said one purpose was to use them in funeral ceremonies where they fire salutes.

Mr. KAHN. Yes. Those would be the obsolete guns.

Mr. GARD. There are two classes of guns, then—obsolete guns and condemned guns?

Mr. KAHN. I presume they can give out a number of obsolete guns and one or two condemned guns.

Mr. GARD. I do not very much like the use of the word "condemned." I am very much in favor of giving them any guns that they need for their services.

Mr. KAHN. A gun may be condemned and may still be serviceable for some purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California to concur in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO OFFICERS OF THE COAST GUARD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3202) granting leave of absence to officers of the Coast Guard, and for other purposes.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant leave of absence without pay to such officer or officers of the United States Coast Guard as he may deem advisable, and to permit him or them to accept employment with the Venezuelan Government with such compensation and emoluments as may be agreed upon between the Venezuelan Government and such officer or officers thus granted leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DALE. Mr. Speaker, this bill has recently gone on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, and I ask unanimous consent that it be passed for the present, retaining its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, can the gentleman furnish me a little more information than is contained in the report if the bill is passed over and remains on the calendar?

Mr. DALE. When I came here this morning I thought I understood all the details in connection with this bill, but I have discovered that there are matters on which I personally feel the House should be better posted than I think it could be by a discussion of it to-day. If the bill retains its place on the calendar, I assure the gentleman from Massachusetts that I myself will be better posted about it when it comes up again.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont that the bill retain its place on the calendar?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Vermont a question. I noticed during the reading by the Clerk that the bill contemplates giving the right to certain officers of the Coast Guard to seek other employment during the absence granted to them. Am I right?

Mr. DALE. I will say to the gentleman from New York that the bill simply gives authority to loan some member or members of the Coast Guard to the Venezuelan Government.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What does the bill provide with reference to the pay of the officer during the time that he is absent from duty?

Mr. DALE. When he is out of the employment of our Government he is paid by the Venezuelan Government.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does the bill provide that during the period that he is in the employ of some one else or of another Government he shall not receive any pay from our Government?

Mr. DALE. It does. His leave is without pay.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. That is the provision of the bill?

Mr. DALE. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont that the bill be passed and retain its place on the calendar?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL FARM-LOAN ACT.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 9065, to amend the farm-loan act, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 9065, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, is this the bill to amend the farm-loan act?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. PLATT, Mr. MCFADDEN, and Mr. PHELAN.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. GOOD, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, when the House adjourned on Saturday evening I made an agreement with some of the gentlemen who are interested in the navy yard items that I would ask unanimous consent that the items under the head of Navy Department commencing at page 18, line 19, and ending at the end of line 2, on page 20, be passed over, to be called up later, so as to give some gentlemen who may be out of the city a chance to be here. I ask unanimous consent that those items be now passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the items indicated by him be passed over until to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. Reserving the right to object, at what stage of the proceedings does the gentleman intend to bring up these items relating to the navy yards?

Mr. GOOD. I think they will probably come up at the end of the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Can the chairman of the committee give any idea when that will be?

Mr. GOOD. I hope the bill will be completed to-morrow.

Mr. MILLER. They will not come up to-day?

Mr. GOOD. If this agreement is acquiesced in I think nothing on this subject will come up to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understood the purpose of this request was to allow gentlemen who are interested in these items an opportunity to get back here?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the gentleman think that is a rather unsound precedent to establish?

Mr. GOOD. The gentlemen who requested it were in favor of these amendments. I am opposed to them, but I want to be entirely fair to them, and I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, certain gentlemen who are interested in the spending of millions of money in navy yards at Philadelphia and elsewhere last Saturday proposed an amendment to spend $9,000,000 to keep a bunch of idle fellows on the pay roll. And then they ran off home to enjoy a few days in the metropolis cities of the northeast section, and have not yet returned, but want us to wait on them by holding up this legislation. The chairman says that he is against these $9,000,000 amendments. May I ask the chairman——

Mr. MASON. The regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BLANTON. We can certainly save time by getting a little information, but if the gentleman wants the agreement which the chairman says he made with his colleagues to permit them to run home and stay three or four days, if he wants that agreement to be carried out he had better not push us with the regular order.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that there need be no misunderstanding. There were quite a number of gentlemen around when the agreement was made, Members on both sides——

Mr. BLANTON. I want to get some information. Is the chairman actively against this amendment or only passively against it? Much depends upon this point.

Mr. GOOD. I am quite actively against it.

Mr. BLANTON. And is the gentleman from Wyoming against it?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know.

Mr. BLANTON. It depends on what the Republican leaders' program is, whether the $9,000,000 is going to be spent, and for the present I object until I get the information.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Texas will not object. We are not to blame because some one calls for the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman from Illinois against the amendment?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am; very strongly.

Mr. BLANTON. If he is against it and the chairman, the gentleman from Iowa, is actively against it, we have a fighting chance.

Mr. GOOD. I am against it; and I will say to the gentleman that we have a fighting chance.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Glacier National Park, Mont.: For reimbursement of the appropriation for the park for the fiscal year 1920 on account of expenditures for fighting forest fires in the park, $19,849.22.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee why such a large appropriation is required to fight fires in this park. In the bill passed in November, 1919, there were $50,000 appropriated and in this measure $19,000 additional, making nearly $70,000 to fight fires in the Glacier Park. What are the conditions that require such an enormous amount of money? I think the gentleman stated when the last deficiency bill was considered that the appropriations to extinguish fires on public lands could be applied to the national parks, if practicable.

Mr. GOOD. I do not know where the gentleman gets his figures. The actual figures for the Glacier National Park were $80,000, and then there is a deficiency of $60,000. That was for the park.

Mr. WATSON. Sixty thousand dollars for fighting fires?

Mr. GOOD. The appropriation recommended here is the actual amount that the Government owes for fighting the fires. They had very destructive fires in the Glacier National Park last summer, which destroyed a great deal of timber, and which necessitated the expenditure of a large sum for fighting the fires.

Mr. WATSON. Last year the appropriation was $50,000.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman knows that there are a good many hundred thousand acres of valuable timber in this park. They have had most destructive fires there.

Mr. WATSON. What are the causes of the fires? There are no railways there.

Mr. GOOD. Some fires are started by lightning striking trees, and many are started by carelessness upon the part of tourists, who camp and are not careful to extinguish their fires.

Mr. WATSON. How many foresters are in this park?

Mr. GOOD. I can not give the exact number, but it depends on conditions. When there is a fire they immediately bring in all the fire fighters they can—all that is necessary to extinguish the fire, if they can get them. They do not have a big force of fire fighters there all the time.

Mr. WATSON. Do I understand that there was $69,000 deficiency appropriated for fires in this one park?

Mr. GOOD. I can not recall whether the $62,000 was for the purpose of fighting fires, but we made specific inquiries in regard to this item. The estimate is an actual deficiency; it is the amount that it actually cost for fighting these fires.

Mr. WATSON. How many acres in the Glacier National Park?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. A million acres.

Mr. GOOD. More than that, I think; it is a very large park. I do not carry the exact acreage in my mind.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no point of order reserved. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Yellowstone National Park, Wyo.: For reimbursement of the appropriation for the park for the fiscal year 1920 on account of expenditures for fighting forest fires in the park and purchasing hay for feeding of elk, $35,026.64.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I would like to ask in what way this is a deficiency. It seems to appropriate $35,000 to feed a bunch of elk, when human beings are starving to death in the country.

Mr. GOOD. The director of the national park advises the committee that the situation with regard to the elk is altogether different than it is in regard to the buffalo. The elk is more of a domestic animal, and if he is not able to paw away the snow and get to the grass he will die of starvation. The grass was all burned out in the national park during the forest fires and there is no grass there for them at all. They will not go to the remoter regions like buffalo will, where they can find grass, and they are dying. The director purchased $30,000 worth of hay out of his appropriation and spent $5,000 in addition from the amount available for fighting fires in Yellowstone Park.

Mr. BLANTON. When did Congress authorize them to spend $35,000 for hay for elk?

Mr. GOOD. They are Government animals; they are animals under the care of the director of the national park and the Secretary of the Interior, and I think these officers, who are intrusted with their care and support, would be under the severest censure if they should allow these elks to starve because the Government refuses to buy hay.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not imagine that they are going to starve.

Mr. GOOD. They are starving, and many of them have starved.

Mr. BLANTON. It is awfully hard to actually starve a wild animal if there is any grass for them.

Mr. GOOD. The director said that the elk are altogether different from the buffalo and other animals of that kind which we have in the park.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph that it is not a deficiency, that it is unauthorized by law, and that it is new legislation.

Mr. GOOD. I do not think it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman withhold the point of order for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. I withhold it.

Mr. MONDELL. I am very familiar with the situation. I know the park thoroughly and the habits of the elk there. In addition to the difficulty that arose from the forest fires——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Wyoming intimated the other day that he was not in favor of sending any aid and succor to human beings who are starving to death now.

Mr. MONDELL. I have not said that.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman willing to appropriate $35,000 to feed a few starving elk and not willing to appropriate money for starving people?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not said that I was not willing to appropriate money.

Mr. BLANTON. I so understood the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. I have not said that, but I think that has not very much to do with the present situation.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Wyoming yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield for a discussion of the matter under consideration.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that it is new legislation, that it is not authorized by law, and that it is not a deficiency.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, section 5181 of the Revised Statutes creates the Yellowstone National Park and section 5193 provides for the care and maintenance and protection of the hunting and fishing in the park. These animals belong to the Government, 40,000 elk. The Government provides against the killing of them in section 5193, and provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall make and publish such rules and regulations as may be deemed necessary for the proper management and care of the park and for the protection of the property therein. He has prescribed those rules and has prescribed that those animals that are starving should be fed. They have already purchased about $30,000 worth of hay for these animals, the amount of the appropriation being about a dollar a head for each elk in the park.

The CHAIRMAN. Out of what appropriation is this paid?

Mr. GOOD. It is paid out of the appropriation carried in the sundry civil bill for the Yellowstone National Park, and for the administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement of the park, including not to exceed $7,500 for maintenance of roads, and so forth, leading out of the park from the east boundary, not to exceed $7,500 for the maintenance of roads in the forest leading out of the park from the south boundary, and not to exceed $1,500 for a bridge over the Buffalo Fork of the Snake River, not to exceed $7,600 for the purchase, operation, maintenance, and repair of motor-propelled, passenger-carrying vehicles, including feed for buffalo and other animals, and salary of keepers, $255,500.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, ever since the establishment of the park, it has been filled largely with game—buffalo principally, and elk. I recall some years ago crossing over from the Great Falls to Yanceys, along the line of the trail of Gen. Howard when he was chasing Chief Joseph away back yonder, that it took us all day to make that trip, and at the end of that trip—I then was the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations—an appropriation was made to extend the road from Great Falls to Yanceys. This is the greatest of all the parks. Game abounds there, the buffalo more numerous than anywhere else, although it is almost an extinct animal. All the world is interested in that game. On that trip I was satisfied that we saw at least 20,000 elk that were grazing about. Sometimes now the winter is so severe, the snow so great, in the absence of fires the grass is covered up and the elk have to go out of the park down to the plains, and when that happens the hunter and the loafer kill the innocent, nonfighting elk. All of the men, women, and children in the United States, in my judgment, are interested in the parks. Last year, I am told, 40,000 people visited these parks, and I thank God for it. They could not go abroad, and they spent their money here in learning something about their own country.

This statute by its construction is broad enough to protect, first, the timber; and second, the streams; and third, the fish; and fourth, the wild animals, the buffalo being mentioned. There is an appropriation made for all the parks for such protection. This is the chief park of all of them, and the unbroken care for these wild animals, carried for the better part of a generation, it seems to me, warrants such a construction of the statute as would authorize this appropriation.

A few days ago, on my return from the West, I traveled with the man who had charge of Yellowstone Park, and who has had for many years, having also charge in general superintendence of the Glacier, the Yellowstone down to the park recently established in Utah. They are establishing automobile lines, they are building roads under the legislation passed by Congress, the States contributing their part as they contribute farther east, south, and north. I do not believe this is subject to the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will call attention to the fact that under this same law which I quoted, section 5189, the Secretary of the Interior is charged with the arrest of all persons trespassing, and is authorized to take such measures as may be necessary or proper to fully carry out the objects and purposes of the section, and shall provide against the wanton destruction of fish and game and against their capture for the purpose of merchandise or profit.

Mr. CANNON. I might add further, that there are vast reaches of the finest forests in the world which the Government owns in Oregon, Washington, Utah, and elsewhere.

You can not find for the protection of the timber, Uncle Sam owning it, any more specific legislation for appropriations to fight fires than is found in this statute, so far as my recollection goes. If there were no further provisions of the law, Uncle Sam owning the park, the expenditure under the appropriation to fight fires—and they frequently have fires in these parks, with great destruction of timber—with the general language and the uniform appropriation from year to year, without bringing a strict construction from the general tenor of the act, I am satisfied that it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. WELLING. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. CANNON. I will.

Mr. WELLING. I want to say I am familiar with the conditions in the Yellowstone National Park. There were 6 feet of snow there this winter. The snow came down very heavily during the early period of the winter, and 20,000 or 30,000 of these elk were driven down out of the park, where they could not find food. Many of these elk went north into Montana. Many others drifted south into the drainage basin of the Snake River. As they crossed the entrance of the protected park area on the Idaho boundary a very great many of those animals were slaughtered by ruthless hunters, because they had gotten out of the protection of the park preserve. It was necessary for the National Park Service, if they were to protect this invaluable herd of elk owned by the Government, to import hay there, at a cost of from $20 to $30 a ton, to save the lives of those animals, and it seems to me that it would be an outrage to-day if they were not fed and protected and gotten back into the park, where they belong.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman briefly.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, it is not a question of saving the lives of this herd of elk. One gentleman says that herd contains 40,000. The gentleman from Utah says that 30,000 have been killed by hunters.

Mr. WELLING. There were 70,000 in the park in the beginning, added up.

Mr. BLANTON. There is a little discrepancy in the arithmetic of the two gentlemen.

Mr. CANNON. I have not been out to count them; I only know in a general way.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not quibbling about that, but the point I make is this, that it is not a question of providing hay to keep them alive, because the hay has already been bought and provided for and is being fed to the elk, and the superintendent of that park has enough hay to keep them alive, but the question is giving back to the superintendent $35,000 more money to expend on something else in the future to make good the money which he has spent for hay. How much money did we give to start with for this year ending June 30? Two hundred and fifty-five thousand dollars to the Yellowstone National Park to spend for this fiscal year. Is there any evidence here to show that by spending the amount of money he has spent for hay that he has exhausted that appropriation of $255,000? No. He may have $200,000 of it left. It is just a question of whether this is a deficiency item and that question alone. We do not know how much he has spent. We do not know how much he has on hand. I say there should be some evidence before the Congress of the proper expenditure of this immense sum of $255,000 that was turned over to the superintendent of this park for park purposes for one year before we go down into the Treasury and spend $35,000 more. I say, Mr. Chairman, that the chairman of this committee has wholly failed to show that this is a deficiency. Clearly, it is new legislation, clearly it is unauthorized by law, and I submit that it ought to come out of this bill. When are we going to stop waste and begin real economy?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. It appears that these parks have been authorized by law and set apart for the preservation of certain animals and game in general and that these are being protected by law. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and empowered to take such measures as may be necessary to protect the animals, fish, and game in the park. It seems to the Chair that the proposed appropriation is clearly authorized by law.

As to the question whether or not it is a deficiency, it seems to the Chair that there can be little doubt. The argument made by the gentleman from Texas might have weight if directed against the merit of the section.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chair permit me to propound a parliamentary inquiry to him?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; if the gentleman will permit the Chair to finish. It does not appear to the Chair that the argument of the gentleman is properly directed to the point of order. Now the Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. When we appropriate $250,000 for park purposes for a certain department of the Government, is there a deficiency until that department shows that the same has been actually contracted for or spent?

The CHAIRMAN. There may or may not be, according to circumstances. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL Mr Chairman, I do not want to take up the time of the committee unnecessarily, but this matter of the elk in Yellowstone Park having been discussed I think something more should be said. But a small portion of the $220,000, if that is the appropriation for the Yellowstone National Park, is ordinarily used for the purpose of feeding game. A few thousand dollars is ordinarily the maximum. This year conditions were very unusual in the Yellowstone National Park. Not only were there forest fires, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has stated, but snowy winter set in in that region about six weeks earlier than it ordinarily does. The snows became very heavy in October, and the elk that ordinarily came down from the high mountains to the lower feeding grounds in December or January came down in October and November.

The elk herd which summers in the park and in the country around it ordinarily divides in its migrations into two main herds—the northern and the southern herds. The southern herd is the larger. Each herd contains somewhere between 20,000 and 25,000 elk. The southern herd migrates into what is known as the Jackson Hole country in Wyoming, and when it passes out of the park it passes into State game preserves quite as large as the park, and is there as thoroughly protected as in the park. Furthermore, if this herd drifts farther south than the Wyoming game preserve, it does so during the closed season in Wyoming. So, as a matter of fact, the southern herd is protected in its migrations. Unfortunately, Montana has never seen fit to protect the elk herd or the portion of the elk herd that drifts north.

Formerly the hunting season in Montana closed, I think, about the 1st of December, and as the main body of the northern herd did not leave the park until after that time, the portion of the herd that drifted beyond the park boundaries was more or less, though never very well, protected there. Recently, I think within the last year, the Montana game law has been modified so as to extend the open season later, which, of course, endangers the lives of any elk which drift north from the northern part of the park any time during the long and late hunting season. However, that extension was not necessary this year to expose the elk to danger of slaughter on the north, for when in October and November the heavy snows drove the great northern herd out of the highlands of the upper park and across the boundary of the park into Montana it was slaughtered mercilessly. I have seen it estimated that 8,000 elk were slaughtered in Montana, and, unfortunately, Idaho did not protect the elk that drifted west. But Montana seems to have made no effort to protect the elk herd, and under the Montana laws hunters came in in droves, and the elk were shot down ruthlessly within sight of the park boundaries and hauled away in carload lots. I am told so many were killed that many carcasses spoiled before they could be carried away.

I make this statement in the hope that this great State, which borders the Yellowstone Park on the north, will follow the example that Wyoming has set in the protection of the elk herd, and change her laws so that when these elk drift north from the park they shall have some hope of at least reasonable protection. It is about time, in the interest of the good name of Montana, that that State made some effort to protect the elk herd. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of such additional quantities of hay as may be necessary to insure preservation of the northern herd of elk, $8,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not a deficiency and not legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter all patent fees shall be paid to the Commissioner of Patents, who shall deposit the same in the Treasury of the United States in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct, and said commissioner is authorized to pay back any sum or sums of money paid to him by any person by mistake or in excess of the fee required by law.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. What is the practice now about these patent fees?

Mr. GOOD. The practice now is that if even a copy of a patent is requested, a copy costing 10 cents, and the applicant sends in the 10 cents, the money is covered into the Treasury under the law, and the Comptroller of the Treasury Department states if that patent is not available and the money must be returned, the red tape that must necessarily be gone through in accordance with the law to return the 10 cents requires an expenditure of about $1 in clerk hire to get the voucher issued and the money sent back.

Now, the Comptroller of the Treasury and the Commissioner of the Patent Office have said that it would greatly facilitate matters in their office if they had some common-sense plan of returning the small fee that was sent in when the office could not supply the copy that was requested.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand now that if a person sends a dollar to the Patent Office for copies, when they receive that dollar and they know they have not the copies that they can not return the dollar to the man who sends it?

Mr. GOOD. That is true. It must be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts, and then an original voucher must be issued; and they say that the various hands it must pass through before the voucher can be sent out involves an expenditure of about $1.

Mr. WALSH. Let us see what they will do under this:

Hereafter all patent fees shall be paid to the Commissioner of Patents, who shall deposit the same in the Treasury of the United States in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct, and said commissioner is authorized to pay back any sum or sums of money paid to him by any person by mistake or in excess of the fee required by law.

How are they going to eliminate this clerk hire, then?

Mr. GOOD. The Secretary of the Treasury will prescribe rules by which that money is to be held, the part of it that is held as a special deposit until the matter is adjusted. It now goes into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts and it can not go out again until the money is appropriated. This gives the Secretary of the Treasury jurisdiction to prescribe rules and regulations with regard to this special deposit, so that it can be paid without going through the red tape required at present.

Mr. WALSH. The Secretary of the Treasury has no authority to do that now?

Mr. GOOD. No authority at all.

Mr. WALSH. But he has with reference to some other departments of the Government. Is that the result of general legislation?

Mr. GOOD. As a general rule. Where the money goes into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, I do not know of any rule by which he can pay it without an appropriation. The Constitution says it can not be paid out except in pursuance of act of Congress.

Mr. WALSH. So, if it is done by any department, the gentleman thinks it must be by specific authorization of law?

Mr. GOOD. I think so.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman another question, and I move to strike out the last word.

It seems to me the regulations ought to go a little further than expressed in this paragraph. Would it not be well, in line 23, to add "such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe," so that we will have a definite rule with reference to these payments by mistake?

Mr. GOOD. That is practically the same that we have. It reads:

In such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The way the paragraph is drawn that refers only to deposits, as I understand it.

Mr. GOOD. This paragraph was drawn and submitted to the Comptroller of the Treasury. In matters of that kind I do not believe that the committee ought to report out legislation unless the official who is to pass upon it sees and approves, and this provision was submitted to the Comptroller of the Treasury and has his approval.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not care enough about it to offer an amendment, but often I have thought that these gentlemen in the departments do not know just the exact form of law to carry out their intention.

Mr. GOOD. The comptroller is pretty careful about these matters.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the comptroller direct that this money shall be deposited in the Treasury and then have it withdrawn without an appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. The Commissioner of Patents and the Comptroller of the Treasury both appeared before the committee and asked for this specific legislation in the exact words carried in the bill. Now, whether they propose every day to deposit this money or whether the regulations shall prescribe that enough shall be held to meet contingencies, I do not know. I only know that Judge Warwick came before us, and I submitted to him this question:

You have suggested some legislation, reading as follows:

"Hereafter all patent fees shall be paid to the Commissioner of Patents, who shall deposit the same in the Treasury of the United States in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct, and said commissioner is authorized to pay back any sum or sums of money paid to him by any person by mistake or in excess of the fee required by law."

Will you explain what the present law is and the expense or delay which its operation entails and which might be avoided by the enactment of the proposed legislation?

Then he goes on and states in substance what I have tried to explain and states that this provision will cure that defect.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I hope it will. I think there ought to be a provision to cure it. I do not myself understand how, when we require money to be deposited in the Treasury, we can then say that without an appropriation the Commissioner of Patents may pay back part of this money.

Mr. GOOD. I see the point. I am not the author of the amendment. The committee is simply reporting it as it was submitted by the head of the department that is administering it and the Comptroller of the Treasury, who must pass upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For producing copies of weekly issue of patents, designs, and trademarks; production of copies of drawings and specifications of exhausted patents and other papers; and for expense of transporting publications of patents issued by the Patent Office to foreign governments, $25,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have had several communications recently with reference to the delay in obtaining copies of specifications, and so forth, in the Patent Office. I suppose the intention was to blame Congress because there was not a sufficient appropriation. I do not know. I do not know whether the information or the suggestions came from the Patent Office or not. I had a letter the other day from a patent attorney asking for specifications, and they said they did not have any, but had ordered them printed, so I suppose they had the money for it. They could not have ordered them printed without having the money. But they seek to put the blame on Congress. Is there any justification for that?

Mr. GOOD. I do not believe so. For this year the estimates under the provision we are now considering were for $140,000, and Congress appropriated $135,000, and has already appropriated $15,000 as a deficiency, which makes $150,000, or $10,000 more than was originally estimated for this year.

Now, it is true that the demand in the Patent Office for publications of this kind has very largely increased; an increase amounting, I think, to as much as 30 per cent over last year for copies of patents. We increased the fee required from 5 to 10 cents per copy, but the commissioner states that that has had no effect at all so far as demand is concerned, but that while it has doubled his receipts recently the demand keeps coming. For instance, my recollection is that the total receipts of the Patent Office increased from $1,975,000 to $2,418,000 for the year 1918, and the increase is greater in the first six months of this year by about 20 per cent than it was over last year.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, there is no reason that I can see why they should not have money enough to print patents and specifications which they propose to sell.

Mr. GOOD. They ought to have the money, because it is a money-making proposition for the Government.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. We get for them more than they actually cost.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized to credit the accounts of the special disbursing agent of St. Elizabeths Hospital with such amounts as he has or may hereafter pay in carrying out the provision of the sundry civil act of July 19, 1919, relating to the readjustment of salaries at the hospital, and the schedule of salaries and allowances for maintenance, where the latter is not provided by the hospital, approved by the Secretary of the Interior August 1 and November 25, 1919, respectively, or as may be modified hereafter by him, notwithstanding the act of April 6, 1914, or section 4839, Revised Statutes, United States, as amended.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, what is the necessity of making this permanent law?

Mr. GOOD. The necessity is this: It will only make it permanent law for this year, because the sundry civil act provided only for the current year. The Secretary has authority only to fix the rates of pay for one year.

The gentleman will recall the condition formerly out at St. Elizabeths. Under the provisions in the sundry civil act of July 19, 1919, the salaries of nurses, for example, were fixed at $30 a month. The result was that where individuals were paying $30 to $35 a week for trained nurses, they could not hire any nurses at St. Elizabeths Hospital, and I think very few were hired, and most of them were incompetent. Now, the sundry civil act of July 19, 1919, provided that for this current year the Secretary of the Interior should fix the salaries of the employees, and under that law he fixed two different standards of salaries, one standard for the persons who were housed and fed by the Government within the grounds and a little larger sum for those who provided their own subsistence and dwelling. You will recall that they asked for something like two or three hundred thousand dollars for additional buildings. We did not give them that money. We thought it better for some of them to live outside.

Now, the Secretary has fixed the rate of pay at $1 more per day for the laborers and trained nurses who live outside and board themselves and rent their homes than is paid to those who live within St. Elizabeths Hospital; but under the ruling, while he was given that authority to fix the pay, the comptroller holds that in fixing that rate of pay he has brought in another element not specified in the law, and that is the question of subsistence.

Mr. WALSH. If you write this language into this act, will it not be used to sustain the contention that it was intended in the sundry civil act of 1919 to fix those rates of pay and make them the permanent rates there?

Mr. GOOD. I do not think so.

Mr. WALSH. Then, what is the word "hereafter" doing in here?

Mr. GOOD. It can only possibly have reference to the rest of this current year, and this is only a direction to the accounting officer. Whereas the accounting officers are not given the power to fix the rates of pay which are paid under the law, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to adjust the compensation of the officers at St. Elizabeths Hospital. That only gave him the authority the gentleman speaks of.

Mr. WALSH. They sometimes hang a very persuasive argument upon the use of a single word in a statute, particularly after the appropriation is made. I think if the gentleman would agree that the word "hereafter" might be stricken out, so that it would only apply during the balance of the present fiscal year, it would be satisfactory, and I will withdraw the reservation of the point of order and offer an amendment in line 18, to strike out the word "hereafter."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. Then I will not go any further.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Did the gentleman from Iowa state the full case? How much of these accounts has been disallowed so far?

Mr. GOOD. Just the two items that are mentioned in the first paragraph. They are the only two that have gone to the accounting officers. There are a good many others that have not yet been presented to the auditor and accounting officers. This one went to the Treasury, and the auditor disallowed that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What does this consist of?

Mr. GOOD. Accounts of George W. Kreis, special disbursing agent for St. Elizabeths Hospital, $185.66, covering items disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury in his accounts for the period ending September 21, 1919. I understood there were two claims.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Was not the principal one the increase in the salary of the superintendent of the hospital? Perhaps his salary ought to be increased. My recollection is——

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is correct with regard to the salary of the superintendent, Dr. White. It was increased by the Secretary of the Interior from $5,000 to $7,000 a year; but that is not included, as I recall, in this $185.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am inclined to think that is the principal item in the $185. I am not sure. That is one of the principal items, anyhow.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I find that was the item for the first month.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. So that while the gentleman has given the reason in reference to the nurses, up to date the principal difficulty has been that the salary of the superintendent, without authority of law, was increased from $5,000 to $7,000 a year. Now, it may be that that salary ought to be increased, but that plainly was not contemplated by the sundry civil act of July, 19, 1919.

Mr. GOOD. No. In considering that matter the committee did not consider the question of the salaries of the officials, unless they were minor officials, but principally the nurses and attendants and persons who were employed in the hospital.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As a matter of fact a situation arose in reference to the nurses and some of the attendants which required correction. Congress endeavored to correct that in the sundry civil act of July 19 last. Thereupon, as soon as that act was passed the superintendent of the asylum, Dr. White, who, I believe, is a very capable gentleman, who very likely may be entitled to the increase of salary, secured from the Secretary of the Interior, not in accordance with the law but against the provisions of the law, a recommendation that his salary be increased $2,000 a year. When that item reached the comptroller's office it was disallowed. Now, this proposes to allow it.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not only for the past but for the future.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And that salary is permanently increased. Well, it may be that it ought to be increased, but I do not like the subterfuges about these things, asking Congress to legislate upon one subject, which it does, and then seeking to apply it to something else to which it does not apply, and when they find they can not get that by the accounting officers, then ask for a provision which gives no indication on its face of what it was intended for, but seems very fair on its face, and they want to slip it through. Now, perhaps we ought to increase the salary of Dr. White. Probably he is worth $10,000 a year, very likely. I do not know.

Mr. GOOD. It was not the intention of the committee to slip anything through. That arose entirely from the fact that the salary of Dr. White was involved with employees; but in looking up the record I find that that is the original item referred to and the way it arose. The sundry civil act provides as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to adjust the compensation of the officers and employees of St. Elizabeths Hospital.

Now, as the gentleman from Illinois said, the comptroller ruled that under that provision the Secretary of the Interior had not the authority to increase the salary of Dr. White from $5,000 to $7,000, which he did. With regard to Dr. White, I do not know anything about the man who was the superintendent of this hospital before him.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He has been there a long time.

Mr. GOOD. But I do know that under the authority granted in the sundry civil bill he was able to hire some help that he could not hire before. Up to that time the condition was deplorable. Since then there has been a complete readjustment of things there. I regard Dr. White as a very able superintendent. From what I have seen of the man I have no doubt that he could secure a great deal more compensation in the general practice.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think he is a very competent man. I agree with the gentleman about that; but I am frank to say that when they come before us and ask to have certain legislation enacted purporting to be solely for the purpose of securing ordinary help at the hospital, I do not like it when the first thing they do under that legislation is to increase the salary of the superintendent, and that is the main increase that is made. The principal increase that was made was in the salary of the superintendent. I dare say that never was in the mind of the Committee on Appropriations at all when it reported the original item.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Illinois is right about that. I want to say this in all fairness to Dr. White: As far as the committee was informed Dr. White knew nothing about the request for an increase of salary. That was made by Admiral Braisted. He came before the committee and said: "On account of the high cost of living, I suggested to Mr. Lane that we give him $10,000. That was talked over, and the alternative was reached, and we agreed to give him $7,000."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I can understand how a naval officer felt about it; you could not get salaries high enough to suit them under any circumstances. Here was plainly a case where it was not the intention of Congress to have a certain thing done. That is what they did, and it was the principal thing they did.

Mr. GOOD. No; it was as far as the increase of salary of any one person was concerned. They did not have nurses, could not get them at $30 a month, and the principal thing they did was to increase the salaries of a great many people, and now they have attendants there whereby I imagine as much as $60,000 more will be expended for attendants this year than last year.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In violation of the ruling of the comptroller?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The principal item in the disallowed account, if I recollect correctly, was the increase in the salary of the superintendent. It may be that it was properly increased, but not increased in a proper way.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. The sundry civil bill authorized the Secretary of the Interior to increase the salaries of the officials. He did increase the salary of the officials under that authorization, and increased the salary of Dr. White from $5,000 to $7,000. But it went to the Comptroller of the Treasury, and he said "Nay, nay; the statute fixes it at $5,000." It not being specifically repealed, he held that the act did not authorize the increase.

I know Dr. White very well, and I do not think that he was conniving to cover up anything. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not interpose any point of order, because the sundry civil bill in its provision evidently intended to give this authority and change the law, but the comptroller, who had the last guess, said no.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think that was the intention. Here were salaries not fixed by law, and the design was to let the Secretary of the Interior fix those increases of salaries. Here was a salary that was fixed by law, and I do not think it was contemplated in the act at all that that should be increased. I think the history of the act will show that it was not intended to change salaries fixed by law. Dr. White is doubtless a very efficient superintendent. It is said that he has asked for no increase. I know of no reason why we should force him to take it against his will. However, I do not think I shall interpose a point of order, but I think we have been imposed upon.

Mr. GOOD. I find that they had 1,061 employees on the day the hospital officials were before the committee. Of these, between 500 and 600 were living in the hospital and had quarters provided there. About the same number had quarters outside. The one thing that the committee was impressed with was that they had made a fair arrangement with the employees by having them get quarters outside, which would cost the Government less than to have them quartered in the building.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. A large share of those people have had quarters outside all the time. They have never been frank with the committee in telling the situation about it. I do not feel that I know enough about St. Elizabeths to make the point of order, and I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "hereafter" in line 18, page 23.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 18, strike out the word "hereafter."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Iowa has no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 28 ayes and 4 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EAGAN: Page 24, after line 4, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"BUREAU OF MINES.

"Tunnel investigations: For investigations of conditions dangerous to health and safety in tunnels, shafts, and similar confined places, caused by deleterious gases, or arising during the construction of tunnels, shafts, and similar engineering works, with a view to improving such conditions by determining the most efficient means of protection from these dangers, including all equipment, supplies, expenses of travel, subsistence, and all other expenses requisite for and incident thereto, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, to be immediately available and continue available during the fiscal year 1921, $100,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is to provide the sum of $100,000 to conduct "investigations of conditions dangerous to health and safety in tunnels, shafts, and similar confined places caused by deleterious gases," and so forth. The rapid increase of the use of motor vehicles is creating a new problem in the ventilation of subways, tunnels, and other confined places through which these vehicles must pass.

It is just and proper that the Federal Government should investigate this problem rather than local communities or States. Tunnels are being considered in many parts of the United States. The largest one for which immediate information is wanted is the proposed vehicular tunnel between New York and New Jersey under the Hudson River. This tunnel will be 9,000 feet long and will have an estimated maximum number of 2,000 automobiles and trucks per hour passing through it during the rush periods. The amount of poisonous gas given off by this long line of machines is almost beyond conception; certainly it can not be guessed at. That this fact is fully appreciated by the New York State Bridge and Tunnel Commission and the New Jersey Interstate Bridge and Tunnel Commission is shown in the following letter from the chairmen of the two commissions to the Secretary of the Interior, asking the Bureau of Mines to conduct investigations on automobile exhaust gases with respect to tunnel ventilation.

[New York State Bridge and Tunnel Commission and New Jersey Interstate Bridge and Tunnel Commission, Office of Chief Engineer, Hall of Records.]

NEW YORK CITY, October 28, 1919.

The Hon. FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The States of New York and New Jersey are about to construct the first subaqueous highway tunnel in this country, and in planning this work the question of ventilation is receiving very careful consideration. At the present time there are in use in London two highway tunnels similar to the tunnel which the States are undertaking, and up to the present time their ventilation has not proved a serious problem, but neither of these tunnels is as long nor carries the amount of traffic which it is expected will use our tunnel.

In studying the ventilation problem the New York State Bridge and Tunnel Commission and the New Jersey Interstate Bridge and Tunnel Commission, through its engineers, have made a very careful search, covering the entire field of investigations carried out up to the present time, in order to determine the amount and composition of the exhaust gas of motor vehicles and the amount of dilution necessary to obtain adequate ventilation. The most extensive work which has been carried out in this country is that which has been conducted by the Bureau of Mines; and with this in view, our chief engineer, Mr. Clifford M. Holland, recently met the Director of the Bureau of Mines, Mr. Van. H. Manning, in New York City, and discussed with him the question of carrying out investigations which would afford the needed information on this subject. The Bureau of Mines has already conducted tests on the allowable percentage of carbon monoxide in connection with accidents in mines, but not from the point of view of the continuous presence of small percentages such as would be serious from long-continued exposure.

We are writing you to learn if it will be possible to obtain the valuable services which can be rendered by the Bureau of Mines in these investigations. It is felt that tests carried out under the direction of your department with its staff of experts will be authoritative and fill a pressing need for public information to-day.

Respectfully,

GEORGE R. DYER, Chairman,
MORRIS M. FROHLICH, Secretary,
New York State Bridge and Tunnel Commission.
W. H. NOYES, Chairman,
E. MORGAN BARRADALE, Secretary,
New Jersey Interstate Bridge and Tunnel Commission.

Following is a letter from A. D. Neeld, a civil engineer, of Pittsburgh, to the Bureau of Mines, suggesting the bureau make a complete investigation of this subject:

NOVEMBER 24, 1919.

Hon. VAN. H. MANNING,
Director Bureau of Mines, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have charge of the construction of a general traffic tunnel in the city of Pittsburgh, Pa., for the county of Allegheny, Pa. This tunnel, or I should say these tunnels, consist of two parallel tunnels 59 feet between centers, each of them being about 5,700 feet long and 26 feet wide.

In making a study of the conditions to be met in a project of this nature almost the first problem encountered is that of supplying a sufficient quantity of fresh air for the comfort and safety of men and animals using the tunnel. The general use of gasoline-motor cars narrows the study to the determination of the quantity of gasoline consumed by the various kinds of motor cars under the conditions of highway traffic, the quantity and composition of the exhaust gases, and the effects of these exhaust gases on men and animals.

I have been able to find but little information on these questions. There have been a few isolated tests made on passenger automobiles and motor trucks, insufficient, however, on which to base a design for ventilation. The best information to be found on the subject is in Bulletin No. 74 of the Bureau of Mines, which gives very satisfactory data on the maximum production of carbon monoxide by gasoline mine motors, but does not take up automobiles and motor trucks.

On the effect of this gas on men and animals I have found only the most general statements.

In view of the fact that projects for general traffic tunnels are under consideration in a number of cities in the country, I am of the opinion that this subject is of sufficient general interest to justify the Bureau of Mines in making a complete investigation of the use of gasoline in motor cars and the effects of the exhaust gases on both men and animals.

Yours, truly,

(Signed) A. D. NEELD.

Following is a letter to the Director of the Bureau of Mines from the chief engineer of the Boston transit department:

CITY OF BOSTON,
TRANSIT DEPARTMENT,
Boston, December 2, 1919.

Mr. VAN. H. MANNING,
Director United States Bureau of Mines, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In making studies for a proposed tunnel under the harbor for vehicular traffic between East Boston and Boston we are considering the question of ventilation, particularly in regard to the disposing of the exhaust gases from motor vehicles. If your bureau has made any experiments which throw any light on this question, I should be glad if you would kindly send me any bulletin which your bureau may have issued in regard to this matter. If you know of any other sources of information, or should your bureau undertake any further investigations along this line, I should be very glad if you would let me know.

There seems to be very little published information on the probable injurious effects of the carbon monoxide in automobile exhaust gases, though it is a matter of increasing importance on account of the great increase in motor vehicle traffic.

Very truly, yours,

EDMUND S. DAVIS,
Chief Engineer.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EAGAN. I will.

Mr. WALSH. The tunnels where they use electric motors for power are not filled with gases?

Mr. EAGAN. I should think not.

Mr. WALSH. Why is it necessary to spend $100,000 to discover that?

Mr. EAGAN. The purpose of the amendment is to get aid from the Federal Government in making the investigation, because the information will be of use throughout the country, and because tunnels for the purpose of providing ways for motor vehicles are under consideration in several different parts of the country at this time. The States of New York and New Jersey propose to expend $10,000,000 each in the construction of this tunnel, and I contend that it is in many respects an undertaking that will be of great benefit to the commerce of the country. Because of the large expenditure which both States expect to make in connection with this great undertaking they feel they ought not to be burdened with the additional expense of ascertaining this information which when secured will be of great value not only in the construction of the tunnel under the Hudson River but in all similar undertakings.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, an estimate was made for an appropriation of $100,000 for this purpose. The committee heard Dr. Manning, of the Bureau of Mines, and others in support of it, and it appeared very conclusively in the hearings that the Bureau of Mines did not have jurisdiction of this subject, that they were not authorized by law to do the work, and therefore we ought not to report out any appropriation for that purpose. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane, is not authorized by law, and is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. It would be very clearly legislation, which is sufficient to sustain the point of order, and it is not germane. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order on those two grounds.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL.

For compensation to assistant postmasters at first and second class offices, $350,000.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 21, after the figures "350,000," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following language:

"Provided, That the tenth provision of section 2 of an act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, is hereby amended so that it will hereafter read as follows:

"'Provided further, That no assistant postmaster or supervisory official at offices of the first class shall receive a less salary than $100 per annum, including the increase herein provided, in excess of the sixth-grade salary provided for clerks and carriers in the City Delivery Service, nor shall an assistant postmaster at any office of the second class be paid a less salary, including the increase herein provided, than that paid the highest-salaried clerk or letter carrier employed in such office.'"

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is legislation and is not authorized by law. I will reserve it if the gentleman wishes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the amendment is subject to the point of order, because the effect of it is to reduce expenditures and would, therefore, come within the provisions of the Holman rule, which permits legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, speaking to the merits of the amendment, since the gentleman has reserved the point of order, I want to make this brief explanation: The appropriation bill for the Post Office Department for 1920 carried, I believe, $4,281,500 for assistant postmasters at first and second class post offices. That was thought and estimated to be sufficient to take care of these expenses for the fiscal year 1920, including the increases which had been provided by Congress from time to time; but the Comptroller of the Treasury, in construing that part of section 2 which consists of the tenth proviso, held that the proviso referred to the basic salaries, and the effect of this construction was to increase the expenditure by $493,000 for this fiscal year. In order that we may have the situation clearly before us, it is necessary to go back and see what we have done with reference to the increases in these salaries. In the Post Office appropriation bill of 1919 we took up what might be called the graded employees, like clerks, carriers, railway mail clerks, and we increased their salaries by increasing the compensation of their grades. For instance, the salaries of the respective grades of postal clerks and carriers before the passage of that law was from $800 to $1,200. We really had five classes then, but what is known as the Madden reclassification bill made six classes or grades, ranging from $1,000, being the entrance grade, to $1,500, the sixth grade. That took care of some 75,000 clerks and carriers. As to railway mail clerks, the entrance grade was $900 at that time, and I believe ranged up to $1,800, being 10 grades. We changed that and made the entrance grade $1,100 and then on up to $2,000 for the tenth grade, and suspended the automatic promotions for that year. That gave each employee of the classes I have named for that fiscal year a flat salary increase of $200. As to rural carriers, we gave them a flat increase of $300 on the standard routes, raising it from $1,200 to $1,500. That took care of most of the employees except the assistant postmasters at first and second class offices and supervisory officials and employees of that kind. They were not graded employees, and so we gave them an increase of $200 per annum where their basic salaries were $2,200 and less.

That was for the fiscal year 1919. The practical working out of that law dissatisfied the assistant postmasters at some offices in this way: We will say that at an office where the postmaster was receiving $2,400 per annum the assistant would get $1,200 as a basic salary. His increase would be $200 per annum. That would make his total salary $1,400, and he would thereby receive less salary than the highest grade clerk or carrier, who could go up to $1,500. Therefore, they complained to the committee about that and said that they ought to receive at least as much as the highest paid clerk or carrier. In 1919, when the appropriation bill for 1920 went to the Senate, the Senate put on an amendment in the form of a proviso, and which reads as follows:

Provided further, That no assistant postmaster nor supervisory official in offices of the first class shall receive a less salary than $100 per annum in excess of the sixth-grade salary provided for clerks and carriers in a city delivery office, nor shall an assistant postmaster at any office of the second class be paid a less salary than that paid the highest salaried clerk or letter carrier employed in such office.

Now, what was the intention of Congress as to that provision? We will again take as an illustration a second-class office where the salary of the postmaster is $2,400. Under the law the basic salary of the assistant postmaster is $1,200, and under the provision of section 2 he would only get an increase of $200, which would make a total salary of $1,400. Now, it was the intention of the committee in adopting the proviso that in cases of that kind the assistant postmaster would receive a salary of not less than the highest grade employee at the office, which would put him at $1,500, which is the salary of the highest grade employee or carrier at a second-class office. Now, in first-class offices it was intended that the supervisory officials should be paid $100 more than the highest salaried employees of the sixth grade, but the comptroller, when the matter was put up to him, construed that it meant the basic salary, and that therefore all these assistant postmasters at second-class offices receiving less than the highest paid employee should go up to the highest paid salary, which is $1,500, and in addition to that should receive the $200 increase in salary and also the $150 bonus given by the joint resolution of November, 1919——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has occupied five minutes under the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. BLACK. I ask that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, might we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does not the gentleman think that the language used in the proviso put in by the Senate is perfectly clear?

Mr. BLACK. I am not, of course, attempting to argue for a moment that the construction of the comptroller is not the correct construction, because I think it is according to the reading of the language, and yet I know it was the intention—at least I think I do from the debates which took place and general understanding—that it was the intention of Congress to give these assistant postmasters and supervisory officials the $200 per annum increase which was provided in the bill and add a further proviso that their salaries, meaning undoubtedly to include the increase, should not be less than that of the highest grade employee at second-class offices and should not be less than $100 more per annum at the first-class offices.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does the gentleman think——

Mr. BLACK. Now, my amendment, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, merely adds to the language of the proviso, in the two proper places, the words "including the increases herein provided," which assures that these particular employees will only receive the increases which Congress, I think, evidently intended to give.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Now, does the gentleman think that this amendment of his, which is intended to make clear, as he says, what is in doubt, ought to be inserted in a deficiency bill, or, rather, ought to be reserved for the action of the Post Office Committee of the House in connection with such other propositions as may be pending there, or may be taken up hereafter in relation to salaries generally of offices?

Mr. BLACK. If the gentleman will permit, I will answer that by saying that if I thought there was any doubt whatever. If I thought that there was even room for reasonable doubt of the intention of the Congress or the committee, I would not offer this as an amendment to an appropriation bill; but I believe that the gentleman himself is bound to admit that Congress had no intention whatever, for instance, of promoting an assistant postmaster in a second-class office, where the salary is $1,200 a year, to $1,500 and then giving in addition another $200 increase of salary. Feeling that I know what the intent of Congress was, I have not hesitated to offer an amendment of this kind. I think the intent of Congress was clearly set forth by the First Assistant Postmaster General in his testimony before the committee in this case where he makes this statement:

The appropriation bill under which we are operating this year provided a war bonus. It provides that the salaries of supervisory officers as first-class offices shall not be less than $100 greater than the salary of the highest paid clerk or carrier, and at second-class offices it shall be no less than the salary of the highest paid clerk or carrier. The comptroller ruled that that meant on the basic salary and not on the bonus, and it was therefore necessary to promote assistant postmasters at second-class offices where they received less than the highest salary paid to a clerk or carrier to a salary equivalent to the salary paid the clerk or carrier. That meant the promotion of those at first-class offices who received less than $1,800 to $1,800. It involved an additional expenditure of $493,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, now I do not know exactly what the gentleman from Texas expects to accomplish by the amendment. I did talk with the gentleman a few minutes before he introduced the amendment, or rather he talked to me, and told me what the decision of the comptroller was. The legislation that this amendment refers to was put in the bill in the Senate last year. It was known as the Wadsworth amendment. The Wadsworth amendment was a very comprehensive piece of legislation that would have gone much further than the bill itself went. When the bill went to conference the conferees saw that the amendment offered by Senator WADSWORTH was not well thought out, that it would complicate the situation in the Post Office Department in respect to these salaries, and the conferees agreed upon the language to which the gentleman's amendment now refers.

I do not know what effect the amendment would have on the situation as it exists. The Post Office bill has passed the House for this year. It is now under consideration in the Senate. It will undoubtedly go to conference, and it is altogether likely that there will be plenty of opportunity to consider the question involved in the gentleman's amendment in an orderly way. I do not believe it is good practice to pass an important matter like this, involving a great many men in an important service, without giving it the most careful consideration. And while I believe it was never the intention of the Post Office Committee, either of the House or of the Senate, to do more than to give these assistant postmasters $100 above the highest-paid clerk, I am not at all sure that the amendment of the gentleman accomplishes that purpose. In any event, I would not be willing——

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I will state to the gentleman that I agree with him that it is ordinarily not wise to offer an amendment of this kind from the floor, but it was so clearly the intention of the committee to do what the gentleman says was intended to be done, to wit, to raise the assistant postmasters in second-class offices to the highest-paid clerk or carrier and the supervisory officials at first-class offices $100 beyond such salary, that I have added to the language simply the words:

Including the increases herein provided.

And that, it seems to me, would clearly mean that the total salary of the assistant postmaster in a case of that kind, including the increase that he is to receive by the bill, shall not be less than that of the clerk or carrier, but would not be more, unless it would be so by the regular increases provided in the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. I am sure the gentleman does not intend to do anything that ought not to be done.

Mr. BLACK. One more statement, and then I am through. I would not offer it except for the fact that the mistake has already cost the Government $493,000, and I do not think anybody will pretend that it was the intention of Congress to give this added amount. All assistants do not get it. If they do not happen to reside in an office where the salary would be less than the highest-grade employee, they would only receive the increase provided in the bill, which is $200 per annum.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. What does the bill that has just passed carry with regard to this?

Mr. BLACK. I will say to the gentleman this matter was never called to the attention of the committee, and I only knew of it by reading the hearings and finding out why this deficiency.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman can see then what position we would be in if we adopted this amendment. The salaries of these persons would be reduced for the balance of this fiscal year and then increased again at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. BLACK. I am assuming now if the House will adopt it, it will be notice to the Post Office Committee in regard to the situation.

Mr. GOOD. The Post Office Committee and the House have already acted.

Mr. BLACK. I will say this, that I have only offered this amendment out of a sense of responsibility. The House can do whatever it wants to do with it. While the comptroller's decision, I am satisfied, is correct as to the language written, it is clearly causing this class of employees to receive an increase which Congress did not intend. At least that is the view I take of the matter, and I have discharged my duty in calling it to the attention of the House.

Mr. GOOD. I think the comptroller's decision did cause an expenditure of $493,000 more than was anticipated, and while I am not familiar with and did not follow the legislation closely enough to know just what was the intent of the framers of that provision, it does seem to me that under this decision more money is being paid out than was originally intended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I think under the circumstances and in view of the fact that the matter can be taken up in the conference committee between the Senate and the House and given the kind of consideration it merits I will feel compelled to make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, on that point of order I do not wish to argue at length, except to say that it seems to me that it would come within the provision of the Holman rule. It is intended to amend a section of the Post Office appropriation bill that increases the salary of the postal employees, and if the amendment were adopted it would have the effect to bring about a reduction in the expenditures of this particular item, and, I think, would come within the Holman rule. And it is germane because it relates to the particular expenditure under consideration at the present time.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think there is no question about the germaneness. But I do not see where it comes within the Holman rule. There is no reduction in the appropriation.

There appears to be no reduction in the number of persons that would fall within this class. As to whether or not it would effect a reduction on its face, I am unable to say. The gentlemen who have studied it, of course, can figure it out how it may effect a reduction. But the gentleman's amendment goes further than that. It provides that "hereafter" the tenth proviso of section 2 of the Post Office appropriation bill "shall read as follows," and so forth. That word "hereafter" used in that sense is pretty broad, and, I think, would make that provision permanent law.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. That would be explained in this way: Section 2 of the Post Office appropriation bill for 1920 only applies to the fiscal year 1920 and dies with the close of the year; and therefore the effect of this amendment, of course, could not have any further extent than the section itself.

Mr. GOOD. That would be true if the tenth proviso only carried an appropriation, but it does not carry an appropriation but regulates salaries, and it goes on to provide that "Hereafter it shall read as follows." And I rather supposed it was in the gentleman's mind that by putting it in in that form at least there could be a contention made that that was the law with regard to succeeding years.

Mr. BLACK. I think not, for this reason, that section 2 itself is temporary, and none of the salary increases that it makes are permanent, but they only apply to the fiscal year 1920; and, of course, amending the tenth proviso could not have possibly any further effect than for the fiscal year 1920.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. It is conceded that this is new legislation and that such is the purpose of it, so that if the amendment is in order it must be under section 2 of Rule XXI, known as the Holman rule. In order to bring itself within the provisions of the Holman rule, it having been offered by a Member from the floor, it must be germane to the subject matter of the bill and must retrench expenditures, either by reducing the number and salary of officers of the United States, by a reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by a reduction in the amount of money covered by the bill. It is difficult for the Chair to determine, in fact it would be a matter of conjecture so far as the Chair is concerned, whether the effect of the amendment would be a retrenchment of expenditures or not. At any rate, it does not appear upon the face of the amendment that it retrenches in either of the required ways. After hearing the gentlemen who know more about the Postal Service than the present occupant of the Chair, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], the Chair is still very much in doubt as to whether it will make any retrenchment whatever.

By permission of the committee the Chair submits two brief excerpts from rulings made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

On March 11, 1916, in construing the Holman rule, Chairman CRISP said:

The Chair does not believe that the opinion of some one that the amendment might reduce and the opinion of another that it might not is legitimate for the Chair to consider, but the Chair must determine from the amendment itself whether or not its natural consequence is to reduce expenditures.

Later on, the same day, when the same matter was offered in a different form, Chairman CRISP said:

The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment must show on its face that it does perform one of the functions required under the rule to make it in order.

Mr. BLACK. Will the Chair permit me to make one observation on that point?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I think the Chair will find that it will bring about a reduction in salary, and in this way: The section itself recites the increases that are given to assistant postmasters, which, as I have stated to the Chair, are $200 per annum where the annual salary does not exceed $2,200 per annum and 5 per cent increase where the salary exceeds $2,200 per annum. Now, after providing for that increase, the committee added the tenth proviso, which said that even after the assistant postmaster has received the increase he shall still receive a salary which shall not be less than that paid to the highest paid clerk or carrier in a second-class office.

Now, what was the effect of that? The effect of that was to guarantee that no assistant postmaster should receive a less salary than $1,500 at a second-class office. The comptroller has construed that. He has ruled that by reason of not adding the proviso which I have added here, viz, "including the increases provided herein," that the language of the original proviso must be construed to refer to the basic salary.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the comptroller say that?

Mr. BLACK. I am putting the language in my own way, but that is the effect of the comptroller's ruling. I do not have the text of his ruling here.

Mr. MADDEN. The comptroller did not say that, did he?

Mr. BLACK. He may not have used that exact language, but that is the effect of his ruling; and by adding, as I have added in this amendment, the words "including the increases herein provided," then the Chair is bound, in finding out whether the assistant postmaster's salary shall be equal to the highest paid employee, to include the increases that are provided in section 2, whereas under the present text of section 2 he does not have to include those increases.

The CHAIRMAN. The fact that the gentleman is offering this amendment as a Member of the House and not by order of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads limits the application of the Holman rule to a considerable extent. Even upon the able statement of the gentleman from Texas, the Chair does not yet think it clear that the amendment brings itself under the provisions of the Holman rule, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SNELL. I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I noticed in the Washington Post on Saturday and Sunday that the Post Office Department is sending out letters and conducting a propaganda in relation to the high cost of living. I would like to know upon what authority or from what appropriation such money and the time of those employees come, if the gentleman can tell me?

Mr. GOOD. I am not advised. There was no estimate for any deficiency that would require an additional appropriation because of such activity that I know of.

Mr. SNELL. But it must cost money to do that, must it not?

Mr. GOOD. They might have authority to do that under the authority given in the Post Office appropriation bill, which provides:

That to promote the conservation of food products and facilitate the collection and delivery thereof from producer to consumer and the delivery to producers of articles necessary in the production of such products the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to conduct experiments in the operation of motor-vehicle truck routes, to be selected by him—

And so forth.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman thinks under that he could send out letters and conduct a propaganda such as they are conducting at the present time?

Mr. GOOD. I know of no other provision in the Post Office appropriation bill which would enable him to do that.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I may say that the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, in endeavoring to ascertain whether or not the motor-truck service is a practical one, sent out a number of inquiries to farmers who live in the section of the country that is served by it. Now, whether or not that truck service is of the benefit that the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General thinks it is I am not prepared to say at this time, but I think undoubtedly the sending out of these inquiries and questionnaires is within the limit of the appropriation made for that purpose, and I do not see how it could be criticized. It occurs to me as a very proper thing to do in order to get information.

Mr. SNELL. One of the things they have discovered is that there is a shortage of farm labor. Is there anything new in that?

Mr. BLACK. I am not prepared to say that there is.

Mr. SNELL. The point I am driving at is this: Nearly every department of the Government is running some kind of propaganda and having news agencies to disseminate information about something or other that they are doing all the time. It seems to me there ought to be some way of stopping that.

Mr. BLACK. Congress authorized this appropriation for this truck service, and of course the amount appropriated was not exceeded, and is really a small amount, relatively, for that purpose; but, of course, as to whether it is wise or unwise, that is a matter of judgment.

Mr. SNELL. Do you think all of our departments should be running propaganda all the time on the high cost of living and everything else? Is not there any way of stopping it?

Mr. BLACK. I think a good deal of unnecessary printing is indulged in, but I do not think the Post Office Department can justly be accused on that ground. I believe it is doing less than almost any other department.

Mr. SNELL. My criticism was not made against that, but against the sending out of propaganda of every kind, name, and description.

Mr. BLACK. I do not think the gentleman can bring that accusation against the Post Office Department. So far as I know it gets out no bulletin or publication of that sort, and I think if the gentleman will watch the mail that comes to his office he will find that his charge does not lie against the Post Office Department.

Mr. SNELL. Is there any way of stopping it in the other departments?

Mr. BLACK. I am sure there is less from the Post Office Department than from any other. I agree with the gentleman that there is some from other departments that should be stopped.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me Congress should do something to stop all these printing presses running on propaganda all the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like unanimous consent to extend his ruling just made on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, by adding two or three brief extracts from two decisions made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For unusual conditions at post offices, $125,000.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I reserve a point of order. What does that item refer to—$125,000 for unusual conditions at post offices? What sort of a deficiency is that?

Mr. GOOD. That phrase refers to conditions such as prevail in some mining and oil fields, for example, where a town has sprung up almost overnight. A post office must be established, and a considerable expense is involved.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It would seem to be reasonable to have a fund of that sort on hand, but it is not contended that that is a deficiency, is it? None of the rulings that we have had would make that a deficiency.

Mr. GOOD. The Postmaster General asked for $150,000 for unusual conditions. Mr. Koons says:

That appropriation is used where the conditions are very unusual, such as now obtain in mining regions, oil regions, and in Alaska. It was also used for the Army camps during the war. We are using very little of it for Army camps now. The only reason for the deficiency in that appropriation is because of the oil fields in Texas and Wyoming, where unusual conditions exist, and we can not secure employees at the regular rates of compensation.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. According to that statement he does not even know that he will necessarily need this money.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; he does.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. He thinks it is likely to be needed, but he does not know that it will be.

Mr. GOOD. There is an actual deficiency in the appropriation. Mr. Koons says:

We have only $10,718, or that was the balance on January 10. Now, there may be a few quarterly allowances out, but the unexpended balance is $10,718. We are spending the greater part of this in Wyoming and Texas at this time, and I am afraid the demand will increase as new oil fields open up.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That statement supports my contention. He anticipates that as these oil fields are developed these demands will be made in connection with post offices.

Mr. GOOD. No. For instance——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is his statement.

Mr. GOOD. I call attention to the statement that the gross receipts for four quarters ending September 30, 1919, at Burkburnett, Tex., were $33,077, and at Ranger, Tex., $50,062. These were fourth-class post offices and they must have clerks.

Mr. BLANTON. They are first-class offices now.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. They have been provided for, have they not?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know as to the towns mentioned; but similar conditions are springing up all the time.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I merely wish to get at the facts. Is this $125,000 required for the payment of existing obligations that have arisen out of unusual supervening conditions?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. They had $250,000 this year, and they have expended it all except $10,000 in the first half of the year, and Mr. Koons says this will hardly be enough to take care of them.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Hardly enough to care for obligations already existing or for anticipated obligations?

Mr. GOOD. It is for clerk hire, for clerks already employed, doing work in certain post offices.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. These, then, are actual obligations growing out of unusual development in the oil and other fields?

Mr. GOOD. That is the statement of the Postmaster General.

Mr. BLANTON. This very office at Ranger, mentioned by the chairman of the committee, grew from a little town of about 200 or 300 people in a very short space of time to a city of between 25,000 and 30,000 people.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I understand that to be true.

Mr. BLANTON. And the patrons of the office have had to stand in line there three and four hours at a time to get their mail. It is to meet such conditions as that.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Not conditions likely to arise in the future, but conditions that have already arisen?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and the same way in my colleague's district.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. They have already arisen. That is all I want to know.

Mr. BLANTON. But the emergency still exists.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. You are not providing for any new fields likely to be developed?

Mr. GOOD. No. Just for unusual conditions that may arise and that have arisen.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing magnetic observations and to establish meridian lines in connection therewith in all parts of the United States; magnetic observations in other regions under the jurisdiction of the United States; purchase of additional magnetic instruments; lease of sites where necessary and erection of temporary magnetic building; continuing the line of exact levels between the Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf coasts; establishing lines of exact levels in Alaska; determination of geographical positions, by triangulation or traverse, for the control of Federal, State, boundary, and other surveys and engineering works in all parts of the interior of the United States and Alaska; determination of field astronomic positions; for continuing gravity observations; and including the employment in the field and office of such magnetic observers, at salaries not exceeding $2,200 per annum, as may be necessary, $47,100.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word. What is the reason for these several deficiency appropriations under the Coast and Geodetic Survey? Why can they not get along within the limits of appropriations which have been made?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know that I can answer that question. I only know that in presenting the matter before the committee it was apparent that they were not getting along; that unless the committee gave them an additional appropriation it would be necessary to discharge a great many of the men that they had trained in the service, to let them go because of a lack of appropriations. It would be necessary, as far as the coast surveys were concerned, to tie up their vessels and quit work, and then on July 1 lift anchor and begin to make their surveys again and complete their work.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suppose that very likely during the war a number of employees of this service were otherwise engaged?

Mr. GOOD. That is true of some of them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Whether the appropriation was reduced during that period I am not informed, but if there is any service of the Government which could restrict itself a little bit at this time it should be some of these surveying services.

If the Coast and Geodetic Survey did not do any work for 10 years it would be a loss scientifically and there might be some loss economically, but in the main the only loss would be that some men did not draw salaries for doing the work. If we are ever to have economy we have got to commence on these things which are not essential. If the Coast and Geodetic Survey can not live within its appropriation, what department of the Government can?

Mr. GOOD. I suppose there are but few departments of the Government where there is a greater demand now made upon it, because of activities undertaken during the war, than on the Coast and Geodetic Survey. The gentleman knows that we have appropriated and authorized over $3,000,000,000 for new ships. Col. Jones, the head of the service, tells us that there are great demands being made for charts and they have to perform this work.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. None of this money is appropriated for charts.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes; we have an appropriation for charts.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We have not reached it yet. You have appropriations for continuing magnetic observations, surveys and resurveys of coasts, and so forth.

Mr. GOOD. It comes under the head of office expenses. We cut these estimates over $100,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You ought to have cut them $300,000 or $250,000, anyhow. We can not keep up this sort of thing. The Coast and Geodetic Survey is a good service. It is mainly scientific. They do good work, but a good deal of it is useless. Very little of it is absolutely necessary to-morrow. If they can not keep within the appropriation made, who will endeavor to do it?

Mr. GOOD. If we refuse to give the appropriation that is necessary to be expended for charts, they might not be able to chart a rock which might send thousands of innocent people to the bottom of the deep, and the blame would be on Congress. Here we are embarking on a new enterprise; as the gentleman knows, we are building a merchant marine and extending it by leaps and bounds. We have increased appropriations in recent years, but the cost of the surveys has increased so that at the present time they are not getting as much service out of the appropriation as they did before the war.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We have been making these appropriations ever since I have been a Member of the House and long before. They will be making them 100 years from now; and yet the gentleman assumes that if they do not make an appropriation to discover something to-morrow the whole world will go to pot. They will be discovering these things 100 years from now, and they can not learn it all to-morrow.

Mr. GOOD. They claim that there are some parts of the sea that they have not charted, and other parts where, because of the ocean currents, there may be some change because of the movements of the sand, and they will have to continue the surveys.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman knows, because he is familiar with the subject, that most of these surveys are resurveys. When they make a survey, in a few years they will make a resurvey of the survey, and keep it up.

Mr. GOOD. I think a good deal of the money is being spent in the Northwest where they never have made any surveys.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, they can spend money by the millions on these surveys up in Alaska, surveying every little inlet, but I do not know why they should do it all at once. They can not finish it in the lifetime of the gentleman from Iowa, much less in mine.

The Clerk read as follows:

Vessels: For repairs and maintenance of the complement of vessels, including traveling expenses of persons inspecting the repairs, and exclusive of engineer's supplies and other ship chandlery, $22,370.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. What "complement of vessels" is referred to in that connection?

Mr. GOOD. That refers to the crew on the vessels.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It says "for repairs and maintenance of the complement of vessels."

Mr. GOOD. It has reference to all the vessels. There are about 14 vessels in the Coast Survey, including those turned over by the Navy. The Navy Department has some junk that it is trying to get rid of. They put some onto the Coast Guard, some onto this service, and some more that they want to repair and want ten or fifteen million dollars for that purpose.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It is rather an indefinite way of stating it—"repairs and maintenance of the complement of vessels."

Mr. GOOD. That is the language of the current appropriation.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. In what bill was the original appropriation for this purpose made?

Mr. GOOD. In the sundry civil bill $56,000 was carried for this year.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Has it been ascertained that the department can not by reasonable economy live within that appropriation? There is no actual deficiency in this instance, is there?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; there is. As I stated, they had $56,000, and about $10,000 remains for the rest of the year.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. So that there is no actual deficiency?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes. They have a great many men employed, and the actual deficiency is that if this money is not appropriated, of course they will have no money to pay their salaries, and then the work would have to stop.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Why did they go ahead so rapidly that they spent their money at too speedy a rate?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know. I am not responsible for the way the executives conduct the departments. I think they have all spent too much money. My recollection is that in this coast survey they have about 14 vessels, and they have a repair force. We appropriated $56,000 for the whole year. They have gone to work and expended a great deal more than they ought to have expended, and have only $10,000 left for the rest of the year.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am not criticizing the gentleman; I am standing with him. What I am trying to get at is, how is it that this department, spending apparently with such extravagance that it now has only $10,000 on hand, can come before this committee and secure this deficiency appropriation? Why not invite this department to live within its appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. We have been extending that invitation pretty generally to all of them.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Decline once to give them an additional appropriation, and they will be compelled to exercise economy.

Mr. GOOD. In this case that would necessitate the discharge of all of the men who are engaged in this repair work.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. This is for repairs and maintenance.

Mr. GOOD. Repairs can not be done without employing men.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Oh, no; but you need not discharge the men because you omit to repair the vessels. It seems to me that if for these particular functionaries the sundry civil appropriation bill made an appropriation which was calculated, according to the estimates then submitted, to be sufficient for the remainder of the year, or for the coming fiscal year, they ought to be able to show the Appropriations Committee, and through that committee the Committee of the Whole, that they have properly expended the amount of money that was originally turned over to them. If they desire more money, though they still have $10,000 on hand, what evidence have they submitted that in the exercise of reasonable economy they will not be able to live within that balance during the remainder of the year?

Mr. GOOD. They estimated for this service $25,370. The committee went over the matter very carefully. Here was a service that had $56,000. It is true that that is a little larger than it was back in 1914 and 1915, but the statement of Col. Jones was to the effect that it was costing more than twice as much to do the work. I assume that the contractors get for the same amount of work twice as much money as they did five or six years ago. I think the gentleman will concede that.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I understand that this appropriation was made somewhere about the middle of last year.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and I agree that they ought to have allotted this and stuck to their allotment, but they have not done it, and because the department fails to follow the law when it comes to a question of this kind and we find that here is a service which has no money, in view of the fact that they have not taken on a great lot of useless employees, whose efficiency was away down, what else can we do but appropriate? If they had done that, that would be a different question; but this is to maintain practically the force that they have had all of the time, and while they have had a little more money, it is not so much more, not enough to cover increased costs.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But the fact that a department does not follow the law furnishes no reason why we should uphold them in their contempt of that law. When this appropriation was originally made, was it then sufficient, in the judgment of the chairman?

Mr. GOOD. Of course, the chairman has nothing to do with the expenditure of this money. I have not been to any of the places where it was expended.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. When the department came before the gentleman's committee for the original appropriation of $56,000, from the evidence they submitted at the time, having reference to the future, and necessarily it was all prospective, was that amount deemed sufficient for the needs of the department, provided it exercised reasonable economy in its expenditure?

Mr. GOOD. But the gentleman will remember that I was not a member of the sundry civil subcommittee when the original item was framed and the hearing had. We did not have any supplementary hearing. We had no hearing on this item.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But the gentleman was chairman of the committee at that time?

Mr. GOOD. No; not last winter, when the hearings were had. We did not reopen the hearings on this provision but accepted the judgment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and the other members of the committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The chairman did not know what his committee was doing in this respect?

Mr. GOOD. I think I knew as much about what the committee was doing as the gentleman did when he was a member of the Committee on Appropriations and tried to accept the judgment of the other subcommittees.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Do I understand that the chairman accepted their judgment without verifying it by an examination of the record or evidence?

Mr. GOOD. We examined it to some extent.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Now according to the contention made here yesterday by the gentleman from Wyoming——

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman if he is satisfied this is too large that in the interest of economy I shall not oppose his offering an amendment to reduce it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I can not have any judgment about that until I secure the facts through the chairman of the committee. That is what I am trying to do.

Mr. GOOD. The hearings are available to the gentleman from Virginia, and he is a very good reader.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Not as available as to the chairman of the committee. If the chairman of the committee thinks this department has exercised reasonable discretion and prudence, in the expenditure of the original appropriation and needs this additional allowance——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman, by reason of this controversy between the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Virginia, what was the estimate submitted by the sundry civil bill under which $56,000 was allowed?

Mr. GOOD. Thirty-one thousand dollars. Then there was a supplement estimate of I can not tell the gentleman how much, but when the estimate was originally submitted it was submitted before the armistice was signed and on the theory that we would still be at war this year and some of the vessels were held by the Navy, were being repaired by the Navy, and then subsequently a considerably larger estimate was submitted.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Unquestionably there was a larger estimate submitted?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; at least equal to $56,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The point I am inquiring was simply to develop whether or not this deficiency was not due to the fact that they were not given enough money at the start?

Mr. GOOD. Of course, I could not state that, that was not developed at the hearing.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all necessary employees to man and equip the vessels, including professional seamen serving as mates on vessels of the survey, to execute the work of the survey herein provided for and authorized by law, $68,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. What authority of law is there for paying professional seamen serving as mates on vessels of the survey, and do I understand there is required from the 1st of January to July $68,000 for this particular purpose?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; they asked for $84,852.

Mr. WALSH. Well, we made an appropriation for these vessels for the whole year. Now it seems they are $68,000 short.

Mr. GOOD. Capt. Parker appeared before the committee with regard to this item and he said that the amount estimated was needed because the expenses have increased and the wages alone were twice what they were. He was asked if the number of vessels was about the same, and he said, "Yes; but the wages of those in the lowest grade are three times what they were in 1915." He was asked how much they paid, and he said, "We are paying the standard wage, the Shipping Board wage, which is recognized by the merchant service and below which it is not possible to hire labor."

If there is any department of the Government that is demoralizing wages, demoralizing the activities of the Government, so far as the hire of skilled workmen and mechanics is concerned, it is the Shipping Board. There seems to be no limit beyond which it will not go. They are bidding against the other departments of the Government, and some departments in endeavoring to get efficient men find that the Shipping Board is bidding against them and taking their men away.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is what I was about to ask the gentleman. They are bidding against the Navy, are they not?

Mr. GOOD. The Navy, the Coast Guard, the Lighthouse Service, and the Coast and Geodetic Survey. All of them have to compete with the Shipping Board, and a great deal of this expense of an additional appropriation is necessary because of the unbusinesslike and wasteful methods and lack of business management of the affairs of the Shipping Board. If they would get back to normal conditions and would pay a reasonable and fair wage, then the other departments of the Government would not have to go into competition with this concern that is employing so many men. The language to which the gentleman refers is the same language the item has carried for a number of years, and I assume that there is authority for it. I know of no law that fixes the rate of compensation of the employees. Capt. Parker has said that he is compelled to pay the wage that the Shipping Board pays for the same clerks, and I suppose the sky is the limit with them, as it is with the Shipping Board.

Mr. WALSH. How many vessels have they got?

Mr. GOOD. My recollection is they have 14 all told, but one of them is not in commission.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I renew the reservation in order to ask the chairman whether the reservation of the gentleman from Massachusetts was to the paragraph beginning on line 18 or the one beginning on line 22? I could not catch it.

Mr. WALSH. Beginning with line 18.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Very well. I withdraw the reservation, and I will reserve it to the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For making alterations to vessels transferred from the Navy Department, $20,500, to continue available during the fiscal year 1921.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. That is certainly out of order.

Mr. GOOD. I did not catch the gentleman.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That paragraph, beginning with line 22, is certainly out of order. It reads:

For making alterations to vessels transferred from the Navy Department, $20,500, to continue available during the fiscal year 1921.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Why is it out of order?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Because there is no evidence here to show that it will be necessary to run into the year 1921. That is going rather far ahead to show whether or not there is a deficiency.

Mr. GOOD. Of course, the last line would make it subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think the last line would make it subject to a point of order.

Mr. GOOD. This makes it available during the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This committee has jurisdiction to make appropriations for the Coast and Geodetic Survey. Ordinarily those appropriations come in the sundry civil appropriation act. A committee, such as the Committee on Naval Affairs, makes appropriations for the Navy, and the deficiencies can only be considered by the Appropriations Committee. This subject matter is wholly under control of the Committee on Appropriations. It has been ruled time and time again that while you can not put a provision in one of the ordinary appropriation bills as being immediately available, without making it subject to a point of order, in a bill coming from the Committee on Appropriations that provision is in order because the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction over deficiencies. Now, this bill, while it is entitled a bill for deficiencies, and for other purposes, the Committee on Appropriations, reporting a deficiency, having jurisdiction of the subject matter, may make it available for the next fiscal year. I can not cite the rulings on the subject, although I can remember a number of them.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, it is entirely competent for the Committee on Appropriations to report deficiencies in any bill, so far as that is concerned. The committee is not limited to reporting deficiencies in the deficiency appropriation bills, but that does not mean that anything can be put in a deficiency appropriation bill that properly belongs to other bills. This is an appropriation bill providing for deficiencies arising or likely to arise in this fiscal year. We are dealing with deficiencies. But the pending item is a proposition to provide first a deficiency appropriation for the balance of this fiscal year and then, going beyond the same, to extend the appropriation through the fiscal year 1921. It is certainly opening up a new view of deficiency appropriations to undertake to say that such an appropriation can be continued during the next one or two fiscal years.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is a question of the authority of the committee to report it. The Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction over this subject matter and reported this item in a bill that is called a deficiency bill "to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes." The committee has jurisdiction to report an item relating to this subject matter in some appropriation bill. Ordinarily for the next fiscal year it will be carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill. But it has jurisdiction of the subject matter, unless I am very much mistaken.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It has jurisdiction, Mr. Chairman, to deal with this subject matter in an appropriate bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Virginia assumes that it is within the limit of making a deficiency for this fiscal year. That is not correct at all. This is not the limitation on the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I think my contention is correct. I would like to see some one of the alleged numerous decisions holding otherwise.

What is the deficiency which the committee is undertaking to deal with? This department, which has had an appropriation for this fiscal year, in substance said to the committee, "I can not live within the appropriation already made; I can not carry on my work to the termination of this year with the funds appropriated for that purpose." The committee can provide for this deficiency, but it can not exercise in this bill the jurisdiction of the sundry civil bill or the legislative bill and provide for the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is the same committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes; that is true; but in a deficiency bill it can not encroach upon the jurisdiction of the sundry civil bill or the legislative bill. This bill is dealing with deficiencies, and is limited to deficiencies. It is supplementing appropriations made in the other bills which, for the period for which they were made, have proved to be insufficient. The committee in this bill undertakes to supply those deficiencies, but it can not, after doing this, proceed to make an appropriation properly belonging to one of the other committees.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly not. But the trouble with the gentleman's contention here is that the Committee on Appropriations does have jurisdiction over the legislative and sundry civil bills.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. We are now dealing with the deficiency bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We are dealing with the authority of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. We are dealing with the matter proper to be reported in a deficiency bill and the limit of jurisdiction of such a bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman can find any special limits, I do not know where he will find them. The Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction over certain subjects. That committee can report appropriations relating to those subjects. Now, as to appropriations coming within the jurisdiction of other committees, the Committee on Appropriations can report nothing except a deficiency in those matters which relate to other committees, like the Committee on Naval Affairs or the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Agriculture. They can report only as to deficiencies on matters which belong to those other committees. But in this case the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations is coextensive with the subject. They are not confined to the reporting of deficiencies, and if they choose, in reporting a deficiency bill, to make an item over which they have jurisdiction good for the next fiscal year, that is a matter properly before the House, because it is within their jurisdiction.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, permit me to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois and the Chair to one precedent which would seem to be precisely opposed to the contention that the gentleman from Illinois is making.

This is a ruling to be found in volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents, sustaining a point of order made by Mr. CANNON, of Illinois:

Appropriations for continuation of work on a public building, and not intended to supply any actual deficiency, belong to the sundry civil bill, not the general deficiency.

If that does not fit this situation, I do not see how a precedent can be found that would do so. If this provision to carry this appropriation into the next fiscal year belongs to the sundry civil bill, then it certainly has no place here.

The CHAIRMAN. On what page is that?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is on page 373, section 3562:

Appropriations for the continuation of work on a public building, and not intended to supply any actual deficiency, belong to the sundry civil bill, not the general deficiency.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have no doubt that question arose on an amendment offered by a Member from the floor of the House.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It was offered by a Member in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; from the floor, and it was clearly out of order.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If that amendment was clearly out of order it was on the ground that the matter proposed by the amendment did not belong to the jurisdiction of that prescribed for the deficiency bill. In fact the ruling expressly says that an item of the character proposed belonged to the sundry civil bill. If it had been competent for the committee to report the item, as a matter of jurisdiction in the bill, then it could have been added by amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Virginia will look at page 374, at the latter part of the quotation from the ruling, he will find that it refers to the very matter suggested.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What is that?

The CHAIRMAN (reading)—

The right of individuals upon their own responsibility to offer amendments to appropriation bills has been very much restricted by the third clause of Rule XXI of the new rules. Without commenting upon that clause, the Chair holds that the amendment is not in order, coming from an individual Member of the House and not from a committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes; but that does not apply to this situation. The ruling holds that an appropriation for the continuation of work on a public building, and not intended to supply any actual deficiency, belongs to the sundry civil bill, and not to the general deficiency. All I have to say, Mr. Chairman, is that this is a general deficiency bill, and the item not only provides for a deficiency, but undertakes to provide for a continuation of this work with this fund during the fiscal year 1920. This fund is sought to be projected into that year. If this is thought to be desirable the committee can make a provision to that effect in the sundry civil bill, soon to be reported. I submit that by this precedent this item so far as it provides for the fiscal year 1920 plainly belong to the sundry civil bill and not the general deficiency bill. Hence it is not now in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] makes the point of order that the paragraph is not in order because of the fact that it makes available an appropriation during the fiscal year 1921.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, these rulings by the present occupant of the Chair are of such great importance and interest to all of us who want to learn parliamentary law that I think we ought to have more Members here, and I make the point of no quorum present.

Mr. GOOD. I will ask the gentleman to withhold that. We are just about through with this subject, and when we finish it I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman and myself have been here a good long time to-day.

Mr. GOOD. I know, but I am willing to stay longer, and I know the gentleman is a hard-working man and is willing to do the same thing.

Mr. BLANTON. But I would like to have a little company. I am getting lonesome.

Mr. GOOD. I will ask the gentleman to withhold his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point that there is no quorum present. We can finish this bill to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order that no quorum is present. The Chair will count.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the second deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 12046) had come to no resolution thereon.

RATIFICATION OF WOMAN SUFFRAGE AMENDMENT BY WYOMING.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the governor of the State of Wyoming announcing the ratification by the legislature of that State of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending right of suffrage to women.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8953. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Ketchikan, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction and equipment of schools therein, and for other purposes;

H. R. 5348. An act for the relief of Mrs. Thomas McGovern; and

H. R. 10701. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Whiteville Lumber Co., Goldsboro, N. C., to construct a bridge across the Waccamaw River at or near Old Dock, county of Columbus, N. C.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LONERGAN, for one day, on account of important business.

To Mr. WINGO, for one day, on account of illness.

To Mr. AYRES, indefinitely, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 3, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Customs Service for enforcing the provisions of law governing the importation and exportation of intoxicating liquors, fiscal year 1921 (H. SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 3, 1920.

(Legislative day of Monday, February 2, 1920.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon, on the expiration of the recess.

SOUTHERN LIVE-STOCK PRICES (S. DOC. NO. 209).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting, in response to a resolution of July 25, 1919, the report of the Federal Trade Commission on southern live-stock prices, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON GAS LIGHT CO. (S. DOC. NO. 208).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Washington Gas Light Co. for the year ended December 31, 1919, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3452) authorizing the city of Detroit, Mich., a municipal corporation, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the American Channel of the Detroit River to Belle Isle.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3327) granting certain rights of way and exchanges of the same across the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, in the State of Utah, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9112) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan Army rifles to posts of the American Legion.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9065) to amend sections 3, 8, 10, 12, 20, and 21 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PLATT, Mr. MCFADDEN, and Mr. PHELAN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 3371) authorizing Gordon N. Peay, jr., his heirs and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge and approaches thereto across the White River, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PARKER, Mr. SWEET, and Mr. RAYBURN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11368) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes; agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate, and had appointed Mr. SNYDER, Mr. ELSTON, and Mr. CARTER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 10207. An act providing for service of process in causes removed from a State or other court to a United States court; and

H. R. 10432. An act to provide for the exchange of Government lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 3418. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the lading or unlading of vessels at night, the preliminary entry of vessels, and for other purposes," approved February 13, 1911;

H. R. 5348. An act for the relief of Mrs. Thomas McGovern;

H. R. 8953. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Ketchikan, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction and equipment of schools therein, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 10701. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Whiteville Lumber Co., Goldsboro, N. C., to construct a bridge across the Waccamaw River at or near Old Dock, county of Columbus, N. C.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a certified copy of joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, ratifying the Susan B. Anthony amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women, which will be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAPPER presented resolutions adopted at the fifty-fifth annual convention of the National Wool Growers' Association held at Salt Lake City, Utah, and of the New Jersey Retail Clothiers' Association, favoring the passage of the so-called pure-fabric bill, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Rice County, Kans., remonstrating against compulsory military training, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Fortnightly Club, of Topeka, Kans., praying for universal military training, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented petitions of McPherson Post, No. 4, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Independence; of Lebanon Post, No. 240, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Lebanon; and of Siverd Post, No. 85, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Winfield, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the so-called Fuller pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

H. R. 10432. An act to provide for the exchange of Government lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

PAY OF ARMY, NAVY, MARINE CORPS, ETC.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3383) to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Public Health Service.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Hale	McKellar	Smoot
Brandegee	Harrison	McLean	Sterling
Calder	Henderson	Moses	Townsend
Capper	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Trammell
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Page	Wadsworth
Culberson	Kellogg	Phipps	Warren
Curtis	King	Pomerene	Watson
Dillingham	Lodge	Sheppard
Elkins	McCormick	Sherman
Fernald	McCumber	Smith, Ga.

Mr. MOSES. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. KEYES] on account of illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. Call the roll again.

The roll of absent Senators was called, and Mr. HARDING, Mr. HARRIS, Mr. JONES of New Mexico, Mr. KIRBY, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. NUGENT, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. RANSDELL, and Mr. SPENCER answered to their names when called.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. GERRY, Mr. GRONNA, and Mr. SMITH of Maryland entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family.

The senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], and the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] are detained from the Senate by illness.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are absent on public business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] is detained from the Senate by illness.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] are absent on business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1, line 9, the committee proposes to strike out "50 per cent" and to insert—

20 per cent: Provided, That such increase shall not apply to enlisted men whose initial pay, if it has already been permanently increased since April 6, 1917, is now less than $33 per month.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1, line 9, before the words "per cent," strike out "20" and insert "31," and strike out the proviso.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proviso is not in the bill. You can not move to strike out an amendment that is not in.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I was seeking to perfect the committee amendment. I thought that might be done by offering an amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. You can offer an amendment to the amendment; but the Chair understands that the Senator is proposing to strike out the proviso, which is not in the bill.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I have been absent from the Chamber for several days, and I am not sure of the parliamentary status. I thought that, as a matter of parliamentary procedure, an amendment might be amended by offering to strike out and in lieu thereof to insert, and I thought an amendment could be perfected also by striking out a part of a proposed amendment, as by inserting something.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; it is all right, as the Chair now sees it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I very much appreciate the fact that the distinguished chairman and other Senators interested in the pending bill have been kind enough to let it go over for a few days on account of my absence from the Senate, due to illness, because I really feel very much interested in the matter of trying to adjust the increase which is proposed between the pay of officers and enlisted men.

One week ago to-day I offered one or two amendments having in view the same purpose which is sought by the amendment which I have offered to-day. It has been disclosed in discussion here that the pending bill carries with it an increase of about 31 per cent to all of the officers of the Army and Navy, and that in its present form it carries with it an increase of 20 per cent to only a small part of the enlisted personnel of the Army and the Navy.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me for a question?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Florida when the pay of the enlisted personnel was increased from $15 a month to $30 or $33 a month what increase did the officers get?

Mr. TRAMMELL. At that time they did not get any increase; but I submit that the fact that a private was serving his country for practically nothing and the Government penalized him for a long time by requiring him to serve for $13 or $15 a month should fix no standard by which the question of raising his pay should be governed in this bill, which is supposed to provide for increasing the salaries of both officers and privates. I submit that the same conditions in regard to the high cost of living and the same conditions as to the expenditures required for the individual man confront the private as confront the officer. I do not mean that the officer does not have greater expenses and greater responsibilities and greater demands upon him, but that in considering the question of the pay of privates there should also be considered those elements which cause the suggestion of an increase in the pay of the officers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Utah spoke of the increase in the pay of privates; but that was during the war, when the privates were conscripted into the Army; and, it seems to me, it ought not to be taken into account here. I think the pay of the privates should be increased by the same percentage as the pay of the officers is increased, and that it would be outrageous if we did not do so.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, that is the point. My position is that there is no justice, no fairness, and no equity in increasing the salary of the officers at the present rate by 31 per cent and not also increasing the salary of the enlisted men of the Army and the Navy by the same percentage. Take the present cost of living, the present demands upon an officer or upon a private of the Army or the Navy, and consider the salaries of the two; which appeals more, from a standpoint of justice, for an increase? Take the private who gets $30 a month. It is true that he gets his suit of clothes and his provisions, and then he gets a small pittance of $30 a month. Take the officer, beginning with the lieutenant, and he receives a salary, with allowances, at the present time of about $2,500 a year; the captain, with his present allowances, receives a salary of about $3,200 or $3,300 a year; a major, with his allowances, receives a salary of from $3,800 to $4,000 a year; a lieutenant colonel receives probably as much as $4,600; and yet it is contended that these officers who are receiving salaries of from $2,500 to $6,000 or $8,000 a year should have their present salary increased by 31 per cent, and that as to the poor enlisted men, who are only getting $30 a month, 48 per cent of them should not receive any increases whatever, and those who do get any increase should only receive an increase on the basis of 20 per cent. I can not understand the justice of dealing with the situation in that way.

Of course, there is some talk about the condition of the Treasury. If the Treasury will only stand an expenditure of a certain amount of money for salary increases, why confine the salary increase to officers? Why not equalize conditions, and if it becomes necessary to do justice by the enlisted men, cut down the percentage, and give the enlisted men and the officers the same percentage of increase, making that percentage what the Treasury will stand? When it comes to dealing with the enlisted man, who had to sacrifice during the war at $30 per month, who had to go into the positions of danger and of hazard, and many of whom had to sacrifice their lives, do not say to them, when it comes to the question of giving them an increase of salary, "We have got to safeguard the Treasury," but when it comes to dealing with officers' salaries and increasing the salaries of officers, receiving from $2,500 a year up, say, "We have rather a prosperous Government; we have sufficient funds to increase your salaries 31 per cent." I can not see the logic of that; I can not see its justice or equity. Why that contention should be used against the enlisted man and not be used against the officers I can not understand.

What I desire, Mr. President, is to put them all upon an equal footing; to do justice by the officer; to accord him equity; to give him recognition for his services; and also to give the same consideration to the enlisted man. I am unalterably opposed to picking out 48 per cent of the Army that is the poorest paid and saying to that 48 per cent, "We do not propose to give you an increase of salary at all, although this Government is able and is willing to increase the salary of a major, who is already getting about $4,000 a year, $1,200 a year more, by giving him $100 a month more, and yet we are not willing to increase the pay of enlisted men on a basis of 30 per cent, which would amount to about $9 a month." No objection is made by the friends of the Treasury to giving an officer receiving $4,000 a year an increase of $100 a month in his salary—and the increase grows heavier as the salaries become larger—but when it comes to dealing with the private, who is only getting $30 a month, all at once it becomes so essential to protect the Treasury of the country that it is said we can not give him an increase of $9 a month.

Mr. President, I appreciate and respect the officers. A great many of them performed very commendable service. Many of them are worth what they are receiving; while, on the other hand, many of them are not worth what they are being paid. There are a great many officers in the American Army to-day, so far as that is concerned, who are drawing considerably more salary than they could draw in private life. That is not true as to all of them. There are others who could do better in private life probably than they are doing in the public service. I have no regret in connection with giving a reasonable increase to those who are entitled to it—and we have got to deal with all alike; we have got to deal with the officer who goes ahead and does his duty and performs commendable service and fix a salary based upon that class of officers, instead of the class of officers who are serving in some of the departments, some of them drawing major's salaries and lieutenant colonel's salaries, and doing nothing except what might be called clerical work that a civilian employee would only get $100 or $125 a month for doing. I have been impressed with the fact that we have had too many officers around Washington drawing big salaries who are doing little else than clerical work; yet in order to provide for those who merit an increase it is necessary to treat all alike. It is not a matter of contending against the officers, for I respect and esteem those who have done their duty; but it is a matter of appealing, as I see the matter, for justice for the enlisted man. That is why I have offered the amendment, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, following the logic of the Senator from Florida, there is absolutely no reason why we should not increase the enlisted men's salaries and make them the same as the salaries received by the commissioned personnel of the Army. Why not do that? Why not give the enlisted men, 200,000 or, possibly, 250,000 of them, exactly the same salaries that are given the highest-paid commissioned officer in the United States Army? It will be found, Mr. President, that the Senators who are insisting so strenuously upon increasing the enlisted man's salary will be denouncing anything that looks like universal military training, because it costs so much, and, besides, tends to militarism and the Prussianizing of the American Army.

If you should search the legislative history of the country over, you could not find a better way to create militarism in this country than by raising the salary of the enlisted personnel to such a figure that everybody would want to go into the Army. The work would be easier than in the industries or on the farm, and the pay better.

I have always opposed these increases. I opposed the increase when the national-defense act of 1916 was up for consideration. The proposal does not recognize that any duty at all devolves upon the young men of the country to serve their country in their country's need without payment of a large compensation therefor. The men who go into the Army in times of peace go in because they like the Army, or for physical training, or for the education it affords, or in many cases in times of peace many of them are ne'er-do-wells, who go into the Army in order to find a place to earn a living easily and a place to rest, and not because they have any particular love of country. In times of war, however, conditions are different. Young men go into the Army not so much because they love the Army or for a life of ease but because they love their country. They do not go into it for pay at all, and I venture to say that 90 per cent of the young men who went into the service with the American Expeditionary Forces would have gone into it without any pay whatsoever but simply because they wanted to serve their country.

Mr. President, it will absolutely bankrupt this country to undertake to increase the pay of the enlisted personnel proportionately to the increase in the pay of the commissioned personnel of the Army. As a matter of fact, the young men who go into the service in times of peace go into the service because they like the service, and they go in and serve only three or four years and then go out. They do not intend in many instances to make it a profession. The commissioned officer is trained at the expense of the Government in the great majority of cases, and he goes in to make it his business and his profession, and he marries and raises a family, and he is bound to maintain them conformably to his station in life. The enlisted man goes in and goes out, and practically none of them, except those who become noncommissioned officers, ever marry or raise families. The noncommissioned officers are professional soldiers. They are the backbone of the Army. They are the training force of the Army, and provision is made in this bill for increasing their pay.

I think it would be a very great mistake to undertake to increase the pay of the enlisted men; and I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that these young men who go into the Army as volunteers in peace times at the ages of 15 to 25 make more money than many of the clerks who are working in Washington at $125 to $150 per month. They do not have any rent to pay; they do not have any clothing bill to pay; they do not have any board bill to pay; and they come out at the end of the month and every dollar of the $30 that they get is simply that much money saved. On the other hand, we know from discussions here in the Senate and we know from the evidence that has been adduced before the committees that young men and young women who are working here for $125 to $150 a month do not have anything left at the end of the month because they have to pay high prices for everything they have. The Government of the United States takes care of these young men, and, in addition to that, they are furnished under the law now an education if they see fit to acquire an education.

A few days ago it fell to my lot to visit Camp Holabird, in Maryland, where they have about 1,000 young men who went into the service voluntarily in order to learn some trade. They start in at the very base of manual training, and they go through to a point where they can absolutely take an automobile from the ground and manufacture one, with the result that after one year's service in this industrial-training school they are furnished positions in the automobile factories of the country, the officers over there tell me, at salaries ranging from $40 to $60 a week. They are trained mechanics. They understand the automobile in every part. They have specialized in the carbureter system, or in the motor system, or in the ignition system, or some other part of an automobile. They can specialize as well as become proficient in the whole of the automobile parts; and so it is that these young men who go into the Army under this volunteer system will have the benefit of the Government's training by expert teachers, and they go out not only better men from a disciplinary standpoint and from a physical standpoint, but they go out with their hands, their eyes, and their brains trained to occupy a place in life that will entitle them to receive better salaries.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield for just a moment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. I notice that this bill carries with it an increase in the pay of all enlisted men and members of the female Nurse Corps of the Army. How many female nurses are there now in the Army?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know what the Nurse Corps is now. It was very large during the war, but it has been gradually reduced. They did not have as many as they wanted during the war.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask what is the salary of a nurse?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is a bill pending now to give them the relative rank of a lieutenant. That would make the salary about $125 a month.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the Senator is mistaken, in that that provision which is carried in the Army reorganization bill would give the nurses the pay and allowances of officers, but not the assimilated rank.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; I believe that is right.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the pay of the nurses runs from $60 to $100 a month. I am not certain, however.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask how many nurses there are in the Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not remember how many there are. I can ascertain the number in a short time.

Mr. HARRISON. Did they receive more money while they were abroad than they get in this country?
